The southern coastal section of Alaska contains large and readily accessible timber resources which maintain a considerable sawmill industry and are capable of supporting an immense pulp and paper development. This timber is largely included in two National Forests aggregating 21,345,925 acres and officially estimated to contain 84,760 million board feet of timber, 74 per cent. western hemlock and 20 per cent. Sitka spruce.

HAWAII.

The Hawaiian Islands lie in the North Pacific Ocean, between 18° 54' and 22° 15' north latitude, and 154° 50' and 160° 30' west longitude. They are about 2,020 miles south-west of San Francisco, and are in the line of steamer travel between San Francisco and the Orient, Victoria, B.C., Australia and New Zealand.

Government.—The Hawaiian Islands (formerly known as the Sandwich Islands), celebrated in August, 1928, the 150th anniversary of their discovery by Captain James Cook, the English navigator. The islands formed during the greater part of the nineteenth century an independent kingdom, but in 1893 the reigning Queen, Liliuokalani (died November 11, 1917), was deposed and a provisional government formed; in 1894, a Republic was proclaimed, and in accordance with the request of the people of Hawaii expressed through the Legislature of the Republic, and a resolution of the United States Congress of July 6, 1898 (signed July 7 by President McKinley), the Islands were on August 12, 1898, formally annexed to the United States. On June 14, 1900, they were constituted as the Territory of Hawaii. The Organic Act has since been amended several times. There is a Legislature of two Houses, a Senate of 15 members elected for four years, and a House of Representatives of 30 members elected for two years.

Sessions, limited to 60 days, are held biennially. In 1930 the registered voters numbered 52,127, including 19,858 Hawaiian and part Hawaiian, and 10,244 American. The Governor and Secretary are appointed for four years by the President of the United States.

Governor.—Lawrence M. Judd, 1929–1933.

PORTO RICO.

Government.—Porto Rico, by the treaty of December 10, 1898 (ratified April 11, 1899), was ceded by Spain to the United States. Its constitution is determined by the 'Organic Act' of Congress (1917), known as the 'Jones Act.' Porto Rico has representative government, the franchise being restricted to citizens twenty-one years of age or over, residence (one year) and such additional qualifications as may be prescribed by the Legislature of Porto Rico, but no property qualification may be imposed. The executive power resides in a Governor appointed by the President of the United States. The legislative functions are vested in a Senate, composed of 19 members (2 from each of the 7 senatorial districts and 5 senators at large), and the House of Representatives, composed of 39 members (1 from each of the 35 representative districts and 4 elected at large). Porto Rico is represented in Congress by a Resident Commissioner to the United States elected by the people for a term of four years.

There are seven heads of departments, who form a Council to the Governor, known as the Executive Council. The judiciary comprises an Attorney General and staff and a United States court appointed by the President; a Supreme Court of 5 members also appointed by the President; 8 District Courts with 11 Judges appointed by the Governor; and 36 municipal courts, the judges and officials of which, as well as the 56 justices of the peace, are appointed by the Governor.

VIRGIN ISLANDS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Government.—The Virgin Islands of the United States, formerly known as the Danish West Indies, were purchased by the United States from Denmark, for 25,000,000 dollars, in a treaty ratified by both nations and proclaimed January 25, 1917. Under an Act of Congress, approved March 3, 1917, known as the Organic Act, all military, civil, and judicial powers were vested in a Governor, appointed by the President of the United States, with the advice of the Senate; the Danish code of laws, dated April 6, 1906 (along with Tax and Customs laws) was continued in effect except where incompatible with the new sovereignty. Danish citizens residing in the islands were permitted to declare their Danish citizenship before a court of record; failing to do that, they were held to have accepted citizenship in the United States. On February 25, 1927, full American citizenship was granted to the natives. St. Thomas is the capital.

The islands comprise two municipalities, viz.: the Municipality of St. Thomas and St. John, and the Municipality of St. Croix. The legislative functions are vested in the Colonial Council of each Municipality, that of St. Croix being composed of 13 members elected by popular elections and of 5 members appointed by the Governor; and that of St. Thomas and St. John consisting of 11 elected members and 4 appointed by the Governor. The members serve for 4 years. The franchise is vested in every man of unblemished character who has resided in the islands for 5 years, who has attained the age of 25 years, and has an income of at least 1,500 francs a year. The Government is now strictly civil, having been transferred in 1931 from the U. S. Navy Department to the Department of the Interior.

There are six heads of Departments, who form the Governor's cabinet. There is one Judge of the District Court for the Virgin Islands, and four Police Courts, presided over by magistrates.

Governor.—Paul M. Pearson.

Government Secretary.—Boyd J. Brown.

Area, Population and Education.—The Virgin Islands group, lying about 60 miles due east of Porto Rico, between the Atlantic Ocean and Caribbean Sea, comprises the Islands of St. Thomas (32 square miles), St. Croix (82 square miles), St. John (19 square miles), and about 50 small islets or keys, mostly uninhabited and unnamed. The total area of the three principal islands is 133 square miles.

The population, according to the census of April 1, 1930, is 22,012, compared with 26,051 in 1917, a decrease of 4,039 or 15·5 per cent. Population has slowly declined since 1835 when it stood at 43,178. Lack of employment has caused persistent emigration. Of the present total, 61·3 per cent. is urban; 9·1 per cent. is white, 78·3 per cent. Negro and 12·4 per cent. mixed; 16·1 per cent. are illiterates. The populations of each of the islands are 9,834, 11,413, and 765. The islands contain 3 towns, St. Thomas (formerly Charlotte Amalie), on the island of St. Thomas, with a population of 7,036; and Christiansted and Frederiksted, on the island of St. Croix, with populations of 3,767 and 2,698 respectively. Education is compulsory. In St. Thomas there are 9 public and 5 private and parochial schools, 1,883 pupils and 54 teachers; and in St. John there are 5 public schools with an enrolment of 164 pupils and 9 teachers. In St. Croix there are 9 public schools and 6 private and parochial schools; total enrolment, 2,091 with 50 teachers. There are churches of the Protestant, Roman Catholic, and Jewish faiths in St. Thomas and St. Croix.

Finance.—Revenues are derived from customs, export tax on sugar, income tax, real and personal property tax, trade tax, pilotage charges, &c. Estimated revenue for fiscal year ending June 30, 1932: 1,171,995 francs. Expenditures are estimated at 4,749,897 francs (1 franc = 19½ cents, U.S.). The annual deficit in the operation of the government is met by appropriations by the Congress of the United States.

Production and Industry.—The census of 1930 shows 193 farms in St. Croix, 55 in St. Thomas and 81 in St. John, a total of 329. St. Thomas is the leading port in the Virgin Islands with coaling and oil-fuelling stations. The Island of St. John is noted for its bay oil, extracted from the leaves of the bay tree, and St. Thomas for the finished product of bay rum. Exports in 1930, 124,000 gallons compared with the average annual export, 1920–29, of 82,000 gallons. St. Croix is the largest and most fertile of the islands, and its industries are mainly sugar cane (at present languishing) and cattle-raising. A plant for manufacturing industrial alcohol has recently been erected there; output, 1930, 98,834 gallons.

Exports to the United States in the calendar year 1930 were 768,342 dollars; imports from the United States, 1,672,903 dollars. Exports to United Kingdom (Board of Trade figures) for 1931, £200; imports from United Kingdom, £10,688.

Communication.—The Bermuda and West Indies Steamship Co., Ltd., and the Munson Line maintain regular semi-monthly passenger and freight services from New York to St. Thomas, St. Croix and lower islands. The Ocean Dominion Steamship Co. operates a monthly service from New York to St. Thomas, St. Croix and Leeward Islands. Several companies operate regular service from New York to San Juan, Porto Rico, whence frequent steamer service may be had to ports in the Virgin Islands. There is a weekly air-mail service with Continental United States. There is a powerful radio station at St. Thomas and cable offices in St. Thomas and St. Croix.

Money and Banking.—The official money of the islands is that issued by the National Bank of the Danish West Indies, the official unit being the franc valued at 19½ cents United States money. United States currency is acceptable anywhere on the islands, the dollar being worth 1.04 dollars in Danish West Indian currency. United States money will be legal tender in 1934, at which time the charter of the National Bank of the Danish West Indies expires. The bank has its head office in St. Thomas, with a branch in Christiansted and one in Frederiksted.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

These islands, ceded by Spain to the United States by the treaty of peace concluded between the United States and Spain on April 11, 1899, form the largest island group of the Malay Archipelago, and extend almost due north and south from Formosa to Borneo and the Moluccas, embracing an extent of 16° of latitude and 9° of longitude.

Governor-General.—Theodore Roosevelt, appointed January 20, 1932.

Government.—The Governor-General is appointed by the President of the United States, with the consent of the Senate. Under him are the secretaries of six executive departments, who, with the exception of the Vice-Governor (appointed by the President) who acts as Secretary of Public Instruction, must all be Filipinos. Members of the cabinet may appear before the legislature and speak on matters pertaining to their departments. The Governor-General may veto any Bill containing an appropriation; if passed again over his veto, the bill goes to the President of the United States for final action. The United States Congress has power to annul any Act of the Legislature, but has never exercised it.

The legislature consists of the Senate (24 members) and the House of Representatives (with 94 members). All are elected by popular vote, with the exception of nine representatives and two senators, who are appointed by the Governor-General to represent certain districts. Suffrage is enjoyed by all males 21 years of age or older who formerly exercised the right or, failing that, have property of at least 500 pesos value, and can read or write Spanish, English, or a native language. Registered voters number about 1,140,000.

A Council of State, created by Executive Orders in 1918 and 1928, forms the connecting link between the executive and the legislative branches. It is composed of the Governor-General, as President, the Presidents of both houses of the Legislature, the leaders of the majority parties in both houses and the six Secretaries of the Departments. Its purpose is to advise the Governor-General on such matters of public policy as he may lay before it.

The provincial and municipal governments are supervised by the Department of the Interior through the Executive Bureau and the Bureau of Non-Christian Tribes, the latter exercising authority over nine special provinces. Each province has a provincial governor. He and two other members form the provincial board, which constitutes the legislative branch. All three offices are usually filled by popular vote, though in certain provinces the provincial governors are appointed and the third members of the provincial boards are elected by the executives of the municipal units. Each town or municipality has a president and a municipal council of from four to eight councillors, depending upon the annual income of the municipality. The president, the vice-president and the councillors are all elected by popular vote except in some municipalities of the special provinces where the presidents are appointed. On December 31, 1928, there were 494 Americans and 19,606 Filipinos in Government service.

Area and Population.—The group is composed of 7,083 islands and islets, of which only 466 have areas of one square mile or over. Total area, 114,400 square miles. The eleven most important islands are Luzon, with an area of 40,814 square miles; Mindanao, 36,906 square miles; Samar, 5,124 square miles; Negros, 4,903 square miles; Palawan, 4,500 square miles; Panay, 4,448 square miles; Mindoro, 3,794 square miles; Leyte, 2,799 square miles; Cebu, 1,695 square miles; Bohol, 1,534 square miles; and Masbate, 1,255 square miles.

The total population was estimated in 1929 at 12,082,366 and in 1930 at 12,204,100 or 111 per square mile. Philippine Census of 1918 gave 10,314,310, chiefly of Malay race, 91 per cent. of whom are Christians, and only 932,953, or 9 per cent., are Moros and Pagans, though these are fast taking advantage of the all-pervading system of public schools. About 1,500,000 have some knowledge of English and about 660,000 some knowledge of Spanish; for Government and commercial purposes these two languages are used. The population of Manila, the capital and the leading commercial and industrial centre, is estimated at 324,522.

Other towns with their estimated present population, including suburbs, are: Iloilo on Panay, 67,143; Cebu on Cebu, 86,152; Legaspi (formerly Albay), 33,048; Laoag, 40,879; Vigan, 19,939; Naga, 9,468 (all on Luzon); and Zamboanga on Mindanao, 47,802. Baguio, in the Mountain Province, is the summer capital, corresponding to Simla in India, and has a population of 8,449.

Justice and Defence.—The judiciary consists of a supreme court, with a chief justice (a Filipino) and eight associate justices (three Filipinos); 28 judicial districts, each with a judge of first instance, except eight districts which have 2 judges each, and one, covering the city of Manila, which has six judges. In addition there are twenty-five auxiliary judges of first instance. There are justices of the peace for the various municipalities and municipal districts. Manila has a municipal court of 3 judges. The Bureau of Justice is headed by the Attorney-General, aided by the Solicitor-General and assistants; under the Bureau is a fiscal or prosecuting attorney for each province.

Public order is maintained through the municipal police and the Philippine Constabulary, latter consisting of 398 officers (28 Americans) and 6,331 enlisted men, distributed at 157 stations throughout the Archipelago. Expenditures on the Constabulary totalled 2,583,590 dollars in 1928. The United States maintains a force of about 11,000 troops of the United States Army, including 6 regiments of Filipino soldiers.

Religion.—The dominant religion of the islands is the Roman Catholic (8,823,163 adherents). In 1902, an independent Filipino Church was founded which adheres to modern science, proclaims that science is superior to Biblical tradition, denies the possibility of miracles, and conceives God as an invisible Father with one essence and a single person. The ritual resembles somewhat that of the Roman Church. Latin was originally prescribed, but the Spanish language is now the official tongue, and encouragement is given to the vernacular dialects. Marriage is allowed to its apostles. According to the Government Census of 1918, the Independent Filipino Church had 1,417,448 followers, but in the last Church Census its followers numbered 4,000,000. Several Protestant denominations have extensive organisations and have many communicants, probably more than 200,000. They co-operate in maintaining a Union Theological Seminary, the Philippine Council of Religious Education, and a National Christian Council, which forwards reform movements, evangelistic campaigns, etc. The Buddhist religion is professed by 24,263 men and women, while the Mahommedans number 443,037, and are chiefly to be found in the districts of Mindanao and Sulu.

Education.—Education in the public schools of the Philippines is free, secular, and co-educational, its principal aim being the spread of literacy on the basis of a common language, English. In 1929–30, there was an enrolment of 1,163,039 pupils (36.6 per cent. of those of school age) in the 7,612 public schools, with 292 American and 27,274 Filipino teachers. The expenditure on public-school education for 1929 was 14,497,483 dollars (insular only, excluding provincial and municipal). There are a number of special schools, including the Philippine Normal School, and nine provincial normal schools; the Philippine School of Arts and Trades, and 22 provincial trade schools; the Central Luzon Agricultural School, 29 provincial agricultural schools, together with some 275 farm settlement schools; the Philippine Nautical School, the Philippine School of Commerce and the School for the Deaf and the Blind. For higher education there is the State-supported University of the Philippines, with 481 professors, 1931, and 6,097 students; and 26 accredited private institutions of higher learning—among them the University of Sto. Tomas, founded in 1611, the oldest university under the American flag—giving collegiate instruction in liberal arts and sciences and in technical courses. There are in all 351 separate private schools of all grades of instruction accredited by the Government. The total enrolment in these approved private schools and colleges in 1929 was over 90,000, and the total number of instructors and teachers was about 3,916.

There are 172 newspapers and periodicals published in English and other languages.

Finance.—The revenues and expenditures of the central government for five fiscal years were:—

	Dollars	Dollars	Dollars	Dollars	Dollars
Revenues . . . .	42,607,254	43,635,288	88,000,000	83,000,000	27,500,000
Expenditure . . . .	39,813,403	39,416,919	88,000,000	32,500,000	27,500,000

The total bonded debt on June 30, 1930, amounted to 75,098,500 dollars, including provinces and municipalities. Sinking fund, 30,117,000 dollars.

Production and Industry.—The principal products are rough rice ('palay'), Manila hemp ('abacá'), coconut, sugar cane, corn, tobacco and maguery. There are 41 sugar centrals; output in 1928–29, 699,699 metric tons; in 1929–30, 786,103 tons. Much uneasiness exists over the efforts of American beet sugar producers to have a tariff placed on Philippine sugar. The principal fruit is the banana; there are also mangoes, papaya, anonas, pilinut (Canarium commune), and mandarin and oranges. Production of rice in 1928 was 2,112,800 metric tons. The cultivation of rubber is increasing yearly, especially in the southern provinces where the large plantations are located; output, 1927, 292 tons, 1928, 309 tons, and 1929, 312 tons. About 96 per cent. of the total cultivated area is owned by Filipinos whose farms average 3 acres.

In the production of copra and coconut oil the Islands are classed among the foremost countries in the world. During the year 1929, there were produced 433,442 metric tons of copra and 191,054 tons of coconut oil.

The live-stock industry is increasing steadily. On December 31, 1927, there were: 1,888,187 carabaos (water buffaloes); 1,069,462 cattle; 317,672 horses and mules; 9,798,064 hogs; 1,409,625 goats and 367,745 sheep.

The areas of uncultivated land are very considerable. The Archipelago has a total area of 71,111,040 acres, and of these only 8,896,584 acres, or 12 per cent., are cultivated, the remainder being distributed as follows: commercial forest lands, 39,285,220 acres; non-commercial forests, 7,198,300 acres (forests thus accounting for 63.5 per cent. of the total area); grass or bare lands, 13,451,565 acres; mangrove swamps, 650,083 acres; unexplored lands, 2,947,540 acres.

The commercial forests furnish chiefly cabinet and construction timber, but also gums and resins, vegetable oils, rattan and bamboo, tan and dye barks and dye woods. About 98 per cent. of this belongs to the Government. Exports of logs and sawn timber, 1930, totalled 82,351,824 board feet.

Gold is the only mineral produced in commercial quantities. Output in 1930, 185,208 ounces valued at 3,828,600 dollars. Some silver and a small amount of platinum are recovered from the gold mining operations. Chromite has been discovered in Zambales. The small iron production is consumed entirely in the manufacture of native agricultural implements. The total value of mineral production in 1928 was 6,359,000 dollars, in 1927, 4,578,500 dollars.

All manufacturing is carried on in small factories; the only exceptions are 37 sugar mills, 6 coconut oil mills, 7 dessicated cocoa factories and 3 large cigar and cigarette factories.

Commerce.—Free trade exists between the United States and the Philippines, but the American Congress has placed a tariff of about 20 per cent. on foreign imports into the Philippines. The values of imports and exports for recent calendar years are stated as follows in U.S. dollars (50 cents U.S. currency = 1 peso):—

Imports	119,732,834	119,298,902	115,851,472	134,056,698	147,160,275	123,092,954

In the fiscal year ending June 30, 1929, the commerce was distributed principally as follows (in Philippine pesos, 1 peso = 50 cents U.S. currency):—

Exports to United Kingdom (Board of Trade figures) for calendar year 1931, £1,246,504; imports from United Kingdom, £479,699. These totals include Guam.

Shipping and Communications.—The overseas trade of the Philippine Islands during 1930, was carried mainly by 361 American vessels aggregating 1,782,891 net tons, 481 British with 1,724,920 net tons, 264 Japanese with 820,644 net tons, 120 German with 546,736 net tons, 24 Philippine with 88,765 net tons; in all 1,548 vessels with a net tonnage of 5,949,224 entered direct from foreign countries. The coastwise trade of the Islands is carried exclusively by domestic vessels.

On January 1, 1929, there were in operation, 965 post-offices, 592 money-order offices, 8,354 miles of insular telegraph lines, and 655 miles of cable, with 462 telegraph offices, including 45 radio stations, with 509 combined telephone-telegraph stations. At the same time there were 962 postal savings banks in operation, with 289,145 accounts, amounting to 8,092,516 pesos (Philippine currency).

When the United States entered the islands in 1898 there was but a single line of narrow gauge track running between Manila and Dagupan, a distance of about 120 miles. At the end of 1929, the Manila Railroad Co. had 66.5 miles on Luzon, and the Philippine Railroad Co. had 132 miles on Panay and Cebu. The Government has taken over the former of these companies. Total railway mileage, about 799. Total length of roads, 7,385 miles of which 3,956 miles are first-class, 2,071 second-class and remainder third-class. Besides the foregoing roads there were 3,110 miles of foot and horse trails. January 1, 1929, there were 19,778 motor cars and 9,070 trucks registered.

Banking and Coinage.—There are twelve banks doing business in the Islands. Four are foreign: the International Banking Corporation, the Hong-Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, the Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China and the Yokohama Specie Bank. Combined resources of all banks on June 30, 1931, was 138,912,000 dollars; capital, 12,742,000 dollars. The Philippine National Bank was inaugurated, under a special charter granted by the Philippine Legislature, on May 2, 1916. The Government has now purchased all the privately-owned shares of stock of the bank and guarantees the final redemption and payment of the circulating notes of the institution. Since July 1, 1916, the Bank has been the sole Government depository. This bank and the Bank of the Philippine Islands, founded 1852, are the only ones that have the privilege of issuing notes.

The Philippines is on the gold-exchange standard.

The coins used in the Philippine Islands are of the following decimal denominations: Peso, one-half peso, peseta (20 centavos), media peseta (10 centavos), all in silver; five centavo, in nickel; and one centavo, in copper. Treasury certificates and bank notes are issued in one, two, five, ten, twenty, fifty, one-hundred, two-hundred, and five-hundred peso denominations. The Philippine peso is equivalent to fifty cents of the United States money. The maintenance of the parity of the peso with the gold is provided for by the Gold Standard Fund Act of June 13, 1922. The new peso now coined contains twenty grammes of silver, 800 fine. The Philippine coins are now coined at the Mint in Manila. Gold coins of the United States are legal tender for all debts, public and private, unless otherwise provided in the contract.

GUAM

The Island of Guam, situated at the southern extremity of the Mariana Archipelago, in latitude 13° 26' N, longitude 144° 43' E, is the largest island of that group. It was ceded by Spain to the United States by the Treaty of Paris (December 10, 1898). It is a Naval Station and saluting port under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department of the United States. A garrison of marines and a shore naval force are maintained here.

The length of the island is 32 miles, the breadth from 4 to 10 miles, and the area 206 square miles. Agaña, the seat of Government, is about eight miles from the anchorage in Apra Harbour. The port of entry is Piti. The number of inhabitants (including the military establishment and non-native residents) on June 30, 1931, was 20,857, of whom 19,611 were classed as 'natives.' The census of April 1, 1930, showed a population of 18,509. The native language is Chamorro, but Spanish and English are also spoken. English is the official language.

The Governor of the island, a naval officer appointed by the President, takes precedence over and is entitled to the honours due to an Admiral. The Governor is also the Military Commander of the island, Commandant of the naval station, and combines the functions of the executive, legislative and judicial power of the Government. The judiciary system comprises one police court, an Island Court, a Court of Equity, a Higher Court of Equity, and one Court of Appeal. The Spanish Colonial laws, modified when necessary by executive general orders of the Governor, are still in force.

Elementary education is compulsory. There are 3,491 pupils registered, 2,535 of whom are of school age (7 to 12). English, handicrafts and agriculture are taught.

There is a Government radio station on the island, which is also in cable telegraphic communication with all parts of the world. There is an irregular mail service per westbound U.S. army and navy transports, from San Francisco, via Honolulu, and to Manila.

A line of commercial steamers, with scheduled sailings from San Francisco every 90 days, stops at Guam westbound en route to Manila. The station ship makes about four trips a year to Manila, China, and Japan for freight and coal.

The port is closed to foreign vessels of war and commerce except in special cases. Permission to visit the island must be obtained of the Navy Department in each case.

The products of the island are maize, copra, rice, sweet potatoes, coffee, cocoa, and sugar, besides valuable timber. Copra (exports, 1930, 2,376 tons) and coconut oil are the principal exports. There are about 4,500 head of cattle, including 980 water buffaloes. The imports into the island in the year ending June 30, 1931, amounted to 541,939 dollars, and the exports to 130,588 dollars.

The official currency is that of the United States.

Governor.—E. S. Root, Captain U.S. Navy (appointed May 15, 1931).

SAMOAN ISLANDS.

(AMERICAN SAMOA.)

The history of American Samoa commenced in the year 1872, when the harbour of Pagopago, in Tutuila, was ceded to the United States for a naval and coaling station. In 1878 rights of freedom of trade and extra-territorial jurisdiction in Samoa were granted. On June 14, 1889, a treaty between the United States, Germany, and Great Britain proclaimed the Samoan Islands neutral territory, with an independent government, the natives being allowed to follow their own laws and customs, while for civil and criminal causes involving foreigners a Supreme Court of Justice, with an American citizen as presiding judge, was established. This arrangement continued till 1899, when owing to disturbances, the kingship was abolished, and, by the Tripartite Treaty of November 14 of that year, Great Britain and Germany renounced in favour of the United States all rights over the islands of the Samoan group east of 171 degrees of longitude west of Greenwich, the islands to the west of that meridian being assigned to Germany.

The total area of American Samoa is 76 square miles and according to the 1930 census, contained 10,055 inhabitants. The Island of Tutuila 70 miles from Apia, has an area of about 40·2 square miles, with a population of 7,809 (including the island of Aunu'u) according to the 1930 census. Ta'u has an area of 14 square miles, and the other islets (Ofu and Olosega) of the Mann's group have an area of about 4 square miles with a population of 2,147. Swain's Island, annexed in 1925, is from a mile and a half to two miles in diameter. Population (1930) is 99. The harbour at Pagopago, which penetrates the south coast like a fiord, is the only good harbour in Samoa. It is a United States naval station.

The Commandant is also the Governor of American Samoa by commission from the President of the United States. He appoints officers and frames laws or ordinances, but native customs (not inconsistent with United States laws) are not changed without the consent of the people.

The islands are organised in three political divisions corresponding to the old Samoan political units. In each District there is a Native Governor, County Chiefs and Village Chiefs. All of these officials are appointed by governmental authority although the District Governor has indirect control of the County Chiefs, and the County Chiefs of the Village Chiefs. Judicial power is vested in village courts, in six judicial district courts, and in a High Court. There is a native guard (known as the Fitaftas) of 70.

There are no public lands in American Samoa. Nearly all the land is owned by natives. The soil is fertile; the fruits comprise orange, lime, banana, mangoes and alligator pears. Copra of excellent quality is abundant.

The Government maintains 20 public schools, giving every child over 6 years of age the opportunity of an elementary English education: 2,118 pupils are enrolled. All private schools must teach English a percentage of the time. There are four parochial schools under missionary auspices having, in all, six white and six Samoan teachers and about 350 children of all ages; instruction is chiefly in Samoan.

The native taxes, both poll and school, are fixed by the Board of Assessors in November, payable before the following June 30. The annual output of copra is between 1,000 and 1,700 tons. The chief island products, besides copra, are taro, breadfruit, yams, coconuts, pine-apples, oranges, and bananas. Copra is the only article exported. Imports: 1930, 206,060 dollars. Exports: 1930, not available (to the United States, 140,422 dollars).

About 30 miles of public roads have been constructed. There is a United States Naval high-powered radio station (open to commercial traffic) on Tutuila, which reaches New Zealand, Australia, Honolulu, the United States, and the islands of the Pacific. The fast mail steamers of the Matson Navigation Company touch here on their regular trips between the United States, Hawaii and Australia.

PART THE THIRD

OTHER COUNTRIES

ABYSSINIA.

(ETHIOPIA.)

THE ancient Empire of Abyssinia, or 'Ethiopia,' includes the former Kingdoms of Tigré, in the north-east; Amhara and Gojjam, in the centre, and Shoa in the south; besides many other smaller and formerly independent or quasi-independent dependencies, together with the modern acquisitions to the south, Harrar, and the Galla, Shankalla and Dankali territories. The following are the principal provinces into which the country is divided: Harrar, Wollo, Gurage, Kaffa, Gore, Sayu, Benishangul, Wogera, Southern Tigré, Adowa and Aksun, Sokota, Lasta, Goffa, Nekemti (Lekempti) and the Western Galla countries, Sellale, Wollaga, Gimira, Sidamo, Arussi, Borana, Gojjam, Gondar, Jimma. The whole area is 350,000 sq. miles. For treaties relating to the boundaries of Abyssinia see THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK for 1907, p. 667, and for 1923, p. 677.

By the convention of Addis Ababa of October 26, 1896, between Italy and King Menelik, the independence of Abyssinia was recognized.

Under an Agreement signed December 18, 1906, on behalf of Great Britain, France, and Italy, the three Powers undertake to respect and endeavour to preserve the integrity of Abyssinia; to act so that industrial concessions granted in the interest of one of them may not injure the others; to abstain from intervention in Abyssinian internal affairs; to concert together for the safeguarding of their respective interests in territories bordering on Abyssinia; and they make agreements concerning railway construction in Abyssinia and equal treatment in trade and transit for their nationals. By an exchange of Notes dated December 14-20, 1925, Great Britain and Italy more specifically defined their respective spheres of interest in Abyssinia, as indicated in the above agreement; in particular Italy recognised the exclusive right of Great Britain to deal with the waters of Lake Tsana, while Great Britain agreed not to oppose any Italian scheme for railway development in the hinterland of Eritrea or Italian Somaliland, which may affect Abyssinia.

On August 2, 1928, Italy and Abyssinia signed a treaty of friendship and arbitration (the first of the kind ever made by Abyssinia), providing for arbitration in all disputes for a period of 20 years. A further agreement was signed at the same time whereby Abyssinia was granted a free zone at the port of Assab in Eritrea; provision was also made for the construction of a motor road from that port to Dessie in Abyssinia.

Government.

Emperor.—Haile Silassie I., born July 17, 1891; crowned King (Negus) on October 7, 1928, proclaimed Emperor, after the death of the Empress Zauditu, on April 3, 1930, and crowned Emperor, November 2, 1930. Married Waizeru Menen in 1912, and has 3 sons and 3 daughters. On January 25, 1931, the eldest son, Asfaou Wosan was proclaimed Crown Prince and heir to the throne.

After the overthrow of the Emperor Theodore by the British in 1868, the suzerain power passed to Prince Kassai of Tigré, who assumed the old title of Negusa Nagast ('King of Kings'), and was crowned in 1872 as John IV., Emperor of Ethiopia. After the death of this potentate in 1889, Menelik II., King of Shoa (born 1844), became the supreme ruler of Abyssinia. Menelik died in December, 1913, and was succeeded by Lij Yasu, born in 1896, son of his second daughter, Waizeru Shoaragga and Ras Mikael, the chief of the Wollo Gallas.

On September 27, 1916, Lij Yasu was deposed by public proclamation, and Zauditu, another daughter of Menelik, was nominated Empress and 'Queen of Kings of Ethiopia,' and Ras Taffari, son of Ras Makonnen, and great-nephew of Menelik, proclaimed heir to the throne.

On July 16, 1931, a constitution was proclaimed. This provides for a unified state under the government of the Emperor advised by two nominated chambers. All are equal before the law and succession to the Throne is reserved to the present dynasty.

Abyssinia was admitted into the League of Nations on September 28, 1923.

Population.

No reliable figures of population exist, but recent estimates indicate a figure of about 10,000,000. The Abyssinians, properly so called, number rather less than 3 millions, and inhabit the provinces of Tigré, Amhara, Gojjam, and Shoa (in part), covering an area of over one-third of the whole country. They are Christians, and are of Hamitic origin, semitized by waves of Semitic invasion from Arabia and adulterated by intermarriage with Negro and other conquered races. The Gallas, some of whom are Christian, some Moslem, and some Pagan, comprise more than two-thirds of the entire population, and are a pastoral and agricultural people of Hamitic origin. Ogaden, Issa and other Somalis inhabit Harrar, the Somaliland plateau, and the south-east. The Danakil are Mohammedans, and are still somewhat turbulent. There are also Negroes (in the South-West), and the Falashas (of Jewish religion), in the N.-E. centre with a growing number of foreigners (Indians, Arabs, Armenians, Europeans) in the towns.

There are few towns in Abyssinia in our sense of the word—Addis Ababa, Dire Dawa and Harrar being the most important. Addis Ababa, the capital, has 60,000 to 70,000 inhabitants with a foreign population of several thousands, of whom the majority are British Indian and British Arab subjects, Greeks and Armenians. Dire Dawa contains about 30,000 people, of whom about 300 are Europeans, and the old walled city of Harar has a population of about 40,000, with about 100 foreigners, mostly Indians and Arabs. Other important towns, politically or commercially, are: Debra Markos, capital of Gojjam, 5,000; Gondar, capital of Amhara, 3,000; Adua, capital of Tigré, 5,000; Axum, ancient capital of Ethiopia, 5,000; Antaló, former capital of Tigré, 1,000; Ankober, former capital of Shoa, 2,000; Debra-Tabor and Makallé; Gore, Saiyu, Nekemti, Saméré 3,000–4,000, and Sokoto, 1,500, important trading centres. Gambella, in Western Abyssinia, is a trading station leased to the Sudan Government. It is an important outlet for the trade in the West. A service of steamers is maintained from June to November with Khartum.

Domestic slavery is a recognized institution, but slave trading, by an ancient law renewed by a decree issued in June 1923, is punishable by death. A comprehensive edict of 45 clauses was issued in March 1924, providing for the gradual emancipation of slaves, beginning with the children born of slaves.

Religion and Education.

Since the conversion of the Abyssinians to Christianity in the fourth century they have retained their connection with the Alexandrian Church through the Abuna, or head bishop, who is always a Copt, and who is appointed and consecrated by the Coptic Patriarch of Alexandria. Under the Abuna is the Itchege, a native ecclesiastical dignitary, who presides over the spirituality, numbering about 100,000 ecclesiastics. In addition to the Itchege, who was consecrated bishop in January 1930, there are four other Abyssinian bishops, who were consecrated as such by the Coptic Patriarch in 1929. Their consecration was a great innovation, as hitherto no Abyssinian priest had been consecrated a bishop. The priestly class is very numerous and the Church holds a considerable proportion of the land. Both Copts and Abyssinians are monophysite, rejecting the decrees of the Council of Chalcedon (A.D. 451).

Education is mostly in the hands of the priests and monks, but a number of secular schools have been founded in recent years. There are 4 at Addis Ababa, 2 at Harar, and others at Jijiga, Gore, Sidamo, and Dessie. In addition, a few foreign missions, Swedish, American, French, Italian and German, carry on a limited amount of educational work. The Greeks and Armenians have their own schools.

Justice.

Justice is administered by the provincial governors, and shums, or petty chiefs, with the right of appeal to the Emperor. The Fetha Nagast, or Code of Laws, deals with ecclesiastical, civil and penal law. The legal system is said to be based on the Justinian Code. The penal code is based on the Mosaic law. Foreigners are subject to the jurisdiction of a special ('mixed') court or to their own consular Courts according to circumstances. Administration of Justice is very defective, but punishments for crimes are less barbarous than formerly.

Defence.

The Abyssinian Army in the field consists of two main parts. The standing army composes the nucleus, and the remainder of the forces are drawn from the chiefs and their retainers summoned in time of war, a sort of militia. Besides the above, a varying number of irregulars join the army on the outbreak of war, every man, except the priests, being an actual or potential soldier. The standing army, instituted by Menelik, forms in effect the paid standing garrison of each province, and amounts altogether to something under 100,000 men. Both they and the militia, amounting to perhaps 300,000-400,000 men, are very loosely organized, and have nothing in the shape of transport, and little modern equipment. A Belgian military mission was engaged in 1929 and is now at work training some 2,500 men of the Royal Bodyguard. The latter is armed with a certain amount of modern armament, including a 5-ton tank given to the king by the Duke of Abruzzi during his visit to Abyssinia in May, 1927. A beginning has been made with the formation of an Air Force, which has been started under French auspices.

Agriculture and Industry.

The chief industries are pastoral and agricultural. Cattle, sheep, and goats are numerous. The horses of the country are small but hardy, and make excellent polo ponies; mules are bred, being used as pack animals; donkeys are also small and serve for baggage animals. Cotton, the sugar-cane, date-palm, coffee, and vine thrive well in many districts, but, except coffee, are nowhere extensively cultivated. The production of Harari coffee (long berry Mocha) is on the increase. Besides this, which is cultivated, there grows more especially in southern and western Abyssinia a wild coffee plant, yielding a berry known as Abyssinian coffee, which grows in extensive forests. The supply is said to be unlimited. The native produce includes hides and skins, wax, barley, millet (dhurra), wheat, gesho (which serves as a substitute for hops), and tobacco; but, with the exception of hides, skins, wax, grain and coffee, not in sufficient quantities for export. Manufacturing industries are practically non-existent. The forests abound in valuable trees including rubber. Iron is found in some districts and is manufactured into spears, knives, hatchets, &c. Placer gold mining and washing are carried on in the western districts; coal, copper and sulphur have been found, also platinum. There are said to be valuable deposits of potash salts in the Asal salt plains in the north-eastern part of the country, and their exploitation has been carried on with the aid of Italian capital.

Foreign enterprise has begun to establish itself in the country; two Belgian companies are working coffee plantations, and a Franco-Belgian company is experimenting on a large scale with cotton.

Commerce.

The total trade of Abyssinia (export and import) in 1930 was valued at about 600 million francs (French), of which three-quarters pass through French Somaliland.

The principal artery of trade is the Franco-Ethiopian railroad, but caravans also do a large trade in the interior. The chief trade routes besides the railway are the following:—(1) Khartum-Gambella, Khartum-Gallabat, and Sudan; (2) Mombasa-Nairobi-Moyale (British East Africa); (3) Zeila Jijiga, Hargeisa-Ogaden (British Somaliland); (4) Massawa-Asmara-Gondar-Assab-Dessie (Italian Eritrea); (5) Mogadishu-Lugh-Dolo-Arusi (Italian Somaliland).

The exports consist mainly of hides and skins (including leopard and monkey), coffee, wax, ivory, civet, and native butter. The imports comprise grey sheeting, cotton yarns, artificial silk, corrugated sheets and bars, hardware cement, kerosene and petrol, glass and salt. The imports are chiefly from England, France, India, Italy, Germany, Japan, and the United States. The value of the leading imports into Abyssinia from and via the Sudan in 1930 were:—cotton and silk goods, £E.29,926 (£E.34,159 in 1929); salt, £E.13,329 (£E.19,665 in 1929); other goods, £E.20,349 (£E.22,839 in 1929). Exports from Abyssinia to and via the Sudan in 1930 were:—coffee, £E.219,133 (£E.216,590 in 1929); other goods, £E.11,586 (£E.20,221 in 1929).

The total trade between Abyssinia and Great Britain for 5 years (according to Board of Trade Returns) was as follows:—

—	1927	1928	1929	1930	1931
	£	£	£	£	£
Imports from Abyssinia	233,811	351,079	166,891	229,032	216,600
Exports to Abyssinia	16,061	19,954	83,785	83,843	22,636
Re-exports to Abyssinia	1,042	752	1,148	953	662

Communications.

Roads in Abyssinia are mere tracks, and transport is effected by means of mules, pack-horses, donkeys, and, in some places, camels. In the capital and its vicinity several miles of metalled road were constructed in 1926. In 1896 the Franco-Ethiopian Railway Co. was formed for the construction of a line from Jibuti in French Somaliland, which reached the capital in 1917. The line is of metre gauge, with a total length of 488½ miles. Trains run twice weekly in each direction, covering the distance in three days, but running by day only. In the dry season a weekly express is also run, which does the journey in 36 hours. The railway is under French management, and depends financially on a subvention from the French government.

Considerable interest is now being taken in road construction. Chief among the roads now under consideration or actually under construction are the following: Dessie-Assab, Addis Ababa, Jimma, Jijiga-Berbera, Dim Dawa-Harar, Gore-Gambeila, Addis Ababa-Lake Tsana. The total road mileage of all kinds is estimated at about 2,050 miles, of which about 1,000 miles are caravan tracks.

There are telegraph lines under Italian control (about 1,229 miles) connecting Addis Ababa with Harrar, with Sidamo, and with Massawa in Eritrea. Telephone lines connect Addis Ababa with Harrar, and Jibuti in French Somaliland, also with Gore and Gambeila (in the west), Jimma and Sharada (south-west), Dessie (north), and Debra Tabor and Gojjam, and with Ankober, and Asmara with Adua and Borromeida. Length of line is estimated at 5,113 miles. In 1929, there were 16 post offices.

Money and Credit.

The Bank of Abyssinia, which held a banking monopoly in the country since its institution in 1905, was bought in 1931 and replaced by a State Bank named the Bank of Ethiopia, with an initial nominal capital of 15 million English shillings or their equivalent in a new Ethiopian gold currency, in shares of 500 shillings, 50 per cent. paid up. Sixty per cent. ('A' shares) were to be subscribed by the Government and represented by six directors, and 40 per cent. ('B' shares) by the public and represented by four directors. No other bank is permitted in the country without special Government sanction. The transfer has actually not yet (March, 1932) taken place, but is expected to take place very shortly.

The current coin of Abyssinia is the Maria Theresa dollar (nominally worth about 2s., but greatly depreciated as a result of the fall in the value of silver) weighing 28.0668 grammes, .8333 fine, and the Menelik dollar, weighing 28.075 grammes, .835 fine. It has nominally the same value as the Maria Theresa dollar, but in some places it is not taken at all. Other silver coins are the half, quarter, sixteenth (girsh or piastre) of a dollar, and there is also a copper coin, the besa (= one thirty-second of a dollar). The number of piastres or besa obtainable for a dollar although theoretically fixed by law, is in fact liable to constant fluctuation. Various articles, however, are used as medium of exchange; bars of salt are accepted as money in many parts of the country, at a fluctuating rate according to supply and cost of transport. Cartridges are also currency, although to a diminishing extent; and in most places barter prevails.

The Maria Theresa dollar was originally minted in Vienna in the middle of the 18th century.

The metric system of weights and measures is used to a certain extent in the capital and district bordering the railway line. The principal native weights and measures, which are also used in trade with foreigners, are shown below.

Weights and Measures.

WEIGHTS.

Oke = weight of Maria Theresa/Menelik dollar = 28.067 grammes, approximately 1 oz. avoirdupois.

Natr = 30 okets, approximately 1 lb. 14 ozs. avoirdupois.

Farasula = 20 natrs, approximately 37½ lbs.

Kantar = 100 lbs.

1 Waggia (for ivory) = 480 dollars' weight.

1 „ (for rubber) = 640 dollars' weight.

LINEAL MEASURES.

Kinnd = French Coudée (length of forearm and hand) = cubit = 50 centimetres =  $19\frac{1}{2}$  inches.

Khalad = 130 kinnds = 65 metres =  $213\frac{1}{2}$  feet, say 71 yards.

LAND MEASURE.

The measure is a Gasha, which varies according to the quality of the land, and ranges between 15 khalads by 25 khalads, and 7 khalads by 11 khalads, the latter equalling roughly 80 acres.

GRAIN MEASURES.

2 ladan = 1 dawala = 80 kilos.

MEASURE FOR HONEY AND CIVET.

10 wanche (horn cups) = 1 goundo = about 3 litres.

AFGHÁNISTÁN.

AFGHÁNISTÁN is a country of Asia lying between parallels 29° and 38° 20' of north latitude, and 61° and 72° of east longitude, with a long narrow strip extending to 75° east longitude (Wákhán). For the boundaries, see THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK for 1925, pp. 654-55; for the treaty of November 1921, see THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK 1928, p. 642; and for earlier British relations with Afghánistán, see THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK for 1916, pp. 662-3.

Government.—The government of Afghánistán is a constitutional monarchy with a National Council (under an elected President), and a Cabinet presided over by the Prime Minister. The Council sits permanently at Kábul and consists of 106 deputies, selected from each of the administrative divisions of the country and from the nomad tribes. A Great Assembly, purporting to represent the whole Afghan people, is summoned at irregular intervals of about four years to consider major questions of policy referred to it by the King. The title of King instead of Amír was adopted in 1926. The country is divided into five major provinces of Kábul, Mezar, Kandahár, Herat, and Kataghan-Badakhshán; and four minor provinces: Simat-i-Mashriqi (i.e. Eastern Province), Simat-i-Janubi (Southern Province), Farah, and Maimena. Each province is under a governor (called in major provinces Naib-ul-Hukumeh and in minor provinces Hakim-i-Aala).

There are separate departments of War, Foreign Affairs, Internal Affairs, Education, Commerce, Justice, and Revenue, each in charge of a Minister and two departments (1) Health; (2) Posts and Telegraphs, under director-generals.

Reigning King.—Nadir Shah, born on April 10, 1880, was called to the throne on October 16, 1929, after a successful campaign against Habibullah Ghazi, who had assumed power on the abdication of King Amanullah.

Area and Population.—The extreme breadth of Afghánistán from north-east to south-west is about 700 miles; its length from the Herát frontier to the Kháibar Pass, about 600 miles; the area is given variously as about 245,000 or 270,000 square miles. Population, according to the latest estimate, about eleven millions. The languages spoken are Persian and Pushtoo, and Turkish in Turkistan and parts of Badakhshán. The predominant religion is Islam.

The largest towns are Kábul, the capital (population about 80,000), Kandahár (population with suburbs 60,000), Herát (population 30,000), and Mazar-i-Sharif (46,200).

Education.—Elementary and secondary schools exist throughout the country. Both elementary and secondary education are free. There are at present eight primary and secondary schools in Kábul.

Justice.—The law is based on the Shara' or Islamic law. Lower Courts (Mahakima-i-Ibtidaia) are established in each seat of government, and Higher Courts (Mahakima-i-Muraftaah) may have appeals from the former brought before them. A High Court in Kábul is the supreme judicial authority. In many instances efforts are made by litigants to compose their differences by the aid of unofficial juries in each locality.

Finance.—The revenue of Afghánistán is subject to considerable fluctuations. The Government share of the produce recoverable is said to vary from one-third to one-tenth, according to the advantages of irrigation. The total revenue is estimated at about seventy million rupees, a considerable portion of which is found from Customs.

Defence.—The Army, which is being reorganised, will probably consist of 35,000 to 45,000 regular troops of all arms, and in time of war these would be supported by considerable numbers of tribesmen in the form of irregulars. There is also a small air force, officered by Afghans trained in Europe.

Production and Industry.—Although the greater part of Afghánistán is more or less mountainous, and a good deal of the country is too dry and rocky for successful cultivation, yet there are many fertile plains and valleys, which, with the assistance of irrigation from small rivers or wells, yield very satisfactory crops of fruit, vegetables, and cereals. The castor-oil plant, madder, and the asafetida plant abound. Fruit, viz. the apple, pear, almond, peach, quince, apricot, plum, cherry, pomegranate, grape, fig, mulberry, is produced in profuse abundance. They form a staple food of a large class of the people throughout the year, both in the fresh and preserved state, and in the latter condition are exported in great quantities. The fat-tailed sheep is native to Afghánistán. These sheep furnish the principal meat diet of the inhabitants, and the grease of the tail is a substitute for butter. The wool and skins not only provide material for warm apparel, but also furnish the country's main article of export.

Northern Afghánistán is reputed to be tolerably rich in copper, and lead and iron are found in many parts. Coal is found in the Ghorband Valley and near the Khurd Kábul Pass. Gold in small quantities is also brought from the Laghmán Hills and Kunar. Badakhshan is said to be the only country in the world to produce first-quality lapis lazuli. This is smuggled in considerable quantities to China and Bokhara.

Silks, felts, carpets, articles from camels' and goats' hair, are some of the principal industries. At Kábul there are factories for the manufacture in small quantities of matches, buttons, leather and boots. There is also a 'Machine-Khana' where arms and ammunition, boots and clothing, etc., for the army are manufactured. It also includes a mint. All these factories are owned and supervised by the State.

Commerce.—No accurate registration of the trade of Afghánistán has yet been obtained.

Of the exports from India to Afghánistán the chief items are cotton goods, indigo and other dyeing materials, sugar, hardware, leather and silver treasure. The imports into India include timber, fruits and vegetables, grain and pulse, ghi and other provisions, asafoetida and other drugs, spices, wool, silk, cattle, hides, and tobacco.

Communications.—Afghánistán joined the Postal and Telegraphic Unions in 1928.

The trade routes of Afghánistán are as follows:—From Persia by Meshed to Herát; from Bokhára by Merv to Herát; from Bokhára by Karshi, Balkh, and Khulm to Kábul; from East Turkistán by Badakhshán and Nuristan (formerly Kafiristan) to Kábul; from India by the Kháibar road to Kábul; from India by the Gomál Pass to Ghazni and Kelat-i-Ghilzai; from Chaman, the terminus of the North-Western Railway beyond Quetta, to Kandahár and thence to Kábul or Herát; from Parachinar (Kurram) via Peiwar and Shutargardan Passes to Logar and Kábul.

There are no railways in the country. The following roads are fit for motor traffic, except after snow or heavy rain, but are badly constructed and mostly unmetalled: Kháibar-Kábul, Kábul-Kandahár, Kábul-Gardez, Kandahár-Chaman, and Kábul-Bamian. In addition there are some 200 miles of minor roads fit for motor traffic, mostly in the vicinity of Kábul. Merchandise, however, is still transported chiefly on camel or pony back. There are practically no navigable rivers in Afghánistán, and timber is the only article of commerce conveyed by water, floated down stream in rafts. Telephones are installed in a few of the larger towns. There is telegraphic communication between Peshawar-Kábul, Kábul-Kandahár, Kandahár-Chaman. A wireless installation connects Kábul with Eastern Europe and India.

Money and Currency.—There are two currencies in circulation, the 'Afghani' and the 'Kabuli.' Roughly 10 Afghani equals 11 Kabuli. Gold coins:—1 Amani = 20 Afghani;  $\frac{1}{2}$  amani = 10 Afghani; 2 amania = 30 Kabuli; 1 amania = 15 Kabuli;  $\frac{1}{2}$  amania = 7 $\frac{1}{2}$  Kabuli. Silver coins: Afghani,  $\frac{1}{2}$  Afghani; 1 Kabuli, Kran or  $\frac{1}{2}$  Kabuli. Copper coins: 20 Pul, 10 Pul, 5 Pul, 2 Pul, 1 Pul (all Afghani). Abbasi equals  $\frac{1}{2}$  Kabuli (Kabuli). Afghani currency is gradually replacing the Kabuli.

Weights and Measures.—The metric units have now officially replaced the old Afghani units—the Gaz-i-shah (the Persian Zar), the linear standard equal to 40.95 inches; the Gaz-i-zarib, the square standard equal to 1,000 to 1,066 Gaz-i-shah or 1,294 to 1,379 square yards, about  $\frac{1}{2}$  acre; and the Gaz-i-nix memar, the cubic standard equal to one cubic Gaz-i-shah or 1,625 cubic feet. All avoirdupois weights, formerly current hitherto under the name nakhud (3 grains), are now in terms of the gramme.

ALBANIA.

(SHQIPERIA.)

THE territory known as Albania is made up of the old Turkish Provinces of Scutari and Yanina, and of parts of those of Kosova and Monastir. The Albanians, from the point of view of their language, are divided into two principal groups—the Ghegs, who live to the north of the river Shkumbi, and the Tosks in the south.

The early history of the Albanians is complicated and local. But after the death of George Kastrioti—nicknamed and popularly known as Skenderbeg—in 1479, under whom the Albanians had united and heroically resisted the Turks for a quarter of a century, Albania passed under Turkish suzerainty, and thus remained—nominally or actually according to the locality and period—until 1912. At the beginning of the eighteenth century Ali Pasha of Tepelen established a virtually independent Albanian State with Janina as its capital, and waged war against his Albanian rivals the Pashas Bushati (1750–1831) of Shkoder (Scutari), who had temporarily thrown off Turkish control in the north. Between 1878 and 1880 an Albanian League unsuccessfully attempted to establish Albanian autonomy.

The independence of Albania was proclaimed at Vlonë (Valona) on November 28, 1912, and on December 17, 1912, the London Conference of Ambassadors agreed to the principle of Albanian autonomy. Subsequently that Conference decided upon the frontiers of the new country, and agreed that a European Prince be nominated to rule it. Prince William of Wied, having accepted the crown of the Principality from an Albanian deputation at Neuwied, on February 21, 1914, arrived at Durazzo (Durrës) on March 7, 1914. Previously, an International Commission of Control had been constituted to control the International loan to Albania.

Prince William's reign was foredoomed to failure. Intrigue and treachery were followed by revolt in central Albania. After the outbreak of the European War in 1914, the Prince and nearly all the members of the International Commission on September 3 left Albania, which fell into a state of anarchy. By the secret Pact of London of April 26, 1915, provision was made for the partition of Albania; but this arrangement was repudiated by Italy on June 3, 1917, when the Italian Commander-in-Chief in Albania, General Ferrero, proclaimed at Gjinokaster the independence of Albania. After the Armistice there was fighting between the Albanians and both the Italians and Yugoslavs; but eventually foreign forces were withdrawn beyond the Albanian frontier, and the independence of the country confirmed. On December 17, 1920, Albania became a member of the League of Nations. In January, 1925, the country was proclaimed a Republic, which continued until 1928. A Constituent Assembly for the purpose of changing the Albanian Republic into a Monarchy was opened on August 25, 1928, and on September 1, the necessary amendments to the Constitution were voted and Ahmed Beg Zogu, President of the Republic since January 31, 1925, was proclaimed King. The new régime was generally recognised by the European Powers.

According to the constitution of 1928, Albania is a democratic, parliamentary, independent monarchy, without any state religion and with only one elected Chamber.

On November 27, 1928, a treaty of friendship and arbitration was signed at Tirana between Albania and Italy, and on November 22, 1927, a defensive alliance was signed between the two countries.

Reigning King.—Zog I., born October 8, 1895, a Moslem by religion and hereditary chieftain of the Mati clan, proclaimed king September 1, 1928. The king is assisted in the administration by a council of ministers appointed by him.

Area and Population.—The area of the country is 10,629 square miles, while the population, according to the Census held on May 25, 1930, was 1,003,068.

The country is divided into 10 prefectures, named after the principal towns, which with the population in 1930 are as follows :—

Prefectures	Population in 1930		Prefectures	Population in 1930
	Prefecture	Town		Prefecture	Town
Berat . .	142,616	10,403	Korcha . .	147,536	22,787
Dibër . .	86,992	—	Kosova . .	49,081	—
Durrës . .	77,890	8,739	Shkodër . .	132,336	29,209
Elbasan . .	111,422	13,796	Vlonë . .	53,461	9,100
Gjinokastër . .	143,926	10,836	Tirana (Capital)	57,808	30,806

Religion and Education.—There is no State religion. The population is distributed according to the following estimates :—Moslems, 688,280 ; orthodox Christians (National Albanian Church), 210,313 ; Roman Catholics, 104,184. The Gheg Christians in the north are for the most part Roman Catholics under two Archbishops, three Bishops, one Mitred Abbot and an Apostolic Delegate, and the Tosk Christians in the south are members of the Albanian Autocephalous Church, which is under the rule of the Holy Synod (constituted February 18, 1929) and four bishops.

Primary education is nominally compulsory for children between the ages of 6 and 13, but owing to the shortage of schools this cannot be enforced. There were in 1929, 495 State primary schools with 807 teachers (103 women) and 28,199 pupils (5,232 girls) ; 32 State secondary schools, with 106 teachers (8 women), and 1,247 pupils (94 girls). There are also 14 Infants Schools, and 2 training colleges for teachers. About 902 Albanians are studying abroad.

Justice.—There is in every province a tribunal of first instance with three judges, and a court of cassation, composed of six judges, at Tirana. On January 1, 1928, the new Albanian Penal Code, which is based on that of Italy, and the new Civil Code (April 1, 1929), based on that of Italy, France and Switzerland, came into force, to take the place of the Ottoman laws previously imposed. According to the new Code polygamy is abolished, although Islam is the dominant religion in Albania.

Finance.—The revenue and expenditure for five years ending March 31 is as follows (in gold francs) :—

Expenditure .	gold francs 25,372,740	gold francs 28,185,900	gold francs 31,827,200	gold francs 31,885,000	gold francs 31,533,422

In May 1925 Albania obtained a foreign loan for the nominal amount of 50,000,000 gold francs in Italian lire, and by the rise in value of the lire the Government made a profit of 15,000,000 gold francs. Thus the sum to be expended was 65,000,000 gold francs. The loan, administered by the Italian Company for the Economic Development of Albania, and guaranteed by the yield of the Albanian Customs, and of the Albanian Monopolies on salt, matches, cigarette papers and playing cards, is also guaranteed by the Italian Treasury, and is being used exclusively in carrying out public works. This loan proving inadequate, the Italian Government agreed in June, 1931, to subsidise the Albanian revenues to a maximum annual amount of 10,000,000 gold francs, for a period of ten years. This sum bears no interest; but, on the instance of the Albanian Government, repayment is to be considered when the Albanian revenues amount to 50,000,000 gold francs, provided such repayment does not effect the economic development of the country. Expenditure is to be controlled by a commission of two Italian and two Albanian members, one of whom is chairman having equal vote with the other members; but decisions are by majority vote. The Commission has the right to scrutinise all accounts and budgetary provisions, and to make such recommendations for economy as it thinks fit.

Defence.—Military service is compulsory and begins at the age of 19. Liability to service continues to the age of 50. Service in the active army is for 18 months. An Albanian Militia of 10 battalions (one in each Prefecture), which all boys must join on reaching the age of 17 was instituted in 1930. It provides pre-military training. The peace strength of the army in 1930 was 11,450. The gendarmerie numbers 3,131.

The nucleus of a navy has been formed by the purchase of two patrol vessels, and four motor boats for coastguard purposes.

Production and Industry.—The Albanian economic system is very primitive; each family provides for its own needs. Great tracts of the country remain uncultivated, and the areas at present under cultivation (about 926 square miles) are dealt with in a primitive way. A number of agrarian reforms were initiated in 1930, including the formation of an Agricultural Bank. The State owns some 125,000 acres of the best land in the plain between the rivers Shkumbi and Vjosa. The country for the greater part is rugged, wild, and mountainous, the exceptions being along the Adriatic littoral and the Korcha Basin, which are fertile. Tobacco, timber, wool, hides, furs, cheese and dairy products, fish, olive oil, corn, cattle and bitumen are the principal products of the country. Cattle-breeding receives special attention. The wool is made up into coarse and heavy native cloth and exported. There are vast tracts of forest land composed of oak, walnut and chestnut trees, as well as beeches, pines and firs. The mineral wealth of Albania is considerable but undeveloped. The copper mines in the Puka district are being exploited. The salt-pits at Vlonë (Valona) are said to be of commercial importance, and Selenizza Bitumen mines are also worked successfully. The principal industries in the country are those connected with agriculture, such as flour-milling, olive-pressing and cheese-making.

—	1926	1927	1928	1929	1930
Imports .	24,864,741	24,681,888	32,311,583	33,643,900	33,288,900
Exports .	11,963,982	11,106,901	14,694,203	14,682,608	12,352,063

The distribution of trade in 1930 was as follows (in gold francs):—Imports from Italy, 16,707,000; United Kingdom, 2,465,000; Czechoslovakia, 2,430,000; Yugoslavia, 2,554,000; Greece, 1,186,000; United States, 2,417,000. Exports to Italy, 7,379,000; to United States, 2,111,000; to United Kingdom, 47,000; to Greece, 2,322,000; to Yugoslavia, 445,000.

The principal imports in 1930 were: cotton and cotton textile, 6,947,000 gold francs; cereals, 1,715,000 gold francs; metals, 3,088,000 gold francs; the principal exports: animal foods and fish, 4,502,000 gold francs; hides and skins, 1,715,000 gold francs.

Total trade between Albania and Great Britain (according to Board of Trade Returns) was as follows:—

—	1927	1928	1929	1930	1931
	£	£	£	£	£
Imports from Albania	955	273	273	2,544	469
Exports to Albania	48,877	86,771	82,486	22,531	29,775
Re-exports to Albania	1,371	1,619	167	150	298

Communications.—All the principal towns of Albania are connected by passable roads which compare very favourably with those in other Balkan countries. The mountain districts of the north are still, however, mostly inaccessible with wheeled vehicles, and communications are still by means of pack ponies or donkeys. The total length of completed roads in the country at the end of 1929 was 857 miles, but a further 360 miles were under construction. A railway to join Durrës with Tirana, 22 miles in length, is under construction. The ports are four in number, viz. Shengjin, Durrës, Vlonë, and Sarandë. Durrës is being fully equipped; but the others remain primitive. Number of post and telegraph offices, 55. There are five regular air routes in service: Tirana-Shkodër, Tirana-Koicha, Tirana-Vlonë-Gjinokastër, Tirana-Peshkepijë and Tirana-Kukës; and 3 wireless stations.

Banking and Currency.—On September 2, 1925, the National Bank of Albania was established in Rome, with branches in Tirana, Durrës, Koicha, Vlonë, and Shkodër. It has a capital of 12,500,000 gold francs. Albanian participation was to have amounted to 5,625,000, but owing to the failure of Albanians to subscribe, almost the whole of the Albanian quota was eventually taken up by Italians. The remainder of the capital was subscribed by an international financial group headed by the Credito Italiano. The Bank has the exclusive right of issuing paper money and metal coinage. A new currency based on notes freely convertible into gold coin, gold exchange, or foreign bank notes convertible into gold has been established. The monetary unit chosen is the (Frank ari) gold franc (5 Lek) (.3225806 gr. 900 fine), with a parity of 25·2215 to the £.

The Bank has issued Bank notes of 100, 20, 5 gold francs and 5 Lek (1 gold franc); and metallic currency as follows:—gold, 100 and 20 franc pieces; silver, 5, 2 and 1 franc pieces; nickel, 1,  $\frac{1}{2}$  and  $\frac{1}{4}$  Lek; and bronze, 0·10 and 0·05 Lek. On August 31, 1931, there were in circulation notes amounting to 12,494,000 francs and coin to the value of 1,811,000 francs, of which 1,038,000 francs were gold, and 764,000 francs nickel coins. Silver and bronze coins, and the 5 Lek (1 gold franc) note, are no longer in circulation. The cover for the note circulation on that date consisted of 19,815,000 francs, of which 3,065,000 francs were in gold, 14,238,000 francs in dollars and 2,510,000 francs in other currencies.

ARABIA.

ARABIA is essentially a desert country comprising an area of roughly 1,000,000 square miles and inhabited for the most part by nomadic Bedouin tribes eking out a precarious pastoral existence by the breeding of camels, sheep and goats. Bounded on the north by Iraq and Transjordan (Palestine), it is enclosed on the other three sides by the sea—the Red Sea on the west, the Arabian Sea on the south and the Persian Gulf on the east. The land-surface of the peninsula enclosed within these limits slopes down steadily from the elevated mountain barrier, which runs down the whole length of its western side parallel with the Red Sea, to sea-level on the Persian Gulf, and the uniformity of this slope is only interrupted in the extreme south-eastern corner of the peninsula, where the mountains of the Oman district rear their crests to an elevation of 10,000 feet above sea-level. With the exception of this mountainous district and the similar district of the Yemen, Arabia is a barren country consisting of vast tracts of steppe-desert, sand-waste and mountainous wilderness. It is a country of insignificant rainfall (the Yemen and Oman excepted); here and there, scattered oases, or oasis-groups, are formed. The Taif district, for instance, in the Hejaz mountains above Mecca, the Qasim and Jebel Shammar provinces in Central Arabia and the Hasa province near the Persian Gulf are among the best examples of such districts, while Medina, Taima, Riyadh, Jauf and Wadi Dawasir are but a few among the many large oases which occur frequently throughout the country.

The population of Arabia cannot be estimated with any certainty, but would seem to be about 7 millions.

The inhabitants of Arabia are at present found in every degree of transition from the purely nomadic life of the Bedouin to the simple civic life of towns in the interior like Anaiza or Buraida and the more highly developed civilization of Mecca, Medina and Jedda. Political changes have contributed to a development whereby the patriarchal, tribal organisation of the Bedouin has weakened steadily before a natural tendency to communal organisation into States and principalities imposed on the people by the development of civic life.

The introduction of modern fire-arms and the growth of an Arab nationalist spirit (directed against Turkish domination) in the borderlands of Syria and Iraq tended to encourage this process during the first decade of the present century, and the rise to power of Abdul Aziz ibn Sa'ud, the present Wahhabi King, gave it a further impetus. Ibn Sa'ud set to work to organise the unsettled Bedouin into civic communities under cover of a great Wahhabi revival, and in the spring of 1913 struck the first blow for the Arabs against the Turks by capturing the Hasa province from the latter. The Great War completed and stereotyped the process of political organisation in Arabia, and the ejection of the Turks from the Hejaz, Asir and the Yemen left the Arabs to work out their own salvation unchecked by foreign control. Internecine warfare not unnaturally followed, and the result of a six years' struggle was that a single power (the Ibn Sa'ud dynasty of Nejd) achieved a paramount position throughout the peninsula beyond the southern coastal fringe, where the States of Yemen and Oman are the most important of those which maintain an independent existence together with the lesser principalities of Kuwait and Bahrain, the trucial chiefs of the Oman coast, the Hadramaut and the Aden hinterland, all of which enjoy in a greater or less degree the protection of Great Britain. The principality of Asir (capital Sabiya), reduced in extent to a mere strip of the coast, maintained a precarious independence between Ibn Sa'ud and the Imam of Yemen (capital Sana') until October, 1926, when it accepted the suzerainty of Ibn Sa'ud. In 1930 under a new arrangement with its titular sovereign the Idrisi it was practically annexed to the Hejaz which had itself been conquered at the end of 1925 by Ibn Sa'ud. A dispute between Ibn Sa'ud and the Imam regarding the frontier between Asir and the Yemen is understood to have been settled by a general Treaty concluded between them on December 15, 1931, but not published pending justification. The northern province of Aqaba-Maan was annexed by the British Government to the Palestine mandated area in July 1925.

The Kingdoms of Hejaz and of Nejd and its Dependencies form a personal union under the rule of Abdul-Aziz ibn Abdur-Rahman Al-Faisal Al Sa'ud, G.C.I.E., who on January 8, 1926, was proclaimed king in Mecca under the style King of the Hejaz and in 1927 changed his title of Sultan of Nejd and its dependencies to that of King. On May 20, 1927, a treaty was signed at Jedda between Great Britain and Ibn Sa'ud, by which the former recognized the complete independence of the dominions of the latter.

For a short account of the rise of the Wahhabis under Ibn Sa'ud, and of the latter's conquest of Hejaz, see THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK, 1929, pp. 645-47.

Ibn Sa'ud has placed his State in a dominant position among the States of Arabia. The dual character of his realm is reflected in the maintenance of two capitals at Mecca and Riyadh. His administration as regards the kingdom of Nejd and its dependencies is simple and of a patriarchal character, without ministers of State or other imitations of Western Europe. The King's eldest son, the Emir Sa'ud, normally resides in Nejd and exercises there the functions of Viceroy. The administration of the kingdom of the Hejaz, however, as set forth in a 'Constitution' issued on August 29, 1926, is controlled by the King acting through a Viceroy resident in Mecca. There are six State Departments, two of which, namely the Department of Internal Affairs and the Department of Public Education, are responsible in the first place to the Viceroy. The Department of Foreign Affairs which is directly responsible to the King, was elevated into a Ministry in December 1930 under the Emir Faisal, the King's second son, who is also the Viceroy of the Hejaz. The King is himself in charge of the Department of Military Affairs, while the Chief Judge is responsible for the Department of Sharia (legal) Affairs. The Constitution also provides for the setting up of certain advisory Councils, comprising a consultative Legislative Assembly in Mecca, Municipal Councils in each of the towns of Medina and Jedda, and Village and Tribal Councils throughout the provinces. The members of these Councils consist of chief officials and of notables nominated or approved of by the King.

The Hejaz-Nejd Government has adhered to the International Postal Conventions, and is in treaty relations with the British Empire, Iraq, Trans-Jordan, Syria, Persia, Germany and Turkey. A treaty with France was concluded in November 1931, but has not yet been ratified.

The total population of Nejd is estimated at about 3,000,000. Towns with a population exceeding 10,000 inhabitants are: (1) Hufuf; (2) Mubarraz; (3) Riyadh; (4) Shaqra; (5) Anaiza; (6) Buraida; (7) Hail; (8) Jauif; (9) Sakaka; and (10) Hauta. Of these Hufuf and Riyadh have populations of about 30,000, but none of the others exceed 20,000.

The products of Nejd are dates, wheat, barley, fruit of various kinds, hides, wool, clarified butter (saman or ghi) and abas (Arab cloaks), besides camels, horses, donkeys and sheep. The export trade is still insignificant, though capable of considerable development, especially as regards dates, hides and clarified butter. The export of Arab horses to Bombay is not as active as it was in the past, but the annual export of camels to Syria and Egypt is a steady source of income to the Bedouin. The chief imports of Nejd are piece-goods, tea, coffee, sugar and rice.

The frontiers of the Hejaz are not sufficiently definite to allow of anything like an accurate estimate of its area, which probably does not exceed 150,000 square miles. The population is probably about 1,000,000, of whom Mecca, the capital, accounts for some 85,000, Medina for 30,000 and Jedda for 25,000, while the great majority of the rest are Bedouin. The chief port is Jedda, the seaport of Mecca; Yanbu, next in importance, occupies a similar position in relation to Medina; while ports of less importance are Aqaba (now annexed to Palestine), Muwaila, Wajh, Rabigh, Lith and Qunfuda. Medina produces excellent dates in abundance; Taif and other oases in the mountains and valleys produce honey and a large variety of fruit; while Bedouin products are hides, wool and clarified butter. But the exports of the Hejaz are insignificant, and the country depends for existence almost entirely on the annual pilgrimage which brings large numbers of pilgrims from abroad each year.

For defence Ibn Sa'ud depends mainly on tribal levies, but the elements of a small regular army, not numbering more than about 1,000 men, have recently been brought together in the Hejaz.

There are no roads, properly so called, in the Hejaz. From Jedda to Mecca (45 miles), a track across the desert is in some parts metalled. There is also a track from Mecca eastward through Riyadh to Ukair on the Persian Gulf, a distance of 829 miles, which is used for motor transport. A similar route connects Jedda with Medina via Rabigh and Yambo.

The Hejaz Railway from Amman to Medina was administered from April 1924 to July 1925 by the Hejaz Government, the Amir (afterwards King) Ali having taken a prominent part in restoring through-traffic to Medina. In July 1925 the Palestine Railway administration took over the section from Amman to Maan, while the southern section was put out of commission by the Wahhabi siege of Medina.

The English gold sovereign is the basis of the currency. On January 22, 1928, a new silver currency, the Riyal, weighing 24.055 grammes, .830 fine, was introduced in place of the Turkish Mejidie currency. Ten Riyals = £1 (gold). The Riyal is subdivided into 11 Qarsh (piastres) Miri, and each Q.M. contains 2 Qarsh Darij. The Q. D.,  $\frac{1}{2}$  and  $\frac{1}{4}$  Q. D. are nickel coins. A branch of the Netherlands Trading Society of Amsterdam conducts banking business in Jedda.

Five powers viz.: Great Britain, Soviet Russia, Turkey, Persia and Holland maintain legations at Jedda, with Ministers in the first two cases and Chargés d'Affaires in the other three. France is represented by a Chargé d'Affaires but has not changed the status of its Consulate. Italy and Egypt maintain, unofficially, consular representatives.

Yemen.—The Yemen may be divided as follows: Aden; the Aden Protectorate; and the domains of Imam Yahya b. Muhammad b. Hamid ed Din.

The Zaidi Imam Yahya, whose capital is Sana' (Lat. 15° 20' N., Long. 44° 12' E.), has a domain of some 75,000 square miles with a population of two to three millions. His territories include the area recently abandoned by the Turks, and so march with the Anglo-Turkish boundary drawn in 1902-4. In a northerly direction his influence extends to Nejran (Lat. 17° 30' N., Long. 44° 15' E.) of the Yam, whose tenets are those of the sect of Ismailiya or Fatimiya, and their chief is the Da'i Ali Mohsin Al Shibami, of the house of the Makarima, whose descent is from Ismail b. Jafar Alsadiq, the offspring of Al Husein, the second son of the fourth Caliph Ali. The same tenets are professed by the inhabitants of Haraz near Menakha. To the north of Sana' are the Imamic large towns of Amran, Tawila, Al Kharr, Al Suda, Sada (Lat. 16° 47' N., Long. 43° 43' E.), Quflat Al Udhr, and also the region of Al Jauf, Upper, Middle and Lower, with their capitals respectively at Al Matamma, Al Hazm, and Al Ghail, where live the 'Shawaf,' clansmen of the influential Bakil tribe, all of which tracts, watered by the River Kharid, own the Imam's suzerainty. To south of Al Jauf, and to east by north of Sana' at a distance of six days' journey, lies the district of Marib, or Saba, whose ruler pays homage to Imam Yahya. Other large towns in the Yemen are Taizz (alt. 4600 ft.), Ibb (6275 ft.), Yerin (8600 ft.), Dhamar (7650 ft.). The altitude of Sana' is 7260 ft. The highest mountain is Nabi Shuaib (11,000 ft.). Sumara, Kinan, Takar and many others are all over 9000 feet altitude.

The population of Sana', a walled city with eight gates, is between 20,000 and 25,000. The old-time granaries of the Upper Yemen still exist, and lie chiefly between the towns of Ibb and Al Jubla, and in the Wadi Sahul below Ibb and to its north, though indeed the agricultural products are widely distributed throughout the country and comprise barley, wheat, and millet, together with coffee—the finest berries coming from Menakha. Hides also are largely exported.

The Zaidi Imams are descended from Zaid, a Huseini, the second son of Ali Zain al Abidin, the son of Al Husein, the second son of the fourth Caliph Ali. Imam Yahya Hamid ed Din, who succeeded his father Muhammad in 1904 and took the name of Al Mutawakkil as Commander of the Faithful, traces his own descent from Al Hasan and his descendant Imam Al Hadi ila l Haqq Yahya, who died in A.H. 298 (A.D. 910). Thus the present Imam is of Hasani stock, as are the Sherifs (Ashraf) of Mecca, and the Idrisi Seyyids of Sabia in the Asir Province. The early line of Imams began their rule in the town of Sada' (above mentioned).

The Imam has twelve sons, the eldest of whom is the Emir el Hadi Mohamed Seif al Islam, who commands in the country to the north of Sana'.

The Hadramaut is a considerable tract of fertile valleys lying to the East of the Aden Protectorate. The greater part of it owes allegiance to the Qa'aiti dynasty, whose representative is the present Sultan of Makalla. A rival dynasty, the Kathiri, rules a number of towns and villages inland. The whole area is loosely under British protection and control.

Oman.—Muscat is the capital of the independent Sultanate of that name situated at the easterly corner of Arabia. Its seaboard is nearly 900 miles long and extends from Tibbat on the west side of Cape Mussandam round Ras Rajir, rather over 200 miles due north of the Island of Socotra, with the exception of a small strip of the east coast of the Mussandam peninsula from Dibbeh to Khor Kalba, which is in the administration of the minor chiefs of Trucial Oman. The Sultanate extends inland to the borders of the Great Desert, but of late years the Omanis have become virtually autonomous, and are now more subject to the Imam of Oman and his lieutenant, Shaikh Isa bin Saleh, than to His Highness the Sultan of Muscat and Oman. The interior is for the most part mountainous, the high country extending down to the sea-coast in a series of arid rocky heights, though vegetation exists on the higher mountains. North-west of Muscat the sea-coast littoral tract is fertile and prosperous, and date groves extend along it for over 100 miles. This strip is known as the Batineh Coast, and it is to here that the hillmen from Oman, finding the struggle for existence too keen in the face of a decreasing water supply, are gradually descending and forcing out the date and fisher folk. The remainder of the coast, with one notable exception, is barren and forbidding and rarely visited by Europeans. The exception is Dhofar, which is the name of a small fertile district, comprising a group of villages, at the south-west corner of the Sultanate. Gwadar, a port on the Mekran coast, and a small tract of country round it also own allegiance to Muscat. It is the last remnant of the Omani possessions on the Persian side of the Gulf.

The town of Muscat, once so important and prosperous, has been falling into decay for years now. Most of the trade goes to the sister port of Matrah, which is the starting point of the trade route to the interior, but Muscat still remains the capital and seat of government.

Area, 82,000 square miles; population, estimated at 500,000, chiefly Arabs, but there is a strong infusion of negro blood, especially along the coast. The towns of Muscat and Matrah hardly contain an Arab, being inhabited almost entirely by Baluchis and Negroes. The capital, Muscat, and the adjacent town of Matrah have together about 20,000 inhabitants.

The present Sultan is H.H. Seyyid Sir Taimur bin Feisal, K.C.I.E., C.S.I. (b 1886), who succeeded his father, the late Sultan Seyyid Feisal bin Turki, October 5, 1913, as the 13th of his dynasty to be Imam or Sultan of Oman. The Sultan's sister was consort to the late Seyyid Ali II, 9th Sultan of Zanzibar (1902-11), of the other branch of the dynasty which has been reigning there since the separation of the crowns on the death of the Seyyid Said ibn Sultan, Imam of Oman and 1st Sultan of Zanzibar, October 19, 1856.

The revenue of the Sultan from all sources varies between seven and eight lakhs of rupees yearly. The population is poor. In the valleys of the interior, date cultivation has reached a high level, and there are possibilities of agricultural development were the water supply more certain. Inland camels are bred in large numbers by the tribes, and these are said to be the best breed in Arabia, but in size and strength they are inferior to those of north-western India.

Trade is mainly in the hands of British Indians, and imports and exports are mainly from and to India. The chief imports in 1930-31 (figures for

The only port of call for steamers is Muscat where, in 1930-31, 139 steamships of 402,607 tons and 278 sailing vessels of 33,422 tons entered and cleared. It is one of the ports on the subsidiary mail route between Bombay and Basra. The mail service is a weekly one in both directions. The Indian Government maintains a post office and the Imperial and International Communications, Ltd., a telegraph office at Muscat.

The common medium of exchange is the Maria Theresa dollar (see p. 639). On the coast, but not in the interior, the rupee circulates. There is one Omani copper coin, which fluctuates in value. The muhammadi of 20 gaj (1 dollar = 11½ muhammadi) is only money of account. The weights in use are 1 Kiyas = the weight of 6 dollars or 5·9375 oz.; 24 Kiyas = 1 Maskat Maund; 10 Maunds = 1 Farásala; 200 Maunds = 2 Bahár. Rice is sold by the bag; other cereals by the following measures:—40 Palis = 1 Farrah; 20 Farrahs = 1 Khandi.

Political Agent and H.B.M.'s Consul.—Major T. C. Fowle, C.B.E.

The State of Kuwait is situated on the north-western coast of the Persian Gulf. The reigning dynasty was founded by Subah abu Abdullah, who ruled from 1756 to 1762. The Sheikh is subsidised by the British Government, which maintains a Political Agent at his Court. The present Sheikh, Ahmed ibn Jabir al Subah (b. 1885), succeeded his uncle, the 9th Sheikh Salim ibn Mubarak, on February 23, 1921. Although His Highness has two sons by his first marriage—Abdullah (b. 1905) and Mohamed (b. 1909)—and one by his present consort, the daughter of the late Sheikh Salim ibn Mubarak Jabir (b. June 29, 1926)—the Heir Presumptive according to the Koweiti rule of succession is the Sheikh's uncle, Hamad ibn Mubarak (b. 1894), who has a son Mubarak.

Estimated population, 50,000, to which an indeterminate number of Bedouins must be added.

Indian rupees and annas are legal tender in Kuwait town, and the post office, which is administered by the Iraqi postal department, issues Indian stamps overprinted 'Kuwait.' Maria Theresa dollars are still used in the interior.

ARGENTINE REPUBLIC.

(REPÚBLICA ARGENTINA.)

Constitution and Government.

ARGENTINA was discovered in 1516 by Juan Diaz de Solis and Vicente Yáñez Pinzón. In 1535 Don Pedro de Mendoza was sent out by the King of Spain, and in that same year founded the town of Buenos Aires. On May 25, 1810, the population rose against the Spanish rule, and on July 9, 1816, Argentine independence was proclaimed. Between 1816 and 1852 was a period of anarchy, and in 1853 stable government was once more established.

The Constitution of the Argentine Republic bears date May 25, 1853, with modifications in 1860, 1866 and 1898; extensive modifications were being discussed in 1932. The President is elected for six years by 376 electors appointed by the fourteen provinces and the capital, equal to double the number of senators and deputies combined. In the presidential election of November 8, 1931, total vote cast was 1,347,584. A Vice-President, elected at the same time, presides over the Senate, but has otherwise no political power. The President is commander-in-chief of the army and navy, and appoints to all civil, military, naval, and judicial offices, and has the right of presentation to bishoprics; he is responsible with the Ministry for the acts of the executive; both President and Vice-President must be

Roman Catholics, Argentine by birth, and cannot be re-elected, unless a period of six years intervenes. The President has a salary of 96,000 paper pesos (£8,800 at par), and 28,800 paper pesos for official expenses. The National Congress consists of a Senate and a House of Deputies. The Senate numbers 30, two from the capital and from each province, elected for nine years (one-third retiring every three years) by a special body of electors in the capital, and by the legislatures in the provinces. The Chamber of Deputies has 158 members elected by the people. The deputies are elected for four years, one-half retiring every two years. The two chambers meet annually from May 1 to September 30; the lower house receives the budget and initiates fiscal legislation.

President of the Republic.—General Don Augustin P. Justo. Elected November 8, 1931. Assumed office, February 16, 1932.

The Ministry, appointed by and acting under the orders of the President, consists of eight Secretaries of State—namely, of the Interior, Foreign Affairs, Finance, War, Justice and Public Instruction, Agriculture, Marine, and Public Works.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

The Constitution, with certain small exceptions, is identical with that of the United States. Such matters as affect the Republic as a whole are under the Central Government. The governors of the various provinces, elected by the people of each province for a term varying between three and four years, are invested with very extensive powers, and are independent of the central executive. The provinces elect their own legislatures, and have complete control over their own affairs. The territories are under the supervision of governors appointed by the President. In Buenos Aires municipal government is exercised by a Mayor appointed by the President with the approval of the Senate. He is assisted by a deliberative council of 30 elected by the male inhabitants over 18 years including foreigners who comply with certain conditions. Voting is compulsory under penalty of a fine. The deliberative council votes on measures relating to city finance, works, and general administration, and its decisions are carried out by the Mayor. Other municipalities have constitutions of a similar character.

Area and Population.

The Argentine Republic consists of fourteen provinces, ten territories and one federal district, containing the land area and population shown below:—

Religion and Education.

There is no State religion, though the Roman Catholic religion is supported by the State; all other creeds are tolerated and freedom of conscience prevails. There are 1 archbishop (Buenos Aires) and 10 suffragan bishops. For the clergy there are 8 seminaries. In 1888 civil marriage was established in the Republic.

Illiteracy among the voters has fallen from 35 per cent. in 1916 to 21·98 per cent. in 1930; in the Federal capital, to 2·6 per cent. Primary education is free (subsidised by the General and Provincial Governments), secular and compulsory for children from 6 to 14 years of age. In 1931 the primary schools numbered 11,330 with 56,750 teachers and an enrolment of 1,509,373; there were also 215 secondary, normal and special schools with 48,965 pupils under the Ministry of Public Instruction, and 241 provincial secondary schools with 13,709 pupils. National schools throughout the Republic in 1931 numbered 4,786, with 23,330 teachers and 638,306 students. Private schools numbered 1,360, with 169,598 pupils. There are national universities at Córdoba (founded 1613), with 2,500 students; Buenos Aires (1821), with 12,532 students; La Plata (1897), with 3,000 students; Tucumán (1912), with 600 students; the National University of the Litoral, in Santa Fé, with branches in Rosario (1920) with 4,000 students. In 1928, 22,939,907 paper pesos were spent on university education, and a total of 200,658,513 paper pesos on all forms of educational activity.

Justice.

Justice is administered by Federal and by Provincial Courts. The former deal only with cases of a national character, or in which different provinces or inhabitants of different provinces are parties. The Federal Courts are the Supreme Courts, with 5 judges at Buenos Aires; 5 Appeal Courts, one with 5 judges at Buenos Aires, and with 3 each at La Plata, Paraná, Córdoba, and Rosario (Santa Fe), and courts of first instance in each of the provinces and territories. Each province has its own judicial system, with a Supreme Court (generally so designated) and several minor courts. Trial by jury is established by the Constitution for criminal cases, but never practised.

Finance.

Total reported receipts and expenditures for recent years have been as follows, in paper pesos (£1 sterling at par = 11·45 paper pesos).

Defence.

ARMY.

The army of the Argentine Republic is a National Militia, service in which is compulsory for all citizens from their 20th to their 45th year. Naturalised citizens are exempt for a period of 10 years. For the first 10 years the men belong to the 'active' army, or first line (Permanent Forces). After completing 10 years in the first line, the men pass to the National Guard and serve in it for another 10 years, finishing their service with 5 years in the Territorial Guard; the latter is only mobilised in case of war. The period of continuous service, or training in the ranks with the Permanent Forces, is for 1 year. The reservists can be called out for training periodically.

The territory of the Republic is divided into 5 military districts for administrative purposes. According to the Army Regulations which came into force in January, 1916, the establishment for 1929 included 1,501 officers, 1,723 under-officers, 1,940 non-commissioned officers, 1,320 volunteers, and 21,000 conscripts called up. The army is organised in 5 divisions, 8 cavalry brigades and 2 mountain detachments.

There is a trained reserve numbering 300,000 men, of whom 150,000 men are of the first line, and 150,000 of the special reserve. The territorial reserve numbers 100,000 men.

The weapon of the Argentine infantry is at present the Mauser magazine rifle. The cavalry have a carbine of the same pattern. The artillery are armed with a Krupp 7.5 cm. Q.F. gun.

The estimated military budget for the year 1929 was 5,902,863L.

There is a Military Aviation Training School at El Palomar. In 1929 the air force was organised in 3 aviation groups, each comprising 1 bombing flight and 1 observation flight; one group has in addition 1 fighting flight; each group has a photographic and a training centre.

There are also 5 modern flotilla leaders, 4 destroyers, 3 submarines, and some training and miscellaneous craft.

In 1924-25, the battleships Moreno and Rivadavia and 4 destroyers were refitted at a cost of 9,500,000 gold pesos, the boilers of all six vessels being adapted to burn oil. The coast defence ironclads Independencia and Libertad and 3 of the 4 cruisers of the Garibaldi type have since been converted to oil burning and otherwise modernized. A new naval programme, to involve the expenditure of 75,000,000 gold pesos, spread over a period of ten years, was approved in 1926. It provides for extension of the present dockyard accommodation in the River Plate and at Puerto Belgrano, and the construction of a new yard at Mar del Plata. New construction covered by this legislation includes the cruisers Almirante Brown and 25 de Mayo, and 3 submarines, built in Italy, as well as the 5 flotilla leaders mentioned above, three of which were built in England. Two British-built surveying vessels were delivered in 1928. Further orders are to be placed when funds become available.

The active personnel of the navy comprises 337 officers, 130 engineers, 27 electrical engineers, and about 11,000 men (including about 5,000 conscripts), who have to serve two years. There is a corps of coast artillery of 450 men, a naval school, a school of mechanics, a school for artillery, and a school for torpedo practice. The training of officers and men has recently been placed on a much higher scientific level.

Production and Industry.

Argentina has an area of about 699,278,300 acres, of which about 250,000,000 acres may be used for agriculture, 250,000,000 acres for cattle raising, 96,250,000 acres are woodland, and the remainder, 103,028,300 acres, are mountain, lake, river, or arid regions. Of the cultivable portion, about 10,000,000 acres require irrigation. In the territories the Federal Government has wide tracts of land amounting to 237,768,000 acres suitable in general for pastoral colonisation, and these lands are conditionally offered free, or for sale or on lease.

Year	Wheat	Maize	Linseed	Oats
1928	5,295,835	6,372,181	1,944,402	299,704
1930	2,218,389	4,670,309	1,169,661	453,638

Alfalfa, on about 14 million acres, for feeding livestock, is Argentina's most successful crop. It is drought-resisting. Cotton, potatoes, sugar, vine, tobacco, and yerba maté (Paraguayan tea) are also cultivated. About 237,500 acres, chiefly in Tucumán, Jujuy, and Salta produced in 1931, 377,289 tons of sugar. Potato crop for 1930 was 1,287,000 metric tons; from 60,000 to 80,000 tons are exported. The total vine area is about 280,000 acres, chiefly in Mendoza and San Juan; production of wine in 1929, 181,938,326 gallons. The area under tobacco averages 22,000 acres; output, 7,700 metric tons; Yerba maté, 80,000 acres, producing 22,000 tons. Production of raw cotton in 1928-29, 98,700 tons; of ginned cotton, 23,700 tons; exports, 1930, 27,597 tons. Production of vegetable oils, principally from peanuts, totalled 29,165,941 kilos in 1928. Export of quebracho-extract in 1930 totalled 140,996 tons, but export of logs for treatment abroad (136,771 metric tons in 1930) is cutting into the demand for extract.

In the provinces of Buenos Aires, Santa Fé, and Entre Ríos 463,000 acres of agricultural lands have been acquired by the Jewish Colonisation Association; 158,000 acres are under cultivation. Some 30,000 square miles of State lands are cultivated. In 1930 there were 106 rural co-operative societies in Argentina.

The livestock census (July 1, 1930) showed cattle, 32,211,855; horses, 9,858,111; sheep, 44,413,221; goats, 5,647,396; pigs, 3,768,738. The Province of Buenos Aires contains one-third of the sheep within the Republic. Argentine wool exports in 1930-31 were 349,502 bales, compared with 313,332 in 1929. Production of butter in 1930 was 33,568 metric tons (exports, 23,204 metric tons); of casein (nearly 75 per cent. of the world's output), 13,993 tons (exports, 13,734 tons); cheese, 15,294 tons (exports, 337 tons).

The principal industry is meat refrigeration. In 1930, 345,500 metric tons of chilled, and 98,700 metric tons of frozen beef, 830 tons of pork, and 80,100 metric tons of mutton were exported. The largest refrigerating plant in the world, with a daily capacity of 5,000 cattle and 10,000 sheep, is at Buenos Aires. Cattle killed in Argentina in 1930, 2,791,586 head; sheep, 5,850,906; hogs, 379,741. Exports in 1930 of dry hides, 18,300 tons; of salted hides, 118,700 tons. Flour milling ranks second to refrigeration. The average yearly output is 7,000,000 sacks. Near Bahia Blanca is being constructed the largest grain elevator in the southern hemisphere, with capacity of 81,000 tons. Mining is of no great importance. Gold, silver, and copper are worked in Catamarca, where there are also two valuable tin mines, and gold and copper in San Juan, La Rioja and the south-western territories. Coal is found in the Andine Provinces, in the Cordillera region of Patagonia and in Northern Patagonia. Tungsten is also an important mineral, others being borate, salt, and limestone. During 1930 the crude-oil production in the State-owned oil-fields in Argentina amounted to 5,206,918 barrels; from private oil-fields, 3,701,874 barrels.

The Government estimated Argentine manufacturing establishments in 1927 at 61,000, with 600,000 operatives, 1,000,000 horse-power, and a gross output of 2,889,000,000 paper pesos; raw materials used, 1,624,000,000; net added value, 1,265,000,000 (about 101,000,000%).

Shipping and Navigation.

The total shipping entering Argentine ports in 1930 was 2,557 vessels with 9,886,812 tons, of which 1,064 with 4,289,082 tons were British.

Internal Communications.

The first railway concession dates from 1854. Railways open, January 1, 1931, 25,435 miles, of which 5,922 miles belong to the State, and 19,513 miles to private companies. Operating receipts in 1930 of both the State and private railways were 128,750,000 gold pesos as against 146,407,400 gold pesos in 1929. Passenger traffic in 1929 was 166,797,300; freight traffic, 51,513,700 tons. Length of good motor roads in 1931, 2,000 miles; of unsurfaced roads, 126,697 miles. Registered motor-cars numbered 360,000.

Aviation, under the auspices, chiefly, of foreign companies, has developed rapidly in the Republic. Aerial routes for mail and passengers have been organised from Buenos Aires to numerous points within the Republic and abroad.

National post office in 1929, handled, it is estimated, 2,300,000,000 pieces of mail and 8,279,920 telegrams. National telegraph lines, 75,247 miles in 1929. Number of telephone exchanges in Argentina in 1930, 493, with 241,170 subscribers. Telephone service is operated mainly by the United River Plate Telephone Company, and by the Compania Telefonica Argentina in Buenos Aires, both connecting with Chile and Uruguay; they have been absorbed by the International Telephone and Telegraph Company. There are 12 wireless stations. Wireless telephony between Buenos Aires, Chile, the United States and Europe is in general use.

International cable service to other Latin American countries and the United States is provided by All America Cables.

Banking and Credit.

According to the First Banking Census taken by the National Department of Statistics, on December 31, 1925, there were 112 banks in Argentina with 1,033,946,000 paper pesos of capital and reserves; 91 (1 State Bank—Banco de la Nacion—77 other Argentine banks, and 13 foreign banks) were ordinary Discount and Deposit Banks with capital and reserves amounting to 710,228,000 paper pesos, 15 were Mortgage Banks with 310,000,000 paper pesos of capital and reserves and 6 were Pignorative Banks whose capital and reserves amounted to 13,454,000 paper pesos.

The Banco de la Nacion (founded in 1905) reported September 30, 1931, capital of 162,065,785 paper pesos; reserves of 29,554,352 paper pesos (apart from the three special Conversion Funds totalling 34,313,274 gold pesos); cash, 1,269,467 gold pesos, and 205,000,000 paper pesos; deposits, 1,505,130,907 paper pesos, and 399,896 gold pesos. It has 231 branches. Although it is the State Bank, it is not a Central Bank in the ordinary sense; it does commercial banking in competition with others.

On April 5, 1915, a national postal savings bank (Caja Nacional de Ahorro Postal) was incorporated. On September 30, 1930, 4,718 branches had 1,397,592 depositors (12 per cent. of the population) with total deposits amounting to 96,871,162 paper pesos; 3,357 of the branches were in schools. The bank is also patronized largely by married women, who are given, by the law, exclusive control of their accounts.

In August, 1927, the Caja de Conversion returned to the gold standard after a suspension lasting for 13 years, undertaking to redeem paper pesos at the legal rate established in 1889, that is, 1 paper peso for 44 centavos in gold. But heavy withdrawals of gold to New York and London forced the Government to close the Caja de Conversion on December 17, 1929. On December 2, 1931, total stock of gold was 273,472,478 gold pesos; total circulation, 1,230,804,581 paper pesos. In April, 1931, the system was expanded to permit the Conversion Office to issue notes to the Banco de la Nacion, re-discounting prime commercial bills, providing that such notes do not reduce the gold cover below 40 per cent.

Money, Weights, and Measures.

The monetary system of the Republic is nominally on a gold exchange standard, the unit (for foreign transactions) being the peso oro (gold dollar) which weighs 1.6129 grammes of gold  $\frac{1}{10}$  fine. The Peso oro which is divided into 100 centavos, is of the value of 47.62*d.*; in 1931 the exchange value of the gold peso in London ranged between 41*d.* and 28*d.*; in New York, between 34.68 cents and 21.43*½* cents. One pound sterling (at par) = 5.04 gold pesos. Figures in gold pesos are followed by the abbreviation o/s (oro sellado, minted gold). The monetary law of November 5, 1881, authorizes the coinage of five and two-and-a-half gold peso pieces. The 5-peso gold piece (the Argentino) weighs 8.0645 grammes, .900 fine, and therefore contains 7.25805 grammes of fine gold.

Gold is not widely in circulation. The money in domestic circulation is chiefly paper (peso papel), though foreign coinages are legal tender at fixed rates. The paper peso is equal to  $\cdot 44$  gold peso, which makes it worth 1s. 8 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. (11 $\cdot$ 45 to the £). To convert paper pesos into gold pesos, multiply by  $\cdot 44$ . To convert gold pesos into paper pesos, multiply by 2 $\cdot$ 27. Figures in paper pesos are usually followed by the abbreviation m/n (moneda nacional, national money). Ten-centavo pieces of nickel are coined to meet the demand for small currency.

Since January 1, 1887, the use of the metric system is compulsory.

AUSTRIA.

(DIE REPUBLIK ÖSTERREICH.)

Constitution and Government.

THE Republic of Austria was proclaimed on November 12, 1918. The Government was taken in hand by a National Assembly which appointed a temporary cabinet and proceeded to pass laws. On February 16, 1919, the National Constitutional Assembly, consisting of only one Chamber, was duly elected on the basis of universal and proportional suffrage; every Austrian subject, male and female, has a vote if 21 years of age, and is eligible for election if 29 years of age. At the elections held on November 9, 1930, the following parties were returned:—Christian Socialists, 66; Social Democrats, 72; Economic Bloc, 19; Fascist Home Bloc, 8; total, 165.

The Constitution, which was adopted December 7, 1929, provides for a President, elected by all citizens of 21 years of age (who may also depose him); his term is for 4 years, and he appoints the ministry and has power to dissolve Parliament; for an Assembly (Nationalrat), elected by popular vote for 4 years; and for a First Chamber (Bundesrat), chosen by the Provincial Diets in proportion to their population (at present the members number 46). The powers of the Bundesrat are advisory. Austria is declared to be a Federal Republic composed of eight provinces and the city of Vienna. All special privileges are abolished, and equal rights granted to all citizens.

President of the Republic.—Dr. Wilhelm Miklas. Born October 15, 1872. Elected December 5, 1928. Re-elected October 9, 1931.

The Ministry, constituted on January 29, 1932, is as follows:—

Federal Chancellor and Minister of Foreign Affairs.—Dr. Karl Buresch (Christian Socialist).

Vice-Chancellor.—Franz Winkler.

Minister of Defence.—Karl Vaugoin (Christian Socialist).

Minister of Justice.—Dr. Schuschnigg.

Minister of Agriculture and Forestry.—Dr. Engelbert Dollfus (Christian Socialist).

Minister of Finance.—Dr. Otto Juch (Christian Socialist).

Minister of Commerce and Communications.—Dr. Eduard Heindl (Christian Socialist).

Minister of Education.—Dr. Emmerich Czermak (Christian Socialist).

Minister of Interior.—Herr Hantsch.

The national flag consists of three horizontal stripes, the top and bottom being red and the centre white.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

The Republic of Austria comprises 9 provinces, viz., the City of Vienna, Lower Austria, Upper Austria, Salzburg, Styria, Carinthia, Tyrol, Vorarlberg, and Burgenland. There is in every province a Provincial Assembly (Landtag), consisting likewise of one chamber which is elected on the basis of the same suffrage as the National Assembly. The cultivation of the soil, the educational, ecclesiastical, and charitable institutions, as also public works, chiefly fall within the competence of the provinces. At the head of the Provincial Assembly is the Provincial Committee (Landesausschuss) elected by the Provincial Assembly.

Every commune has a council to deliberate and decide its affairs. The members are mostly elected for 5 years. The council elects from its midst the head of the commune (burgomaster) and a committee for the administration of the affairs and execution of its resolutions. All who are 21 years of age have a vote, while for the passive suffrage the attained age of 24–30 years is required.

Area and Population.

For the boundaries of Austria according to the Treaty of St. Germain, signed on September 10, 1919, see THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK for 1920, pp. 674–5.

The area and population of Austria (census taken on March 7, 1923) are shown as follows:—

Compared with the total population in 1920, the total for 1923 shows an increase of 108,187, or 1.68 per cent., excluding Burgenland of 117,427, or 1.92 per cent. The male population (excluding Burgenland) has increased by 70,530 or 2.40 per cent. as compared with 1920. Estimated population December 31, 1930, 6,722,395.

PRINCIPAL TOWNS.

The population of the principal towns of Austria on March 7, 1923, was as follows:—Vienna, 1,865,780 (estimated pop. Dec. 31, 1930); Graz, 152,706; Linz, 102,081; Innsbruck, 56,401; Salzburg, 37,856; Wiener Neustadt, 36,956; St. Pölten, 31,576; Klagenfurt, 27,423; Baden, 22,217; Steyr, 22,111; Villach, 22,099; Mödling, 18,677; Wels, 16,418.

Religion.

Religious liberty is one of the fundamental laws of the Republic, and the principle is embodied in the Treaty of St. Germain (article 63). In 1910 there were (including Burgenland), 6,225,843 Catholics (93.68 per cent.), 206,505 Protestants (3.11 per cent.), 194,584 Jews (2.93 per cent.), and 19,052 'others' (0.28 per cent.). The Catholic Church has 2 archbishoprics and 4 bishoprics.

Education.

The educational organisation of Austria comprises : (1) elementary schools ; (2) middle schools ; (3) high schools ; (4) schools for special subjects ; and (5) universities and colleges.

Attendance is compulsory at the elementary schools from 6 to 14 in Austria generally, but there are far-reaching facilities for exemption for pupils of 12 years and upwards. The cost of elementary education is borne in the first instance by the communes and provinces. In 1929-30 there were in the Republic 5,325 public and private elementary schools, with 30,317 teachers and 792,623 pupils.

Secondary education is provided in the Gymnasias, Real-Gymnasias, Modern Schools and High Schools for women. These institutions are maintained by the State, the provinces, the towns, or private individuals. Of all kinds of secondary schools there were (1929-30) 157 with 51,982 pupils, and 4,348 teachers.

There are also 8 Commercial Academies with 214 teachers and 4,278 pupils.

Austria has three universities maintained by the State, viz., Vienna (in 1929-30, 912 teachers and 11,337 students), Graz (318 teachers and 2,154 students), and Innsbruck (253 teachers and 2,041 students); and there are also two technical high schools at Vienna (366 teachers and 3,563 students) and Graz (133 teachers and 847 students).

The theological high school (Fakultät) at Salzburg for Roman Catholics was, on November 25, 1928, proclaimed a free German Roman Catholic University with the right to confer degrees. Number of teachers (1929-30), 17, students, 145. There are also 13 other theological colleges, of which 11 are Roman Catholic, 1 Armenian Catholic, and 1 Jewish. In 1928 there were also 35 training colleges for teachers, with 775 lecturers and 5,285 students.

Justice and Crime.

The Supreme Court of Justice (Oberster Gerichtshof) in Vienna is the highest court in the land. Besides there are 3 higher provincial courts (Oberlandesgerichte), 19 provincial and district courts (Landes- und Kreisgerichte), and, in connection with these, the jury courts (Geschworenengerichte) and the Schöffengerichte, which are courts composed of professional and non-professional judges. In Vienna is a court for young criminals. There are likewise 244 county courts (Bezirksgerichte), and 1 special court for commercial affairs, 1 constitutional court, 1 administrative court, 1 electoral court, and 11 for industry.

In 1929, 114,673 persons were tried for criminal offences (111,406 in 1928).

Pauperism.

Funds for poor relief are derived from endowments, voluntary contributions, the third of the property left by intestate secular priests, and certain percentages on the proceeds of voluntary sales. In some provinces the poor funds are augmented from other sources, e.g. theatre money (Spektakelgelder), hunting licences, dog certificates, and in some large towns percentages on legacies over a fixed amount. Those who are wholly or partially unfit for work may be provided for in such manner as the commune judges propose. Besides poor-houses and money relief, there exists in many provinces the practice of assigning the poor—in respect of board and lodging—to each of the resident householders in fixed succession.

The law for unemployment insurance bears date March 24, 1920. The means for unemployment relief are contributed as to one-half by the employers, and as to the other half by the workers.

Finance.

The budgets for five years provided revenue and expenditure as follows, in thousands of schillings :—

Defence.

1. ARMY.

By the terms of the Treaty of St. Germain, universal compulsory military service is abolished in Austria, and the total number of military forces in the Austrian Army is limited to 30,000 men, including officers and dépôt troops. The effective strength in 1931 was 1,415 officers and 21,463 other ranks.

Austria is permitted at her own discretion to organise this number of troops either in divisions or in mixed brigades.

The latter organisation has been chosen, and the army has been organised in 6 mixed brigades and 1 independent artillery regiment.

The maximum authorised armaments and stocks of munitions are per 1,000 men :—

Rifles or carbines . . .	1,150	500 rounds of ammunition per arm.
Machine guns . . .	15	10,000
Trench mortars, light } . . .	2	{ 1,000
„ „ medium } . . .		{ 500
Guns „ field or } . . .	3	1,000
Howitzers „ mountain } . . .

All officers must be regulars. Officers now serving retained in the army must serve to the age of 40. Officers newly appointed must serve on the active list for 20 consecutive years.

The period of enlistment for non-commissioned officers and privates must be for a total period of not less than 12 consecutive years, including at least six years with the colours. The proportion of officers and men discharged for any reason before the expiration of their term of enlistment must not exceed one-twentieth of the total strength. All measures of mobilisation are forbidden.

The number of gendarmes, customs officers, foresters, and members of police forces must not exceed the number employed in a similar capacity in 1913. Educational establishments and all sporting and other clubs are forbidden to occupy themselves with any military matters. Within two months of the final ratification of the Treaty the air forces of Austria were demobilised. The armed forces of Austria therefore do not include any military or naval air forces. The manufacture, importation, and exportation of aircraft, and parts of aircraft, are forbidden.

The military budget for 1931-32 amounted to 103,022,700 schillings.

2. NAVY.

As Austria now has no seaboard, the former Austro-Hungarian fleet has ceased to exist.

Production and Industry.

Agriculture forms the main occupation of the country. In 1930 the total acreage sown amounted to 4,753,581 acres. Of the total in 1930, 2,134,713 acres were in Lower Austria, and 998,035 acres in Upper Austria.

The size of farms in Austria is as follows: under 0.5 hectare (1.2 acre), 11.1 per cent.; from 0.5 to 5 hectares (1.2 to 12.3 acres), 42.8 per cent.; from 5 to 20 hectares (12.3 to 49.4 acres), 31.1 per cent.; from 20 to 50 hectares (49.4 to 123.5 acres), 12 per cent.; from 50 to 200 hectares (123.5 to 494 acres), 2.5 per cent.; over 200 acres, 0.5 per cent.

The chief products are shown as follows for two years:—

In 1930 the production of lignite was 3,062,981 metric tons (3,524,792 metric tons in 1929), and of anthracite, 215,888 metric tons (208,020 metric tons in 1929). There were 4 anthracite mines worked in 1930, and 42 lignite mines. The output of iron ore was 1,180,500 tons in 1930. Some copper, zinc, lead, and salt (81,940 tons in 1930) are also produced.

Of important industries, piano-making and the manufacture of motor-cars, furniture, and textiles still remain in Austria to a certain extent. The knitting industry is an important branch of the textile industry, manufacturing principally sports knitted goods and hosiery. There were about 10,000 knitting machines in use in 1927. The 9 factories of the Austrian tobacco monopoly in 1930 made 223,475,000 cigars, 4,925,849,000 cigarettes, and 45,060 metric quintals of smoking tobacco.

The output of pig iron in 1930 was 296,824 tons as against 458,973 tons in 1929; the output of raw steel was 467,701 tons in 1930 and 631,933 tons in 1929.

BELGIUM.

(ROYAUME DE BELGIQUE—KONIGLIJK BELGIE.)

Reigning King.

Albert, born April 8, 1875, son of the late Prince Philippe, Count of Flanders, younger son of King Leopold I. (died November 17, 1905), and of the late Princess Marie de Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen (died Nov. 27, 1912); married Oct. 2, 1900, to Princess Elizabeth of Bavaria; succeeded his uncle Leopold II., Dec. 17, 1909.

Children of the King.—(1) Prince Leopold, Duke of Brabant, born Nov. 3, 1901; married on Nov. 4, 1926, to Princess Astrid of Sweden. Offspring:—Josephine Charlotte, born October 11, 1927. Prince Baudouin, born September 7, 1930. (2) Prince Charles, Count of Flanders, born Oct. 10, 1903. (3) Princess Marie-José, born Aug. 4, 1906, married to Prince Umberto, heir-apparent to the crown of Italy, on January 8, 1930.

Sisters of the King.—(1) Princess Henriette, born Nov. 30, 1870; married Feb. 12, 1896, to Prince Emmanuel of Orleans, Duke of Vendôme. (2) Princess Josephine, born Oct. 18, 1872; married May 28, 1904, to Prince Charles of Hohenzollern.

King Albert has a civil list of 9,500,000 francs.

The Kingdom of Belgium formed itself into an independent State in 1830, having from 1815 been a part of the Netherlands. The secession was decreed on October 4, 1830, by a Provisional Government, established in consequence of a revolution which broke out at Brussels, on August 25, 1830. A National Congress elected Prince Leopold of Saxe-Coburg King of the Belgians on June 4, 1831; he ascended the throne July 21, 1831. On his death in 1865 he was succeeded by his son, Leopold II., who reigned until 1909.

By the Treaty of London, Nov. 15, 1831, the neutrality of Belgium was guaranteed by Austria, Russia, Great Britain and Prussia. It was not until after the signing of the Treaty of London, April 19, 1839, which established peace between King Leopold I. and the King of the Netherlands, that all the States of Europe recognised the Kingdom of Belgium. In the Treaty of Versailles (June 28, 1919), it is stated that as the treaties of 1839 'no longer conform to the requirements of the situation,' these are abrogated and will be replaced by other treaties.

Constitution and Government.

According to the Constitution of 1831 Belgium is 'a constitutional, representative, and hereditary monarchy.' The legislative power is vested in the King, the Senate, and the Chamber of Representatives. The royal succession is in the direct male line in the order of primogeniture. By marriage without the King's consent, however, the right of succession is forfeited, but may be restored by the King with the consent of the two Chambers. No act of the King can have effect unless countersigned by one of his Ministers, who thus becomes responsible for it. The King convokes, prorogues, and dissolves the Chambers. In default of male heirs, the King may nominate his successor with the consent of the Chambers. If the successor be under eighteen years of age, the two Chambers meet together for the purpose of nominating a regent during the minority.

Those sections of the Belgian Constitution which regulate the organisation of the legislative power were revised in October 1921. For both Senate and Chamber all elections are held on the principle of universal suffrage.

The Senate consists of members elected for four years, partly directly and partly indirectly. The number elected directly is equal to half the number of members of the Chamber of Representatives. The constituent body is similar to that which elects deputies to the Chamber; the minimum age of electors is fixed at twenty-one years, and the minimum length of residence required is six months. In Belgium only the following women may vote in parliamentary elections: (1) Widows, not re-married, of soldiers killed in the Great War; widows of Belgian citizens killed by the enemy during the War, or, failing them, their mothers, if the latter are widows; (2) Widowed mothers of bachelor soldiers killed in the War; (3) Women condemned to imprisonment or subjected to preventive detention, for political reasons, during the enemy occupation of Belgium. In the election of members both of the Senate and Chamber of Representatives directly, the principle of proportional representation of parties was introduced by Law of December 29, 1899. Senators elected indirectly are chosen by the provincial councils, on the basis of one for 200,000 inhabitants. Every addition of 125,000 inhabitants gives the right to one senator more. Each provincial council elects at least three senators. There are at present forty provincial senators. No one, during two years preceding the election, must have been a member of the council appointing him. Senators are elected by the Senate itself in the proportion of half of the preceding category. The senators belonging to these two latter categories are also elected by the method of proportional representation. All senators must be at least forty years of age. They receive 28,000 francs per annum. Sons of the King, or failing these, Belgian princes of the reigning branch of the Royal Family are by right senators at the age of eighteen, but have no voice in the deliberations till the age of twenty-five years.

The members of the Chamber of Representatives are all elected directly by the electoral body. Their number at present, 187 (law of March 6, 1925), is proportioned to the population, and cannot exceed one for every 40,000 inhabitants. They sit for four years. Deputies must be not less than twenty-five years of age, and resident in Belgium. Each deputy has an annual indemnity of 42,000 francs, and a free pass all the year over Government and Companies' railways between his residence and the place of Session.

The Senate and Chamber meet annually in the month of November, and must sit for at least forty days; but the King has the power of convoking them on extraordinary occasions, and of dissolving them either simultaneously or separately. In the latter case a new election must take place within forty days, and a meeting of the Chambers within two months. An adjournment cannot be made for a period exceeding one month without the consent of the Chambers. Money Bills and Bills relating to the contingent for the army originate in the Chamber of Representatives.

Parties in the Chamber elected May 26, 1929:—Catholics, 77; Socialists, 70; Liberals, 28; miscellaneous, 12.

Parties in the Senate elected May 26, 1929:—Catholics, 70; Liberals, 23; Socialists, 55; miscellaneous, 5.

The Executive Government consists of 11 departments, under the following Ministers (appointed June 6, 1931):—

Prime Minister and Minister of Finance.—Jules Renkin (Catholic).

Minister of Foreign Affairs.—Paul Hymans (Liberal).

Minister of Justice.—Fernand Cocq (Liberal).

Local Government.

The provinces and communes (2,671 in 1930) of Belgium have a large measure of autonomous government.

In regard to the communal electorate, the law of April 15, 1920, definitely lays it down that all Belgians over 21 years of age without distinction of sex, who have been domiciled for at least six months, have the right to vote. Proportional representation is applied to the communal elections, and communal councils are to be renewed every six years. In each commune there is a college composed of the burgomaster, the president, and a certain number of aldermen.

Area and Population.

Belgium (including the districts of Eupen and Malmédy) has an area of 30,444 square kilometres, or 11,755 English square miles. The following table shows the population at various dates:—

Religion.

Of the inhabitants professing a religion the majority are Roman Catholic; but no inquiry as to the profession of faith is now made at the censuses. The State does not interfere in any way with the internal affairs of either Catholic or Protestant Churches. There is full religious liberty, and part of the income of the ministers of all denominations is paid from the national treasury.

In 1920 there were six Roman Catholic dioceses, 204 deaneries, 3,679 Catholic churches and chapels, 6 large and 11 small seminaries.

The Protestant (Evangelical) Church is under a synod.

Judges are appointed for life. There is one Court of Cassation, three Courts of Appeal, and Assize Courts for criminal cases. There are 26 judicial districts, each with a Court of first instance. In each of the 230 cantons is a justice and judge of the peace. There are, besides, various special tribunals. There is trial by jury.

Pauperism.

Apart from private charity, the poor are assisted by the communes through the agency of the bureaux de bienfaisance whose duty it is to provide outdoor relief, and by the governing bodies of the hospices civils. Provisions of a national character have been made for looking after war orphans and men disabled in the war. Certain other establishments, either State or provincial, provide for the needs of deaf-mutes and the blind, and of children who are placed under the control of the courts. Provision is also made for repressing begging and providing shelter for the homeless.

ARMY.

According to the Military Law passed in 1923, the Belgian Army is recruited by means of annual calls to the Colours and by voluntary enlistments. Military service is compulsory for those called to the Colours.

Voluntary enlistment is 5 years (for youths less than 17), 4 years (for youths less than 18), and 3 years (for youths over 18).

By the law of 1928 the period of service of 21,000 of the annual contingent is 14 months in the supplementary orders, 13 months for cavalry, horse artillery, and the routine troops of Liège, 12 months for the remainder. The rest of the annual contingent, about 23,000, does 8 months active service. The duration of military obligation is 25 years, of which 15 are in the Regular Army and reserve, and 10 years in the Territorial Army.

The total length of navigable waterways (rivers and canals) in 1929 was 1,036 miles.

In September 1926 the State handed over its control of the railways to a private company, the Société Nationale des Chemins de Fer Belges for a period of 75 years. The length of railway operated on January 1, 1931, was 2,985 miles of main line. There were also 187 miles of private railways and 2,921 miles of provincial lines. It is proposed to electrify the railway system of the country. Receipts in 1931 were 3,085·2 million francs, and expenditure was 3,022·2 million francs.

In 1930 the Post Office in Belgium handled 369,425,000 private letters, 71,235,000 official letters, 100,303,000 post-cards, 452,032,000 packets of printed matter, and 427,832,000 newspapers. On December 31, 1930, there were 1,705 post offices in Belgium. The gross revenue of the Post Office in the year 1930 amounted to 390,987,000 francs, and the expenditure to 478,960,000 francs (in 1929, 364,664,000 and 409,575,000 respectively).

A Régie of telegraphs and telephones for running the services on business lines was created by the law of July 19, 1930, effective Nov. 1, 1930. The following statistics relate to the first ten months of 1930, when the two systems were still controlled by the State. During this period the telegraph system carried 9,708,999 dispatches, of which 2,727,542 were official. Total length of public telegraph wires was 30,244 miles, and of line 6,251 miles. There were 1,577 telegraph offices. Receipts for the period were 56,922,341 francs; expenditure, 58,984,413 francs.

In 1930 there were 183 radiograph stations and 29,002 radiotelegrams were despatched (January–October, 1930).

On October 31, 1930, the telephone service comprised 445 exchanges, connecting 493 public telephone stations and 220,033 subscribers. There were 1,269,787 miles of telephone line in service, including 1,022,316 miles of local line, 200,504 miles of inter-urban line and 46,968 miles of international lines, and the total number of calls, including 2,402,000 long-distance calls, was 183,816,000. Receipts in the ten months period under State control, 222,724,000 francs; expenditure, 117,514,000 francs.

Money and Credit.

The franc, containing 0·0418422 gramme of fine gold, is the unit of currency.

No gold has been minted since 1882 (save only 5,000,000 francs struck in 1914), and no silver 5-franc pieces since 1876.

On October 26, 1926, the Belgian franc was stabilised and the paper currency relinked to gold, when all notes of the National Bank of Belgium became payable in gold or its equivalent in foreign currency. A new currency unit—called the Belga, with a weight of 0·20921 grammes of fine gold—has been introduced. One belga equals five paper francs and 35 belgas equal £1 gold. The franc, however, remains the basis of the monetary system, and will continue to circulate in the country, and is the medium of exchange in all domestic business. New nickel coins of the value of 5 francs or 1 belga were put into circulation in 1930; 20-franc nickel pieces are shortly to be minted. The use of the belga is compulsory in all foreign exchange transactions. To provide the necessary funds, a stabilisation loan for the equivalent of 100,000,000 dollars was floated abroad.

The one bank of issue in Belgium is the National Bank, instituted 1850. By law of March 26, 1900, its constitution was modified, and its duration extended to January 1, 1929. In 1926 its privileges were prolonged for a further 25 years. Its capital and reserve amounted in 1927 to 264,063,000 francs. It is the cashier of the State, and is authorised to carry on the usual banking operations. Its reserve, in gold or foreign gold securities, must be equal to 40 per cent. of its right engagements, 75 per cent. of which must be in gold. Its position on February 11, 1932, was (in thousands of belgas):—

Gold and silver . . .	2,586,294	Notes in circulation . .	3,728,219
Securities . . . .	927,153	Treasury bills . . . .	14,247
		Private bills . . . .	50,782

There are joint-stock and private banks, also agricultural banks, credit unions, and popular banks.

The popular savings bank in Belgium is mainly concentrated in the Caisse Générale d'Epargne et de Retraite, at Brussels. The Caisse d'Epargne is a private company with legally regulated functions and operates under the supervision of the Minister of Finance. It co-operates with the Belgian postal service, thus obviating any need of a postal-savings system. On December 31, 1930, this institution had 4,966,604 accounts, with deposits amounting to 7,768,177,000 francs.

The weights and measures are those of the metric system.

BELGIAN CONGO

(CONGO BELGE.)

Constitution and Government.—The Congo Independent State was founded in 1885 by Leopold II., King of the Belgians, and the State was placed under his sovereignty.

The annexation of the State to Belgium was provided for by treaty of November 28, 1907, which was approved by the chambers of the Belgian Legislature in August and September and by the King on October 18, 1908. The Minister for the Colonies is appointed by the King, and is a member of the Council of Ministers. He is President of the Colonial Council, consisting of 15 members, 8 of whom are appointed by the King, and 3 chosen by the Senate and 3 by the Chamber of Representatives. One of those appointed by the King, and one chosen by the Legislative Chambers, retire annually, but may be re-appointed. The King is represented in the Colony by a Governor-General, assisted by several Vice-Governors-General. The budget is presented to the Chambers, and voted by them; the financial accounts have to be verified by the Court of Accounts. An annual report on the Congo Administration has to be presented to the Chambers.

The Annexation has been recognised by all the Powers.

Governor-General.—Lieut.-General Tilkens (appointed December 27, 1927).

The precise boundaries of the Congo Colony were defined by the neutrality declarations of August, 1885, and December, 1894, and by treaties with Germany, Great Britain, France, and Portugal.

The territory is divided into twenty-two administrative districts:—Lower Congo, Urban district of Léopoldville, Kwango, Sankuru, Kasai, Lake Leopold II., Equator, Lulonga, Bangala, Ubangi, Uele-Itimbiri, Uele-Nepoko, Kibali-Ituri, Stanleyville, Aruwimi, Kivu, Maniema, Lomami, Tanganyika—Moero, Lulua, Elisabethville, and Upper Luapula. The last five districts form the Province of Katanga, with its capital at Elisabethville; the first five districts form the Province of Congo-Kasai, with Léopoldville as its capital, the five next districts form the Province of Equator, with its capital at Coquilhatville, and the remaining seven districts form the Eastern Province, with its capital at Stanleyville. The capital of the Colony, formerly Boma, was, by royal decision (1923), changed to Léopoldville. At the head of each Province there is a governor, and at the head of each district a commissioner. Each district is divided into territories of which there are 182 in the whole country.

The districts of Ruanda and Urundi (formerly in German East Africa) have been ceded to Belgium as mandatory of the League of Nations. Area about 20,550 square miles. Both districts were united administratively with the Congo, under the direction of a Vice-Governor, by a law of August 21, 1925. Ruanda-Urundi is populated by three races—the Wa-tusi, the Wa-hutu, and the Batwa. Both districts are rich in cattle. The frontier was formally ratified on October 20, 1924. Usumbura is the capital.

On July 22, 1927, a convention was signed between Belgium and Portugal by which the former ceded to the latter territory in the extreme south-west portion of the Belgian Congo, having an area of 3,500 square kilometres (480 square miles), in return for a cession by Portugal of an area in the estuary of the Congo, near Matadi, of three square kilometres. Belgium further undertook to commence the construction of a railway to link up with the Portuguese railway (the Lobito Bay-Katanga line). This railway was opened on July 1, 1931.

Area and Population.—The area of Belgian Congo is estimated at 918,000 square miles. The population of Bantu origin according to the latest census was 8,803,422. The white population on January 1, 1931, numbered 25,179. Of these, 17,432 were Belgians, 906 English, 564 Americans, 1,543 Portuguese, 1,489 Italians, 649 French, 361 Dutch, 648 Greeks, 354 South Africans, and 263 Swiss.

Kiswahili is the language spoken by the natives who have been under Arab influence. Bangala is the commercial language on the Upper Congo; Fiote is used on the Lower Congo.

Religion and Education.—The religion of the natives consists of a gross fetishism, but mission work is actively carried on. There were, on January 1, 1931, 2,321 missionaries, of whom 1,623 were Catholic and 698 Protestant. In education they co-operate with the Government. The school statistics give 254,035 children as receiving elementary education. Several educational bodies direct under control of the Government establishments for general and professional training, especially at Boma, Léopoldville, Moanda, Lusambo, Kabinda, Stanleyville, Buta, Elisabethville and Bunia. In 1931 the Government grant to the missionaries for general purposes amounted to 11,255,971 francs, while the total expenditure on education was 23,879,043 francs. An organised medical service exists on which, in 1931, the Government spent 92,134,821 francs. The income from a special fund of 150 million francs is also applied to the medical service.

Justice.—There are 8 courts of first instance, 22 district courts, 22 prosecutors' courts, 182 police courts, and 2 courts of appeal (one at Léopoldville and the other at Elisabethville).

Finance.—Estimates of ordinary revenue and expenditure for five years (in francs):—

—	1927	1928	1929	1930	1931

For 1931 the ordinary receipts and expenditure were estimated as follows:—

Defence.—The Colony possesses a force of native troops amounting to 177 European officers, 198 European non-commissioned officers and 14,300 natives, including the recruits and about 6,500 men of the territorial police. The force is recruited by conscription and voluntary enlistment. The term of service is five years, and the recruits are trained in three camps of instruction before being drafted to their units.

Production.—The chief vegetable products in the order of their importance are palm-oil, cotton, palm-nuts, rice, copal, coffee, cacao and rubber. Ivory is very abundant. Cattle thrive satisfactorily in all districts where there is no tsetse fly, notably in the highlands of Katanga, Ituri and Kivu. Mining flourishes, the chief minerals being copper, diamonds, gold, tin, cobalt, uranium, radium, coal and iron. The gold mines in 1930 produced 6,540 kilos, chiefly from the Kilo-Moto mines. The most important mines in the Congo are the copper mines near Kambove in Haut Katanga, operated by the Union Minière du Haut Katanga. The total output from these mines in 1931 was 120,000 metric tons of copper. The Union Minière produces radium from the Chinkolobwe mines. The output of diamonds (chiefly from the mines of the Forminière company in the Kasai district) in 1930 amounted to 2,519,948 carats, of radium 60 gr., of coal 133,800 tons, of tin 1,662 tons, of cobalt 600 tons.

Commerce and Shipping.—The value of the commerce for six years was as follows (in francs):—

According to the Board of Trade Returns the imports into the United Kingdom from the Belgian Congo in 1931 amounted to the value of 209,754*l.*; and the exports of British produce and manufactures to the Belgian Congo to 447,614*l.*; re-exports from U.K. were 33,654*l.*

At the port of Boma in 1930 there entered 291 sea-going vessels of 1,076,542 tons. In the coasting trade there entered 119 vessels, including sailing ships, of 8,267 tons, and there cleared 122 vessels, including sailing ships, of 8,680 tons. The two other ports are Banana and Matadi. In 1930, 584 steamships with tonnage of 2,154,633 entered, and 558 with tonnage of 2,166,019 cleared the three ports of Belgian Congo.

Internal Communications.—The Congo is navigable for 95 miles from its mouth to Matadi, and on this section 15 steamers belonging to the State ply. Above this, for over 249 miles, are numerous rapids, which render the river unnavigable as far as Stanley Pool (Léopoldville). Above the Pool there are about 1,068 miles of navigable water, as far as Stanley Falls, while several of the great tributaries are navigable over a considerable extent of their course (total, 6,279 miles). Above the Stanley Falls the Congo is called Lualaba and is navigable for 585 miles, from Ponthierville to Kindu and from Kongolo to Bukama (Katanga).

There were (January 1, 1931) 21,180 miles of road. The total length of railways on January 1, 1931, was 2,422 miles. A new line is being constructed from Buta to Dembia and Zobia, from Bondo to Bangassou, and from Uvira to Costernansville.

An important development in 1911 was the construction of a pipe line from Matadi to Léopoldville, 246 miles long, for the purpose of transporting crude oil for the use of river steamers. It has a diameter of 4 inches, with 8 pumping stations capable of delivering 50,000 tons of oil at Léopoldville, the terminus. The concession is for 70 years, at the expiration of which period all the pipe lines, with the material, except the vessels and stores of petroleum, will pass into the hands of the Congo Government.

From Léopoldville a river transport service as far as Stanleyville and the tributaries of the Congo is carried out by different companies, of which the chief is the Unatra Company. The fleet of the various companies consists of 270 steamers and 491 barges.

There is a regular air service between Léopoldville and Luluabourg with intermediate stages. The distance is 612 miles. There is also a service between Léopoldville and Stanleyville (1,062 miles) with stages at Banundu, Inongo, Coquillhatville, Basankuru, Lisala and Basoko.

In 1931 there were 78 post offices. There were in addition 76 special telegraph offices. In the internal service (1930) 2,885,500 letters, papers, &c., were transmitted; and in the external, 5,398,800 were handled. The Congo is included in the Postal Union. Total length of telegraph lines 4,190 miles. In 1930, 189,300 internal and 132,400 foreign telegrams were transmitted, besides 35,900 official telegrams. There are 25 stations of wireless telegraphy in the Belgian Congo. There were 60 telephone offices and 15 central stations serving 1,365 subscribers, 4,000 miles of telephone lines, and 5,540 miles of telephone wire. Number of calls in 1930, 2,354,400.

Money and Credit.—The monetary unit is the franc equivalent to one-fifth of the belga and containing 0·0418422 gramme of fine gold. This value was fixed by an agreement with the Banque du Congo Belge on October 10, 1927, approved by Royal Decree on November 14, 1927, authorising the Bank to issue notes in Belgian Congo and Ruanda-Urundi. The notes at present in circulation are of a nominal value of 1,000, 500, 100, 50, 20, and 5 francs. By Royal Decree of December 28, 1920, the Government was authorised to issue copper-nickel coins in denominations of 1 franc and 50 centimes. There are also perforated coins, also in copper-nickel, of 20, 10 and 5 centimes. The notes and coins in circulation in the Colony are not legal tender in Belgium. Eight banks are in existence, of which the three most important are the 'Banque du Congo Belge,' the 'Banque Commerciale du Congo,' and the 'Banque Belge d'Afrique,' all three with branches in all the commercial centres.

Weights and Measures.—The Metric System was introduced by law on August 17, 1910.

British Consul.—H. Kelsall (at Léopoldville).

There are British Vice-Consuls at Elisabethville and Stanleyville.

BHUTÁN.

STATE in the Eastern Himálaya, between 26° 45' and 28° N. latitude, and between 89° and 92° E. longitude, bordered on the north and east by Tibet, on the west by the Tibetan district of Chumbí and by Sikkim, and on the south by British India. Extreme length from east to west 190 miles; extreme breadth 90 miles. Area about 18,000 square miles; population estimated at 300,000.

The original inhabitants of Bhután, the Tephús, were subjugated about two centuries ago by a band of military colonists from Tibet. In 1774 the East India Company concluded a treaty with the ruler of Bhután, but repeated outrages on British subjects committed by the Bhután hill men led from time to time to punitive measures, usually ending in the temporary or permanent annexation of various duars or submontane tracts with passes leading to the hills. In November 1864 the eleven western or Bengal duars were thus annexed. Under a treaty signed in November, 1865, the Bhután Government was granted a subsidy of Rs. 50,000 a year on condition of good behaviour. By an amending treaty concluded in January, 1910, the British Government undertook to exercise no interference in the internal administration of Bhután. On its part the Bhutanese Government agreed to be guided by the advice of the British Government in regard to its external relations. The treaty also provided for the increase of the subsidy to Rs. 1,00,000.

The form of Government in Bhután, which existed from the middle of the sixteenth century until 1907, consisted of a dual control by the clergy and the laity as represented by Dharma and Deb Rájás. In 1907 the Deb Rájá, who was also Dharma Rájá, resigned his position, and the Tongsa Penlop, Sir Ugyen Wangchuk, G.C.I.E., K.C.S.I., was elected as the first hereditary Maharaja of Bhután. He died on August 21, 1926, and was succeeded by Maharaja Jik-me Wang-chuk, K.C.I.E.

Chief fortresses or castles : Punakhá, a place of great natural strength ; Tásichozong (Tashichödzhong), Pàro, Angduphorang (Wangdupotrang), Trongsa, and Byaka.

The people are nominally Buddhists, but their religious exercises consist chiefly in the propitiation of evil spirits and the recitation of sentences from the Tibetan Scriptures. Tásichozong (Tashichödzhong), the chief monastery in Bhután, contains 300 priests.

Beyond the guards for the defence of the various castles, there is no standing army.

The chief productions are rice, Indian corn, millet, lac, wax, different kinds of cloth, musk, elephants, ponies, chowries, and silk. Extensive and valuable forests abound. Muzzle-loading guns and swords of highly-tempered steel are manufactured.

His Highness keeps an Agent at Kalimpong who is also Assistant to the Political Officer in Sikkim for Bhutanese affairs.

BOLIVIA.

(REPÚBLICA BOLIVIANA.)

Constitution and Government.

THE Constitution of the Republic of Bolivia (so named in 1825) bears date October 28, 1880. Executive power is vested in a President, elected for four years by direct popular vote, and not eligible for re-election, as well as two Vice-presidents similarly elected. There is a Congress of two chambers, called the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies, which sits at La Paz. The suffrage is possessed by all males over 21 years of age who can read and write and have an 'assured income.' There are 16 Senators (2 for each Department) elected for six years (one-third retiring every two years), and 70 Deputies elected for four years (one-half retiring every two years); both by direct vote of the people. Senators and Deputies receive a salary of 900 bolivianos (70*l.*) per month. Sittings, as a rule, last for 60 days, but may be extended to 90 days. Extraordinary sessions may be held for special purposes. The President's Cabinet consists of the secretaries of six departments—Foreign Relations and Worship; Finance, Industry and Agriculture; Government and Justice; Public Works, Posts and Telegraphs; War and Colonisation; and Education. In June, 1930, after a revolution of short duration, President Siles fled the country and a Military Junta assumed control.

President of the Republic.—Dr. Daniel Salamanca. Elected January 5, 1931; assumed office March 10, 1931, for the period 1931–1935.

The Republic is divided into 8 departments, 3 territories, 72 provinces administered by sub-prefects, and 681 cantons administered by corregidores. The supreme political, administrative, and military authority in each department is vested in a prefect. The territories in the north-west of the Republic and in the Chaco and Oriente are governed by three officials, called delegados nacionales. Prefects and sub-prefects are appointed by the President of the Republic; corregidores and village alcaldes are appointed annually by the prefects of the provinces. The capital of each department has its municipal council; the subdivisions have municipal boards, and the still smaller subdivisions have municipal agents.

Bolivia's most serious boundary difficulty is with Paraguay, its southern neighbour, and grows out of a long-standing dispute as to where the frontier line crosses the Gran Chaco. Bolivia claims all the Chaco between the Pilcomayo and Paraguay rivers, whereas the Paraguayan claim would cut her off from the Paraguayan River. Clashes between the garrisons in the disputed territory brought both nations to the verge of war in December, 1928, but the dispute was submitted to an international commission for mediation in January, 1929.

The boundary line between Bolivia and Peru in the peninsula of Copacabana is (1932) being delimited by a joint commission. That between Argentine and Bolivia was determined by treaty which was ratified in 1929.

The following table shows area and population of the different political divisions (the capitals of each are given in brackets):—

Departments and Territories	Area : square miles	Census 1900	Estimated 1929	Per square mile 1929
La Paz (La Paz)	40,686	445,616	736,985	18.1
Cochabamba (Cochabamba)	25,288	328,168	542,785	21.6
Potosí (Potosí)	45,061	325,615	538,521	11.9
Santa-Cruz (Santa-Cruz)	144,941	209,592	346,686	2.3
Chuquisaca (Sucre)	86,132	204,434	327,929	9.0
Tarija (Tarija)	81,667	102,887	170,160	5.4
Oruro (Oruro)	20,657	86,081	142,366	6.8
El Beni (Trinidad)	95,354	32,180	53,221	0.5
El Chaco (Villa Montes)	46,561	—	—	—
Colonial Territories (Riberalta)	27,938	10,000	52,730	1.8
Total	514,155	1,744,568	2,911,283	5.6

Another official estimate puts the population at 2,974,904. Boundary disputes make exact calculations of area impossible; one official estimate puts the area at 506,467 square miles, exclusive of the area disputed by Paraguay.

The 1929 estimate showed 1,586,649 Indians, 426,212 whites and 898,429 mixed races. Other estimates (1930) distribute the population thus: Indians, 57 per cent.; mixed, 30 per cent.; white 13 per cent.; and 6,000 Chinese, Negroes, etcetera.

Of the population (1900) not under 7 years of age, 564,000 were engaged in agriculture; 399,037 in the industries; 55,521 in commerce; 49,647 in the liberal professions; 36,285 in domestic service; 12,625 in mining, and 3,106 in artistic professions. The foreign population numbered 7,425, of whom 2,072 were Peruvian.

The language of the educated classes is Spanish, that of the natives Qüechüa and Aymara.

The estimated population (1929) of the principal towns: La Paz (the actual seat of government, though Sucre is nominally the capital), 146,930; Cochabamba, 36,196; Potosí, 34,083; Sucre (the legal capital and the actual seat of the Judiciary, the University, and the Archbishop), 34,577; Tarija, 11,543; Oruro, 40,700; Santa-Cruz, 30,323.

Religion, Education, and Justice.

The Roman Catholic is the recognised religion of the State; the exercise of other forms of worship is permitted. The religious orders have 17 convents (9 for males and 8 for females); the male members number about 230, the female 280; there are about 567 secular clergy. In 1900 the non-Catholic population numbered 24,245. The Church is under an archbishop (resident in Sucre) and 6 bishops (La Paz, Cochabamba, Santa-Cruz, Oruro, Potosí, and Tarija). The maintenance of the Church costs the State 120,000 bolivianos a year, 23,000 bolivianos being devoted to the propagation of the faith among the Indians. By a law of March 19, 1912, all marriages must be celebrated by the civil authorities.

Primary instruction, free and obligatory, is under the care of the municipalities and the State. In 1926 there were 1,598 elementary schools with 2,765 teachers and 79,973 pupils. For secondary instruction there were 27 colleges (17 national), 5 clerical institutions, and 5 private lyceos with, in all, 403 teachers and 4,213 pupils. For special instruction there are 22 establishments with 177 professors and 1,913 students. At Sucre and La Paz are the only two universities which possess more than one faculty. The University at Sucre, known as the St. Francis Xavier University, is one of the oldest in America, having been founded in 1624. There are also a number of training colleges for teachers, including one (1931) for Indians. There are eight institutions offering university instruction; they have 107 teachers and 802 students. In all departmental capitals there are public libraries; at La Paz there is a museum, and at La Paz, Oruro and Potosí are mineralogical museums.

The judicial power resides in the Supreme Court, in superior district courts, and in the courts of local justices. The Supreme Court sitting at Sucre has 7 judges; the district courts have each 5 judges; there are local tribunals and parish alcaldes. Public justice is directed by an Attorney-General and by district and local attorneys. The administration of justice is free.

Finance.

The revenue of Bolivia is derived mainly from customs duties, spirit duties, export duties on tin, silver, gold, wolfram, antimony, lead and other minerals, rubber export, patents, and stamps. Tin is the chief single source of revenue; the government levies an export duty of  $7\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. on the gross value, plus a tax on profits which may run as high as 35 per cent., and various special charges for the State's 'social services.' Domestic taxes are collected through the National Tax Collecting Company. The chief branches of expenditure are public debt, war, and instruction. The budget estimates of ordinary revenue and expenditure for 6 years were as follows:—

—	Revenue	Expenditure	—	Revenue	Expenditure
	Bolivianos	Bolivianos		Bolivianos	Bolivianos
1927	49,185,126	50,807,124	1930 <sup>2</sup>	82,514,161	48,766,608

<sup>3</sup> Decrease due to closing down of tin mines which normally contribute 10,500,000 bolivianos in export duties and income tax as well as contributing a large part of the 13,000,000 bolivianos of customs revenue. Executive has asked permission to borrow 15,000,000 bolivianos.

In 1928, following the recommendations of the Kemmerer Financial Mission, Congress enacted various laws providing for the legal stabilization of the currency, for the reorganization of the National Bank on the lines of a central bank, for the reform of the budget system and the collection and expenditure of revenues and for taxes on incomes, personal property and real estate.

The principal items of expenditure in the 1931 budget were (in bolivianos): public debt, 5,739,800; war ministry, 9,302,612; instruction, 3,362,300; interior, 2,069,000; communications, 1,740,691; justice, 1,462,600.

The public debt of Bolivia on June 30, 1930, amounted to 199,590,715 bolivianos, being external debt, 175,508,473 bolivianos; internal, 11,951,525 bolivianos; and floating, 12,130,717 bolivianos. Total on December 31, 1930, 211,210,503 bolivianos. Only 4 million bolivianos were available for external debt service in 1931; payment of interest due January and March, 1931, on the 1927 and 1928 loans was postponed. British investments are estimated at around 8,600,000; American investments (U.S. Department of Commerce estimate) at end of 1930, 116,043,000 dollars, of which 61,619,000 were direct investments and 54,424,000 public loans floated in United States.

Defence.

The territory of the Republic is divided into 3 military districts, the Northern, the Central, and the Southern, and 3 'military commands' formed of the departments Santa Cruz, El Beni, Tarija, and the Territories.

The law of December 15, 1915, provides for a permanent force of 8,577 men, to which is added an annual contingent of conscripts divided into two categories, the total number of effectives being about 8,000. Military service is compulsory for all males from the 19th to the 50th year. Those from 19 to 25 years of age serve not more than 2 years with the standing army; those from 25 to 30 years of age, 'the ordinary reserve,' return at some time for 3 months' service. After this the men pass to the 'extraordinary reserve' for 10 years, and finally complete their service by 10 years' enrolment in the Territorial Guard.

The permanent army consists of 12 infantry regiments, each of 2 battalions; 6 cavalry regiments, each of 4 squadrons; 3 mountain artillery regiments, each of 2 batteries; a field artillery regiment of the same strength; 3 regiments of engineers; 1 aviation corp.

In addition to the above troops there are small bodies of infantry of from 100 to 200 men (called columnas) at the chief towns of departments, which can be expanded to battalions, if necessary. There also exist other units, for garrisoning the North, the North West, the South West, and the East, consisting of 300 men each.

The infantry armament is the Mauser (Bolivian Model) rifle of 1898.

Production and Industry.

The extensive and undeveloped region of Bolivia lying east of the Andes comprises about three-quarters of the entire area. It is estimated that about 4,940,000 acres are under cultivation, but agriculture is in a backward condition. Irrigation by means of artesian wells is being attempted in some regions. Potatoes, cacao, coffee, barley, coca, highland rice, and rubber are the principal products. Bolivia ranks as the second rubber-exporting country of South America, coming next to Brazil. Tropical forests with woods ranging from the 'iron tree' to the light palo de balsa await exploitation. The public lands of the State have an area of about 245,000 square miles, of which 104,000 square miles are reserved for special colonisation. In 1929 it was estimated that there were 1,854,915 cattle, 5,552,074 sheep, 747,581 goats, 1,882,000 llamas and alpacas, 335,580 pigs, and 375,738 equines.

Mining is practically the only important industry, and Oruro is its centre. The mineral wealth of Bolivia includes tin, silver, copper, lead, zinc, antimony, bismuth, wolfram, gold, and borate of lime. Bolivia produces one quarter of the total tin output of the world, standing next to the Malay Peninsula in the production of this metal. The capital invested in mining on December 31, 1929, was 338,651,668 bolivianos, of which 139,111,332 was Bolivian and 199,540,336 foreign. Practically all the tin ore is shipped to Great Britain, where it is reduced to tin in pigs and reshipped to the United States, which is the ultimate consumer of the bulk of Bolivian tin. Under the International Tin Restriction scheme, Bolivia, June 1, 1931, accepted a quota of 28,818 tons per annum for 1932 and 1933. Production of minerals in 1930 and 1929 was, in metric tons, as follows: Tin (metal equivalent), 38,755 and 47,081; silver, 220 and 193; lead, 12,016 and 14,961; copper, 3,986 and 7,188; zinc, 6,027 and 1,395; antimony (metal equivalent), 1,159 and 3,778; bismuth, 61 and 151; wolfram, 532 and 978. Output of gold, 1930, was 16,479 ounces; of silver, 7,091,100 ounces. Bismuth is mined in La Paz and Potosi by an international company which adjusts production to market demand. Next to China, Bolivia is the world's chief source of antimony. Large deposits of common salt are found near Lake Poopó and in the south of Bolivia. Surface indications of petroleum and gas abound in the whole territory between the Argentine frontier and the north-west territory bordering Peru; the Standard Oil Company with 16 wells is developing production at Chaco Oriental.

Commerce.

The value of imports and exports for five years are given as follows (13'33 bolivianos = £1.) at par:—

—	1926	1927	1928	1929	1930
	Bolivianos	Bolivianos	Bolivianos	Bolivianos	Bolivianos
Imports . . .	70,831,460	66,104,672	62,699,055	71,417,273	56,829,898
Exports . . .	122,681,387	127,083,926	115,906,853	160,617,974	107,805,247

Tin ore has usually constituted in value about 90 per cent. of Bolivia's exports since 1920, but in 1929, owing to the sharp decline in prices, export of tin (102,590,522 bolivianos) constituted only 63 per cent. of the value of total exports. Other principal exports in 1929 were silver, 7,076,679 bolivianos ; copper, 5,336,927 bolivianos ; lead, 3,644,392 bolivianos ; rubber, 2,894,991 bolivianos ; tungsten (or wolfram), 1,573,492 bolivianos ; antimony, 1,445,224 bolivianos ; bismuth, 1,187,004 bolivianos ; and hides, 1,047,440 bolivianos. In 1929 the United States furnished 33·73 per cent. of imports, Great Britain, 16·58 per cent., and Germany, 13·63 per cent. ; of exports, Great Britain took 77·22 per cent., and the United States, 13·93 per cent.

Bolivia having no seaport, imports and exports pass chiefly through Arica, Mollendo, Antofagasta, and river-ports on the Paraguay, Iténez, Madeira, and the Upper Acre rivers. The chief imports are sugar, flour, coal, iron and steel products, mining machinery, rice, wines and spirits, textiles, and ready-made clothes.

Communications.

In 1930 the total length of railway open in Bolivia was 1,384 miles, including the new line, opened in July, 1917, from Oruro to Cochabamba ; 175 miles are under construction from Cochabamba to Santa-Cruz. The principal line is the Antofagasta and Bolivian Railway, from Antofagasta, on the Pacific coast (in Chile), to Ollague, thence to Oruro, thence to Viacha, thence to La Paz. Total length in Bolivia, 575 miles. Under the Bolivian-Chilian treaty of October 24, 1904, the Arica-La Paz line (276 miles, of which 151 miles are in Bolivia) was built from La Paz via Lluta with Taregra and to Corocoro. The Bolivian section was handed over to the Government of Bolivia on May 13, 1928 ; the Bolivian section is managed by a Bolivian company.

The Lloyd Aero Boliviano, under the supervision of the War Ministry, has established a number of routes since 1927 ; principal one is from Cochabamba to Santa-Cruz. Passengers carried (1930), 3,715.

Traffic on Lake Titicaca is carried on by the steamers of the Peruvian Corporation. About 12,000 miles of rivers, in three systems, are open to navigation by light-draught vessels.

There are about 6,843 miles of cart roads connecting the more important towns. Of main highways there were (1929) 1,789 miles passable throughout the year and 1,107 passable during the dry season ; 1,264 miles were under construction.

In Bolivia there were, in 1929, 454 post offices. Number of pieces of mail handled, domestic, 2,251,500 ; foreign, 2,605,695 pieces.

There are (1930) about 5,927 miles of telegraph lines. Number of telegrams dispatched, 1929, 855,876 ; received, 964,468. There are 318 telegraph, telephone and wireless offices. The Bolivian Power Co. was given in 1928 a concession to build and operate a countrywide telephone system ; an exchange was opened in Oruro in 1930.

Banking, Money, Weights, and Measures.

On July 1, 1929, on the recommendation of the Kemmerer Mission, the Banco Central de Bolivia was inaugurated at La Paz, taking over the assets of the Banco de la Nación Boliviana; it acts as a central Bank of issue. On August 31, 1931, the bank's reserves were 28,800,000 bolivianos (legal reserve, 24,500,000 bolivianos); note circulation, 28,400,000 bolivianos; deposits, 10,200,000 bolivianos. On December 31, 1930, it had paid-up capital of 23,823,000 bolivianos; gold, 2,779,000; reserves, 6,155,827; notes in circulation, 31,794,887; deposits, 14,659,267. Its gold reserves include silver and nickel coins; on December 31, 1930, nickel coins in the gold reserve totalled 1,344,000 bolivianos.

On July 11, 1928, a monetary law was passed providing for the adoption of a gold standard, which went into effect by presidential decree on September 2. Notes of the Banco Central de Bolivia (which has a monopoly of the note issue) are convertible on demand into gold or gold exchange. The unit of account is the gold boliviano containing 0.54917 grams of fine gold. In U.S. money the new boliviano = 36.5 cents. But on September 23, 1931, gold payments were suspended. The law provides for the minting of coins of ten and twenty bolivianos, the former to be called a 'Bolívar' and the latter a 'Double Bolívar,' the 'Bolívar' to weigh 6.10189 grams of 900 fine. There is no Bolivian gold yet in circulation. Gold coins of the United States circulate at the rate of 2.7899 bolivianos to the dollar. Gold is legal tender up to any amount, and silver up to 10 bolivianos. Silver coins are minted in denominations of 1 boliviano (15 grams 800 fine), one-half, and one-fifth bolivianos. But paper notes in denominations of 1, 5, 10, 20, 50 and 100 bolivianos are the chief circulating medium.

The metric system of weights and measures is used by the administration and prescribed by law, but the old Spanish system is also employed. The quintal is equal to 101½ lbs.

BRAZIL.

(ESTADOS UNIDOS DO BRASIL.)

Constitution and Government.

BRAZIL was discovered on May 3, 1500, by the Portuguese Admiral Pedro Alvares Cabral, and thus became a Portuguese settlement; in 1815 the colony was declared 'a kingdom,' and on May 13, 1822, Dom Pedro, eldest surviving son of King João VI. of Portugal, was chosen 'Perpetual Defender' of Brazil by a National Congress. He proclaimed the independence of the country on September 7, 1822, and was chosen 'Constitutional Emperor and Perpetual Defender' on October 12, 1822. In 1889 his only son, Dom Pedro II. (born 1825, died 1891), was dethroned by a revolution, and Brazil declared a Republic under the title of the United States of Brazil.

The existing constitution, adopted in 1891 and modified in 1926, was reaffirmed by the Military Junta, which took over control in October, 1930. The following text describes the old constitution. The United States of Brazil consists of twenty States, the Federal Territory of the Acre, and one Federal District. Each of the old Provinces forms a State, administered at its own expense without interference from the Federal Government save for defence, for the maintenance of order, for the reorganization of the State finances when payments on its funded debt are suspended for more than two years, and for the execution of the Federal laws and judgments. Control of import duties, stamps, rates of postage, and bank-note circulation belongs to the Union; but export duties as well as taxation on real property, professions and industries, are the property of the various States.

The National Congress, which consists of the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate, meets usually on the 3rd of May at Rio de Janeiro (the Federal capital) and sits four months, but may be prorogued or convoked extraordinarily. Deputies and Senators are paid, and cannot become Ministers of State without resigning their seats in Congress. The Chamber of Deputies consists of 212 members elected for three years by direct vote (providing for the representation of the minority). No State has less than four representatives. The Chamber initiates legislation relating to taxation, to fixing the strength of land and sea forces, and in proceedings against the President of the Republic and Secretaries of State. Senators, 63 in number, are chosen by direct vote, three for each State, and for the Federal district, for nine years, one-third being elected every three years. The Vice-President is President of the Senate.

The President of the Republic must be a Brazilian by birth, over thirty-five years of age. His term of office is four years, and he is not eligible for the succeeding term. He and the Vice-President are elected by the people directly, by an absolute majority of votes. The election is held on the 1st of March in the last year of each presidential period. No candidate may be related by blood or marriage, in the first or second degree, to the actual President or Vice-President, or to one who has ceased to be so within six months.

The President appoints and dismisses ministers, is in supreme command of the army and navy, and, with the authorization of the National Congress, when recourse to arbitration has failed, has the power to declare war and make peace. He (with the consent of the Senate) appoints the members of the Supreme Federal Tribunal and the diplomatic ministers. No minister can appear in Congress, but must communicate by letter, or in conference with committees of the Chambers.

The franchise extends to all citizens not under twenty-one years of age, duly enrolled, except beggars, 'illiterates,' soldiers actually serving, and members of monastic orders, &c., under vows of obedience. The State of Rio Grande do Norte has enfranchised women, several of whom have been elected to city councils.

President of the Republic.—Dr. Getulio Vargas. Assumed office November 3, 1930, after a military uprising in various states and the capital had forced the resignation of President Washington Luis Pereira de Souza and prevented the installation of Dr. Julio Prestes, elected March, 1930. National and State legislatures have been dissolved, pending a revision of the constitution and the electoral laws.

There are 7 Secretaries of State at the head of the following Departments:—1. Finance, 2. Justice and Interior, 3. War, 4. Marine, 5. Foreign Affairs, 6. Communications and Public Works, 7. Agriculture. In addition President Vargas established ministries of: 8. Labour, Industry, and Commerce, and 9. Instruction and Public Health.

I. LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

Each State is organised under the republican form of government, with administrative, legislative, and judicial authorities distinct and independent. However, taxes on inter-state commerce, which previously flourished, were abolished by a decree of the Provisional Government, to take effect January 1, 1932. The governors and members of the legislatures are elected, but magistrates are appointed and are not removable from office save by judicial sentence. Each State is governed by its own Constitution and laws which must agree with the constitutional principles of the Union; if they infringe the latter, the Federal Government, after due process of Federal law, has the power to interfere even by force of arms, if necessary. The Federal District is administered by a council elected by the citizens of the District, the municipal executive authority being exercised by a Prefect appointed by the President of the Republic. At present (1932) the States and the Federal District are being administered by Interventors or Delegates appointed by the Federal Government.

In 1920 the population consisted of 15,443,818 males and 15,191,787 females. Of these 1,565,961, or 5 per cent., were foreigners, viz., 558,405 Italians, 433,575 Portuguese, 219,142 Spaniards, 52,870 Germans, 50,251 from Asiatic Turkey, 33,621 Uruguayans, 27,976 Japanese, 26,354 Austrians, 22,117 Argentinians, and 141,650 other nationalities. Some 100,000 Indians are to be found in the Amazon area. The language is Portuguese, though Italian and German are widely used in the Southern States.

In 1929 the estimated population of Rio de Janeiro was 1,468,621; São Paulo, 879,788; S. Salvador, 329,898; Recife, 340,543; Belem, 279,491; Curitybe, 100,135; Porto Alegre, 273,376; Manáos, 83,736; Nictheroy, 108,233; Bello Horizonte, 108,849; Fortaleza, 98,848; Maceió, 103,930; São Luiz, 62,895; Parahyba, 74,104.

The number of immigrants between 1820 and 1930 was 4,518,558, including 1,480,000 Italians, 1,288,000 Portuguese, 574,000 Spaniards, 198,000 Germans, 110,000 Russians and 89,000 Austrians. In 1930 the number of immigrants was 67,066, including 18,719 Portuguese, 14,067 Japanese, 4,253 Italians, 4,719 Poles, and 4,180 Germans.

Religion.

The population is overwhelmingly Roman Catholic, but in 1889 connection between Church and State was abolished, and absolute equality declared among all forms of religion. The Government left to the Church all religious buildings and their properties and income; religious orders are allowed and are prosperous. They maintain 6 seminaries; there is a Cardinal whose seat is at Rio de Janeiro and who acts as an Archbishop, and there are besides 14 archbishops, 44 suffragan bishops, 7 prelates, and 3 apostolic prefects. There are 20 seminaries. There are eight leading Evangelic sects (and innumerable small ones), while Judaism, Buddhism, Mahometanism, Spiritualism, and Positivism have many followers. Evangelic sects maintain 10 seminaries.

Education.

Education is free but not compulsory, except in some States (e.g. Ceará, Maranhão, Alagoas, Matto Grosso, Minas Geraes, S. Paulo, Santa Catharina). The Union Government undertakes to provide, in part, for higher or university instruction within the Union, but there are institutions of this nature maintained, some by the States, and some by private associations; while primary schools are chiefly maintained and supervised, either by the States or by the municipalities and private initiative. There is one official university in Brazil, the University of Rio de Janeiro (Federal District), founded on September 7, 1920, and two private universities, at Bello Horizonte (Minas Geraes) and Curityba (Paraná); there are moreover 56 faculties which confer degrees. At the Capital are maintained by the Federal Government a school for the blind; another for deaf and dumb; a School of Fine Arts; and a National Institute of Music, there being similar private institutions in the Federal District and some States. There are seven engineering and mining polytechnics at Rio de Janeiro (University), S. Paulo, Rio Grande do Sul, Bahia, Minas Geraes, and Pernambuco; 19 schools of medicine, pharmacy and dentistry; 12 schools of law and social sciences; and 97 industrial schools, 41 agricultural, and 48 commercial schools. The Oswaldo Cruz Institute, in Rio de Janeiro, is devoted to experimental medicine, and the Butantan Institute, in S. Paulo, to the preparation of anti-ophidic serum.

There were in January, 1930, in the various States, 29,430 primary schools with 2,052,000 pupils, and 47,000 teachers. There were also in the States 212 secondary schools recognized by the National Department of Education, and 367 professional schools with more than 37,000 pupils. There are 76 teachers' training schools.

Justice.

There is a supreme Federal court of Justice at Rio de Janeiro, which celebrated its centenary on January 20, 1929; it has 11 justices appointed by the President; there are also Federal judges in each State. Justice is administered in the States in accordance with State law, by State courts, but in Rio de Janeiro Federal Justice is administered. Judges are appointed for life. There are also municipal magistrates and justices of the peace, who are elected for four years, and whose chief function is to settle cases up to a certain amount. Capital punishment has been abolished. There is no divorce.

Finance.

Receipts and expenditures in recent years have been as follows (1 gold milreis = 4.567 paper milreis = at par about 6d. sterling = 12 cents. U.S.):—

—	Revenue		Expenditure
	(Gold) Milreis	(Paper) Milreis	(Gold) Milreis	(Paper) Milreis
1927 <sup>1</sup>	177,123,000	1,230,577,000	108,567,911	1,136,017,152

The budget of 1932, converted at the rate of 1 gold milreis = 6.75 paper, was: revenue, 2,132,119 contos of reis paper; expenditures, 2,126,525 contos; surplus, 5,594 contos.

The consolidated Federal foreign debt of Brazil on December 31, 1930, amounted to 100,569,755*l.* (British), 193,556,110 gold francs, 135,778,500 paper francs, and 143,336,998 dollars (United States); service on this debt for 1931 called for 7,307,374*l.*, 17,010,021 francs and 14,851,842 dollars (United States). Inability to secure sufficient foreign exchange for service on this foreign debt forced Brazil in October, 1931, to tender 5 per cent. scrip as interest payments on all but three of her foreign loans; the situation will be reviewed in 1932 to see if cash payments can be resumed. Internal funded debt, December 31, 1930, was 2,533,916 contos paper; in addition, inconvertible Treasury notes in circulation totalled 2,543,570 contos paper. External debts of the States and of the Coffee Institute, on December 31, 1930, totalled about 94,000,000*l.* British investments on January 1, 1931, were 287,306,750*l.*, of which 168,708,033*l.* were in Federal, State, Coffee and Municipal bonds, and 48,668,538*l.* in railway securities; American investments on that date (U.S. Department of Commerce estimate) totalled 557,001,000 dollars, of which 346,835,000 were in governmental bonds.

Defence.

Army.—Under the military law of 1923 military service is obligatory on every Brazilian from 21 years of age to 44. The terms of service are 9 years (from the 21st to the 30th years of age) in the army 'first line' (1 in the ranks, the rest in the reserve), and 14 years (from the 30th to the 44th years of age) in the army 'second line' (7 in the 'second line' and 7 in the reserve of the same). The reservists are called up for training annually for 4 weeks, besides which there is rifle practice once a month. The men in the territorial army also have an annual training of 2 to 4 weeks. The total peace strength for 1930 was 47,103 officers and men, organized in 4 divisions, 3 cavalry divisions, 1 mixed brigade, and 1 coast defence district.

Mobilisation would yield about 120,000. The military police under the War Office number 33,450, capable of expansion to 130,000. Infantry are armed with the Mauser rifle, the field and horse artillery with 75 mm. guns.

There is 1 river monitor (Pernambuco), 2 river gunboats, 11 destroyers, 4 submarines (of which only one is of an ocean-going type), and a submarine depôt and salvage vessel. The cruisers Bahia and Rio Grande do Sul were refitted in 1925–26, new engines and oil-fired boilers being installed.

There are three naval arsenals—at the Ilha das Cobras (Rio de Janeiro), Pará, and Ladario de Matto Grosso (this latter a river arsenal).

Rio de Janeiro (Federal District) is the seat of the military college, the general staff school, the military school, the veterinary school, the school of aviation, the improvement school for officers, the naval school of war, and the professional schools of the navy. In the State of Rio de Janeiro is the naval school.

Production and Industry.

Brazil is an agricultural country, though only a small fraction of its soil has been brought under culture, and she is a heavy importer of wheat and flour. After exchanging with the United States in August, 1931, 1,275,000 bags of Santos coffee for 25,000,000 bushels of wheat, Brazil prohibited further imports of wheat flour for 18 months. The cultivated area covers about 17,887,000 acres, of which 4,133,000 acres are in coffee, 6,919,000 in maize, 1,500,000 in cotton, and 1,315,000 in rice. Coffee, the chief product cultivated, accounts annually for from 60 to 75 per cent. of Brazil's total exports. The four States of São Paulo, Rio de Janeiro, Espírito Santo, and Minas Geraes are the principal districts for coffee growing. Brazil, with 2,579,859,000 coffee trees, has two-thirds of the world total of 3,866,697,000 trees. Three-fourths of the coffee of the world comes from these parts. Sales are now controlled by the National Coffee Council, under Government supervision. The average annual crop of Brazil in the past has been about 13 million bags (1 bag = 132 pounds); exports, 1931, 17,291,143 bags; 1930, 15,288,409 bags. Brazil is the second largest producer of cacao; output, 1930, 1,032,947 bags of 60 kilos. Tobacco is grown; output, 1930, 88,234 metric tons. Exports of orange are growing,—in 1931, 1,704,311 boxes.

Indiarubber is another great natural product of the country, the principal rubber-growing districts being the Acre Territory and the States of Amazonas and Pará. The best rubber to be found on the world's markets, the 'fine hard Pará,' comes from Pará, but production has declined.

The chief crops, with estimated production and value for 1929 were:—

Crops	Amount	Value	Crops	Amount	Value
	(Metric tons)	£		(Metric tons)	£
Coffee . . .	1,390,330	55,613,500	Maté . . .	210,850	3,373,000

The census of cattle for 1920 showed that there were in Brazil 34,271,324 oxen; 16,168,549 swine; 7,933,437 sheep; 5,086,655 goats; 5,253,699 horses; 1,865,259 asses and mules.

Both the forests and mines of Brazil are important. Total exports of timber 1930, 115,549 metric tons. Manganese ores, found in Minas Geraes, are the principal mineral export; exports in 1930, chiefly to the United States, were 192,122 metric tons. Coal deposits exist in Rio Grande do Sul, Santa Catharina, Paraná, and São Paulo. Total reserves are estimated at about 5,000 million tons, and the annual output, from 7 mines, about 370,000 tons. Iron is found chiefly in Minas Geraes. At Itabira foreign capital is now opening up what is believed to be one of the richest iron ore deposits in the world. Gold is found in practically every State, though large scale mining is confined to a single mine in Minas Geraes; the production in 1930 was 96,750 ozs. Export of gold has been forbidden since 1918; the output is used to guarantee the inconvertible Treasury and Bank notes. Diamond districts are Diamantina, Grão Mogol, Chapada Diamantina, Bagagem, Goyaz, Matto Grosso, and other States. Exports in 1929 were valued at 56,105£. A great part of the world's supply of monazite comes from Brazil, chiefly from Bahia and Espírito Santo; total exports of precious stones, 1930, were valued at 89,000£.

The most important manufacturing industry in Brazil is cotton weaving, protected by a tariff wall since April, 1929. There were in 1929, 347 cotton factories with 2,620,471 spindles and 78,910 looms. There are also 13 silk mills, 35 woollen mills, 16 jute mills, 18 paper mills (output, about 70,000 metric tons annually), over 2,000 tobacco factories, and approximately 216 sugar factories. In Rio de Janeiro flour milling is important, wheat being imported chiefly from the Argentine and Uruguayan Republics and the United States. There are 15 packing houses. There are about 500 hydro-electric plants, with a combined capacity of 700,000 horse-power.

Shipping and Navigation.

Inland waterways, mostly rivers, are open to navigation over some 40,800 miles. By means of its waterways Brazil is connected with the neighbouring States. All coasting and river vessels must be Brazilian. Merchant shipping under Brazilian flag in 1931 included 14 sailing vessels of 4,846 tons, and 269 steam vessels of 440,048 gross tons. Rio de Janeiro and Santos are the two leading ports.

Internal Communications.

Railway history in Brazil begins in 1854 with 89 miles. On December 31, 1930, the total length of railways 19,840 miles, with 4,200 locomotives, 65,013 freight waggons and 5,488 passenger cars. Of this total 11,829 miles were the property of the Union, 2,952 were operated under Federal concessions, and 5,024 miles belonged to the States. The Central Brazil Railway (1,817 miles) is the principal railway in Brazil, and is owned by the State. The entire system joins up the railways of Brazil with those of Uruguay, Argentina and Paraguay. The Paulista railway is electrified from Jundiahy to Rincão (177 miles), and the Oeste de Minas railway from Barra Mansa to Augusto Pestana, a length of 44 miles. The total length of highways in 1930, was 70,370 miles, of which 13,330 miles were first-class roads, and 57,040 miles second-class roads.

Of the telegraph system of the country about half, including all inter-State lines, is under control of the Government. There are 75,000 miles of line, including 46,291 miles of Government property, 7,516 miles of railway property and 21,196 miles of submarine cables. In 1928 there were 5,115 telegraph offices. Three submarine cables connect Brazil with Europe, 2 with the United States, and 3 with the River Plate. All-America Cables operates land lines between São Paulo and Santos, and submarine cables from Rio de Janeiro and Santos, linking those points with all Latin America and the United States. Telephone service in the State of Rio Grande do Sul as well as point-to-point radio telegraph service between the cities of Rio de Janeiro, Porto Alegre, São Paulo, Florianópolis and Curitiba are furnished by the Companhia Telefonica Rio Grandense.

About 40 wireless stations, including one very powerful one, have been established; there are 485 wireless land stations. Radio telephonic communications with the United States was opened in December, 1931.

Brazilian Post-office, with 4,870 offices, during 1929 handled inland 335,010,200 letters, 12,723,200 post-cards, 538,397,200 printed packets; received from abroad 44,222,600 letters and 972,300 post-cards; sent abroad 32,410,200 letters and 1,304,800 post-cards.

Since 1927 several companies, especially the Compagnie Generale Aeropostale, the Kondor Syndicate and the Pan American Airways, furnish air-mail and passenger services; in 1930 62 planes carried 46,667 passengers and 32 tons of mail.

A decree was issued in 1913 adopting the standard time and longitude of Greenwich (instead of that of Rio de Janeiro) as from January 1, 1914.

Money, Credit, and Banking.

A law, passed December 18, 1926, set up a new unit of account called the cruzeiro, a gold coin to contain 2 grammes of gold .900 fine. Gold coins of 2, 5 and 10 cruzeiros will eventually be minted, along with subsidiary token coinage. In the meantime the unit is the milreis (1,000 reis) which was stabilized at that time as follows: 1 gold milreis = 4.567 paper milreis =  $5\frac{1}{2}$ d. (sterling at par) = 11.96 cents (U.S.). But in its 1931 finances, the Government reckoned 1 gold milreis = 6.75 paper milreis = 4d. sterling. To convert gold milreis into paper, multiply by 6.75. The exchange value of the gold milreis in London in 1931 ranged between  $4\frac{1}{2}$ d. and  $2\frac{1}{2}$ d.; in New York between 9.60 cents and 5.45 cents. The currency in use is chiefly paper, of the following denominations: 1, 2, 5, 10, 20, 50, 100, 200, 500 and 1,000 milreis. The last-named is always called '1 conto of reis.'

A law of April, 1927, placed the volume of currency under control of the Caixa de Estabilização, but the Provisional Government on November 22, 1930, abolished the bureau and transferred its functions, with certain restrictions, to the Bank of Brazil.

Total paper currency in circulation, December 31, 1930, had been reduced to 2,713,600,000 milreis (about $6,500,000), but its convertibility into gold had been suspended by the decree of November 22, which transferred the entire gold reserve abroad to protect the foreign exchange value of the milreis.

The Bank of Brazil with an authorised capital of 70,000 contos of reis (increased in June, 1921, to 100,000 contos of reis) had, in 1931, 83 branches throughout the Republic. Its reserves, September 30, 1931, stood at 211,055 contos; current accounts, 1,451,165 contos; collateral loans, 1,406,627 contos; cash on hand, 220,575 contos; notes in circulation, 170,000 contos.

Weights and Measures.

The metric system has been in use in all official departments since 1862. It was made compulsory in 1872, but the ancient measures are still partly employed in certain rural districts of the interior. They are:—

The Libra	.	.	.	=	1·012 lbs. avoirdupois.
„ Arroba	.	.	.	=	32·38 „ „
„ Quintal	.	.	.	=	129·54 „ „
„ Alqueire (of Rio)	.	.	.	=	1 imperial bushel, or 40 litres.
„ Oitava	.	.	.	=	55·34 grains.

Boris III, eldest son of Ferdinand of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, and of the late Marie Louise (died January 31, 1899), eldest daughter of Robert the last reigning Duke of Parma, born January 30, 1894, succeeded to the throne on the abdication of his father, October 3, 1918, married October 25, 1930, to Princess Giottanna of Savoy, daughter of King Victor Emanuel III of Italy.

Brother and Sisters of the King.—(1) Prince Cyril, born November 17, 1895; (2) Princess Eudoxia, born January 17, 1898; and (3) Princess Nadejda, born January 30, 1899; m. January 24, 1924, to Duke Albert Eug ne of W rttemberg.

According to the Constitution the Sovereign and the heir to the throne must profess the Orthodox religion, and must reside permanently in the country. The royal title is hereditary.

The civil list is fixed (1932) at 5,000,000 leva, besides 23,550,000 leva for the maintenance of palaces, &c.

Constitution and Government.

The Principality of Bulgaria was created by the Treaty of Berlin, signed July 13, 1878. On October 5, 1908, Bulgaria declared her independence, and the Powers recognised Bulgarian independence, and the title of 'King of the Bulgarians' assumed by Prince Ferdinand. On September 18, 1885, the province of Eastern Rumelia was united with Bulgaria.

On September 30, 1912, Bulgaria allied with Serbia, Greece and Montenegro commenced war on Turkey (First Balkan War), which was ended by the Treaty of London on May 30, 1913, by which Turkey ceded to the Allies all its European territory west of a line drawn from Midia on the Black Sea to Enos on the Aegean, and also Crete. Crete was eventually ceded to Greece.

The Balkan League broke up almost immediately after the signing of the Treaty of London, owing to disagreements among the allies as to the division of the territory ceded to them, and on June 29, 1913, war broke out among the allies (Second Balkan War). On July 10, 1913, Rumania intervened to impose peace on the allies and to exact for herself from Bulgaria an extension of her frontier. Peace came finally on August 10 (July 26 old style), 1913, by the Treaty of Bukarest, between Bulgaria on the one hand, and Rumania, Serbia, Greece and Montenegro on the other.

By the Constitution of 1879, amended May, 1893, and June, 1911, the legislative authority was vested in a single Chamber, called the Sobranje or National Assembly, composed of 227 members. The members are elected by universal manhood suffrage at the rate of one member to every 20,000 of the population. On April 13, 1927, the Sobranje agreed to adopt the principle of proportional representation. Every member receives 400 levas a day (including Sundays and holidays) during the session. All over 30 years of age who can read and write (except the clergy, soldiers on active service, persons deprived of civil rights, &c.) are eligible as representatives. The duration of the Assembly is four years, but it may be dissolved at any time by the King, when new elections must take place within two months. Laws passed by the Sobranje require the assent of the King. Questions concerning the acquisition or cession of territory, changes in the constitution, a vacancy on the throne, or the appointment of a regent have to be decided by a Grand Sobranje, elected for the special purpose in a manner similar to that in which the ordinary Sobranje is elected, but with double the number of members.

Parties in the Sobranje (elected June 21, 1931):—Liaptchef Coalition, 82; National Bloc (194) consisting of: Agrarians, 74; non-Radoslavist Liberals, 32; Democrats, 44; Radicals, 6; Social Democrats, 5; Communists, 33. Total, 276.

The executive power is vested in a Council of Ministers nominated by the King. The cabinet (appointed October 12, 1931) is composed as follows:—

Premier and Minister for Foreign Affairs and Public Worship.—Nicholas Moushanoff (Democrat).

Minister of Interior.—Dr. Alexander Ghirghinoff (Democrat).

Minister of Education.—Constantine Muravieff (Agrarian).

Minister of Justice.—Dimitri Varbenoff (National Liberal).

Minister of Commerce.—Gheorghi Petroff (National Liberal).

Minister of Finance.—Stephen Stephanoff (Democrat).

Minister of Public Works.—Gheorghi Yordanoff (Agrarian).

Minister of Posts and Railways.—Stoian Kosturkoff (Radical).

Minister of Agriculture.—Dimitri Ghiltcheff (Agrarian).

Minister of War.—General Kissioff.

For local administration the country is divided into a number of Departments, each under a Prefect assisted by a Departmental Council and aided by several sub-prefects. Each community has its Kmet or mayor and its Council.

Area and Population.

The area of Bulgaria is 103,146 square kilometres, or 39,814 English square miles, and the census population on December 31, 1926, was 5,478,741 (2,743,025 males and 2,735,716 females), as against 4,846,971 (2,420,784 males and 2,426,187 females) in the census of 1920. Population on June 30, 1931, was estimated at 6,006,000 (3,013,000 males and 2,993,000 females); 20·7 per cent. of the population was urban and 79·3 per cent. rural.

By the Peace Treaty of Neuilly, signed on November 27, 1919, Bulgaria ceded Thrace to the Allied and Associated Powers and the Strumnitza line and a strip of territory on the north-west frontier to Serbia. Bulgaria was deprived of its Aegean littoral, but an efficient economic outlet to the same sea was promised to her by the Treaty, but has not yet been put into effect.

Religion and Education.

The national faith is that of the Orthodox Church, though, in 1870, in consequence of its demand for and acceptance of religious autonomy, the Bulgarian Church was declared by the Patriarch of Constantinople to be outside the Orthodox Communion. The Church is governed by the Synod of Archbishops. There are 11 Dioceses, viz., Sofia, Plovdiv, Stara Zagora, Sliven, Varna, Ruse, Tirnovο, Vratza, Lovetch, Vidin and Nevrokop, in addition to 4 in Macedonia and 1 in Thrace (suspended at present). In addition to the Archbishops in charge of these dioceses there are Bishops of Bregalnitz, Dragovitza, Nichava, Velitza, Vranitza and Znepolye. The clergy, both Orthodox and of other religious bodies, are paid by the State and also receive fees for services at burials, marriages, &c. There were, according to the last census of 1926, 4,568,773 members of the Orthodox Church of Bulgaria, 789,296 Moslems and 40,347 Catholics, 6,735 Protestants, 46,431 Jews, 25,402 Armenian-Gregorians, and 1,757 others.

Elementary education is obligatory and free for children between the ages of 7 and 14. The census of 1926 showed that 26·53 per cent. of the male population and 53·60 per cent. of the female population were illiterate.

The following are the educational statistics of Bulgaria for 1929-30 :—

Justice.

The lowest Court is that of the Justices of the Peace, who possess jurisdiction in minor civil and criminal cases. The Departmental Court, or Court of First Instance, is competent to pronounce sentence of death and penal servitude, and also acts as a Court of Appeal. Above these are three Courts of Appeal, sitting at Sofia, Plovdiv and Ruse. The highest tribunal is the Court of Cassation, sitting at Sofia, and composed of 12 judges.

Defence.

The pre-war peace strength of the Bulgarian army was about 3,900 officers and 56,000 other ranks. Its war strength was approximately 500,000 men.

Under the terms of the Treaty of Neuilly of November 27, 1919, the total military forces of Bulgaria must not in the future exceed 20,000 men, enrolled by voluntary system. The obligatory military service is abolished. All measures of mobilisation are prohibited and, in order to prevent the formation of a reserve, service in the ranks is to be for a minimum period of 12 years. Officers serving at the time when the treaty was signed must undertake to serve at least till the age of 40 and newly appointed officers serve for at least 20 years.

A frontier guard of 3,000 men voluntarily enlisted is permitted, and in addition the number of armed gendarmes, police, customs officials and forest guards must not exceed 10,000.

The maximum authorised armaments and munition supplies are :—

	Per 1000 men.	Munitions per arm.
Rifles or carbines . . .	1,150	500 rounds
Machine guns . . .	15	10,000 "
Trench mortars, light . .	2	1,000 "
"    " heavy . . .	2	500 "
Guns or howitzers . . .	3	1,000 "

No military or naval aircraft is permitted.

The manufacture of arms, munitions and war material is only to be carried out at one factory under State control. The importation and exportation of arms and munitions are prohibited.

In 1931 the strength of the active army was 972 officers, 17,088 other ranks, organised in 8 infantry regiments each of 3 battalions, 3 cavalry regiments each of 4 squadrons, 8 artillery groups each of 3 batteries, 3 battalions of engineers and auxiliary services. The gendarmerie numbered 361 officers and 6,137 other ranks, and the frontier guard 152 officers and 2,810 other ranks.

The military budget for 1929-30 amounted to 1,120,000,000 levas.

Under the terms of the treaty Bulgaria has surrendered all warships and submarines, but is permitted to maintain on the Danube and along the coast 4 torpedo boats and 6 motor boats, now of little value, all without torpedoes and torpedo apparatus, for police and fishery protection duties.

Production and Industry.

Agriculture is the chief occupation of the people. Land is held in absolute freehold by the owners and there is a land tax. The communes hold pasture-land and wood-land in perpetuity and pay no rent, and over such lands the members of the communes have grazing and wood-cutting rights.

According to the census of 1926, 80·02 per cent. of the population (2,464,421) were engaged in agriculture, most of them being small proprietors holding from one to six acres. The methods of cultivation are primitive, but machinery is being gradually introduced.

The total area of Bulgaria is 10,314,620 hectares, or 25,786,550 acres; of this the cultivated area is 3,716,070 hectares, or 9,182,409 acres, and the forest area 2,881,264 hectares, or 7,203,160 acres (841,100 hectares belonging to the State and 1,516,162 hectares to the municipalities).

The area and yield of cereals for 2 years are given as follows:—

Fruit grows in abundance, especially in the neighbourhood of Kustendil. The area under vines was 200,000 acres in 1929, and the vintage about 19,800,000 gallons. Cotton in 1929 yielded 9,063 quintals, and in 1930, 9,707 quintals from 13,715 acres and 13,937 acres respectively. Sugar production in 1930 was 312,467 metric tons, the area under beet being 51,385 acres; 15,354 acres were under rose cultivation in 1931, producing 1,863 kilogs of essence, as against 16,540 acres and 2,068 kilogs in 1930. Tobacco

According to the census of December 31, 1926, there were in Bulgaria 8,739,803 sheep; 1,817,437 cattle; 1,260,647 goats; 1,002,089 pigs; 482,180 horses; 27,057 mules; 185,814 donkeys.

Industry is not much developed, though the State encourages industrial enterprise. On January 1, 1930, there were 1,158 'encouraged' undertakings in operation. Mining development has been slow. The country is rich in coal; there are three State mines (at Pernik, Bobovdol and Maritza), and several privately-owned mines. Total coal production in 1930, 1,593,041 metric tons, of which 1,396,238 tons came from State mines and 196,803 tons from privately-owned mines, compared with 1,651,819 tons (1,444,604 tons from state mines and 207,215 tons from private mines) in 1929. The following were the principal minerals in 1930 in metric tons (figures for 1929 in parentheses):—copper, 27,448 (31,370); zinc-lead 2,762 (11,396); lead-copper 9,737 (9,923); aluminium 5,747 (3,613); salt 1,704 (1930), (3,653).

CHILE.

(REPÚBLICA DE CHILE.)

Constitution and Government.

THE Republic of Chile threw off allegiance to the Crown of Spain, constituting a national government on September 18, 1810, finally freeing itself from Spanish rule in 1818. By the Constitution which came into force on October 18, 1925, legislative power is vested in the National Congress, consisting of the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies, both of which are nominally elected by direct popular vote, though by a national agreement reached by the various political parties in February, 1930, the election scheduled for March 29 was waived and a Congress, selected by the parties, began its sessions in May. The Senate consists of 45 members, elected for eight years, who represent 9 provincial groups of departments. Each group elects five senators. One-half the Senate is renewable every four years. The Chamber of Deputies consists of 132 members elected by departments or groups of departments, one member for every 30,000 inhabitants or fraction of not less than 15,000. Electors are all registered citizens of 21 years of age or over, who are able to read and write; electorate numbers 368,436 of whom 287,000 participated in the presidential election of October 4, 1931. All voting is by ballot. Congress sits from May 21 to September 18. The President of the Republic is elected for a term of six years, by direct popular vote. A retiring President is not re-eligible. In legislation the President has a modified veto; a bill returned to the Chambers with the President's objections may, by a two-thirds vote of the members present (a majority of the members being present), be sustained and become law. The validity of all elections of President, Deputies and Senators is determined by a special body called Tribunal Calificador, consisting of five members chosen by lot from among the following: One each from past-presidents or vice-presidents of the Chamber and Senate; two from members of the Supreme Court; and one from members of the Court of Appeal of the city where Congress meets. The capital is Santiago.

President of the Republic.—Señor Juan Esteban Montero. Elected October 4; assumed office December 4, 1931.

The salary of the President is fixed at 120,000 pesos, with 30,000 pesos for expenses.

The President is assisted by a number of Ministers of State, one for each ministry, who constitute a Cabinet and who are responsible to him. Ministers may speak in Congress but do not vote.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

For the purposes of local government the Republic is divided into Provinces, presided over by Intendentes; and the Provinces into Departments, with Gobernadores as chief officers, appointed by the President. The Departments constitute one or more municipal districts each with a council or municipality of 5 to 15 members, elected for three years. The Federal Government in 1930 took over control of the finances of the 65 Departments, to safeguard a loan made to them in New York of 15 million dollars.

Area and Population.

Chile is divided into 15 provinces and 2 territories. All provinces except two now extend from the Pacific to the international boundary, while the inter-provincial boundaries in most cases now follow watersheds instead of rivers, thus confining within one province the waters of a single system and avoiding jurisdictional disputes.

For an account of the dispute between Chile and Peru regarding the provinces of Tarapacá and Tacna-Arica, see the STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK for 1931, p. 718.

The present areas of the various provinces and their populations, as determined by the census of 1920 and that of November 27, 1930, are as follows:—

Many islands to the north, west, and south belong to Chile. The coast-line is about 2,485 miles in length; the average width of the country, 100 miles.

In 1885 the population of the present area numbered 2,507,380; in 1895, 2,695,911; in 1907, 3,231,496; of the 3,753,799 shown by the census (of 1920, which included Tacna, since handed over to Peru), 1,865,827 were males and 1,887,972 females. Of the total population in 1930 49·4 per cent. were urban. The great majority of the population is of European origin. The indigenous inhabitants are of three branches, the Fuegians, mostly nomadic, living in or near Tierra del Fuego: the Araucanians (101,118) in the valleys or on the western slopes of the Andes; the Changos, who inhabit the northern coast region and work as labourers. The total number of foreigners included in the census of 1920 was 120,436, as against 134,524 in 1907.

The two leading cities, with census population in 1930, are Santiago, 696,231, and Valparaiso, 193,205; Viña del Mar has 49,488. Other towns with census population in 1930 are:—Concepción, 77,589; Temuco, 85,748; Talca, 45,020; Chillán, 39,511; Antofagasta, 53,591; Iquique, 46,458; Magallanes, 24,307; Talcahuano, 27,594; Valdivia, 34,296.

Religion.

The Roman Catholic religion was maintained by the State, but in 1925 the church was disestablished. There is one archbishop (Santiago), 10 bishops, and four vicars apostolic. There were in 1928, 595 churches and chapels.

Education.

Education is gratuitous and at the cost of the State, and since August 26, 1920, compulsory for at least six years in the cities and four years in the rural districts. A decree issued February, 1928, makes it compulsory for all children between the ages of 7 and 15. There were in 1930, 3,860 public and private primary schools with 559,016 pupils and 9,856 teachers; 6 public normal schools with 1,342 pupils and 200 teachers; 175 public and private secondary schools with 51,624 pupils and 2,438 teachers; 10 public commercial schools with 211 teachers and 4,229 pupils. Professional and secondary instruction is provided in the State University of Chile, with 3,338 students in 1930, the Catholic University at Santiago (1,049 students in 1930), the National Institute of Santiago, the University of Concepción (1920), and in the lyceums and colleges established in the capitals of provinces, and in some departments. A school of technology was opened at Valparaíso (Universidad Industrial de Valparaíso). There are besides agricultural schools, schools of mines, and professional schools. Education expenditures in 1929 took 160,546,991 pesos.

There are 678 newspapers and journals published in Chile, including 86 dailies and 137 weeklies.

Justice and Crime.

There are, in addition to a High Court of Justice in the capital, eight Courts of Appeal distributed over the Republic, Tribunals of First Instance in the departmental capitals, and second class judges in the subdelegations. The police force includes about 15,815 officers and men; it is organised and regulated by the President of the Republic at the charge of the national treasury.

Finance.

In recent years the revenue and expenditure were as follows (40 pesos = £1 at par; 1 peso = 12 cents, U.S.):—

Year	Revenue	Expenditure	Year	Revenue	Expenditure
	Pesos	Pesos		Pesos	Pesos

The above figures, down to 1932, are those reported by Colonel Carlos Ibanez, who was President from 1927 to his deposition in July, 1931. Customs revenue in 1929, 696,751,436 pesos; in 1930, 532,805,478 pesos. Nitrate taxes, 1929, furnished 299,782,473 pesos (23·65 per cent. of revenue); in 1930, 181,072,542 pesos (33·96 per cent.).

In addition, service on external debt in default, amounted to 125,877,295 pesos. Balance in the Treasury was 1,164,634 pesos against current obligations of 129,000,000 pesos. Congress had suspended in August, 1931, for 2 years, service on foreign debts incurred by municipalities, State railways and Caja de Credito Hipotecario, and postponed service on the Government's 6 per cent. sterling loans of 1928 and 1929. On January 7, 1932, the Government authorized the Treasury to issue 200,000,000 pesos of 5-year Treasury notes, to be rediscountable at the Central Bank.

Defence.

ARMY.

The Chilean Army is a national militia in which all able-bodied citizens are obliged to serve. Liability extends from the 20th to the 50th year, inclusive. Recruits are called up in their 20th year, and are trained for one and a half years. Afterwards they serve for 12 years in the reserve of the active army, after which they belong till the completion of their 50th year to the second reserve. The latter is organised as a second-line army.

Chile is divided into 4 zones or military districts, each of which furnishes a complete division on mobilisation. The army is organised in 4 divisions and 1 cavalry division, comprising: 16 regiments and 3 infantry battalions, 9 cavalry regiments, 5 regiments and 6 artillery groups, 1 engineering regiment and 5 engineering battalions, 5 battalions of railway troops and 2 aviation groups. The total strength of the active army in 1927 was 1,430 officers and 20,950 other ranks.

The infantry are armed with the Chilean Mauser rifle (1895), calibre 7 mm., and the cavalry with a carbine of similar pattern and lance. The field artillery are armed with Q.F. Krupp guns.

In December, 1918, an Air Force was formed under British instruction, with a nucleus of 14 seaplanes and 80 aeroplanes purchased in Great Britain.

NAVY.

The principal vessels of the Chilean fleet are as follows:—

Name	Launched	Displacement, Tons	Extreme Armouring, Inches	Main Armament	Torpedo Tubes	Indicated Horse-Power	Nominal Speed
Battleship:
Almirante Latorre . .	1913	28,000	10	10 14-in.; 14 6-in.; 4 4-in.	4	87,000	28

The Almirante Latorre served in the British Fleet during the war as the Canada, and in 1930-31 was refitted and modernised at Devonport Dock-yard under a contract between the Chilean Government and the Admiralty.

There are 11 large destroyers, all built in England, 9 submarines, and various training and auxiliary vessels. A submarine depot ship, the Araucano, and two oil tankers were completed in British yards in 1930. The general efficiency of the personnel of the Navy appears to be high; the active strength at present is about 8,000.

Ten British naval officers and one air officer are at present lent to the Chilean Navy in connexion with the re-organisation of training in certain branches.

Agriculture and Industry.

There are three zones in Chile—the arid zone in the north, which for many years has furnished the world's entire supply of natural nitrate of soda, 90 per cent. of its iodine and 18 per cent. of copper consumed; the agricultural zone in the centre; and the forest zone in the south. Mining in the north and agriculture in the centre are the principal occupations. Total area of agricultural land (1927) was 59,038,055 acres; of forest land, 11,231,685 acres; of fruit trees and vines, 273,907 acres; of meadows, 32,557,067 acres. Number of farms in 1930, 210,736 with an average value of 28,800 pesos. Chile produces annually large quantities of cereals, besides excellent wine (5,737,893 litres exported in 1930, chiefly to Germany and Belgium), fruit, and vegetables. Capital invested in vineyards is about 414,000,000 pesos. Tobacco output from 7,950 acres in 1930 was 6,035,400 kilos. The principal crops of the harvest for 3 years are shown as follows:—

The live stock census of June 30, 1930, showed 441,027 horses, 37,455 asses, 31,414 mules, 2,387,940 cattle, 6,263,482 sheep, 788,831 goats, and 331,156 pigs.

Dairy farms and the production of butter and cheese are on the increase. In Patagonia and Tierra del Fuego large tracts of country are devoted to sheep-farming, largely by British subjects; wool exports, 1930, 9,096 tons. Extensive natural forests are found, the largest in the provinces of Valdivia (1,963,172 acres), Llanquihue (1,971,656 acres), and Chiloé (371,510 acres). Exports of soap bark (quillaya) in 1930 amounted to 2,291 tons, principally to Germany. This was 93 per cent. of Chile's exports of crude drugs and botanicals.

The wealth of the country, however, consists chiefly in its minerals, especially in the northern provinces of Atacama and Tarapacá. The metals obtained are gold, silver, copper (Chile is the world's second largest producer of copper, with 1930 output of 220,304 tons), cobalt, lead (1,515 tons exported in 1930), zinc and manganese; the non-metallic substances being coal, nitrate, borate, salt, sulphur (about 15,500 tons per year), and guano. Production of gold in 1930 was 16,686 ounces; of silver, 732,441. Iron-ore deposits are found in the provinces of Atacama and of Coquimbo, estimated at over 1,000,000,000 tons. Exports now exceed 1,000,000 tons annually (1,723,522 tons in 1930, principally by the Bethlehem Street Corporation which operates the largest mine at El Tofo). Coal production in 1930, 441,370 tons. Reserves total 2,000,000,000 metric tons, mostly low in thermal units.

Nitrate of soda, or 'salitre,' is Chile's most important article of export and a substantial source of governmental revenue. It is found in the section of the desert of Atacama known locally as the 'pampa salitrera,' a territory comprising an area of some 500 miles in length, lying between latitude 15° and 26° south, and situated at an elevation above sea level of from 2,000 to 6,000 feet. There are 152 nitrate works or oficinas with a productive capacity of 58,136,000 quintals; 32 were in operation in 1930. On July 21, 1930, the Government set up the Chilean Nitrate Company, "Cosach," into which all nitrate companies were merged; the Government owns half the stock. In lieu of former export duties, "Cosach" will pay the Government 22,500,000 dollars in 1931; 20,000,000 dollars in 1932 and 17,000,000 dollars in 1933, relying thereafter upon dividends for its revenue from the industry. Production, 1929, 3,237,594 tons, exports, 2,841,900 tons; production, 1930, 2,445,822 tons, exports, 1,785,728 tons. About 90 per cent. of the world's supply of iodine is a by-product of the Chilean nitrate oficinas; output, 1929, 1,400 tons.

In 1928 Chile had 8,585 manufacturing establishments, with capital of 1,446,587,060 pesos, using raw materials valued at 835,269,411 pesos, with output worth 1,575,237,072 pesos; 97,832 employees (including 4,762 foreigners) earned 218,608,865 pesos. Electric power is abundant.

Shipping and Navigation.

The commercial shipping of Chile consisted, in 1931, of 126 steamers, motor-driven vessels and sailing vessels of 108,141 tons net. A project to combine all Chilean companies into one, with a capital of 39,000,000 pesos was started by the Government in 1930. The shipping entered and cleared at the ports of Chile in foreign trade in 1930 was as follows: Entered, 939 vessels of 2,912,000 tons; cleared, 941 vessels of 2,942,000 tons.

Communications.

In 1930, there were in Chile 24,414 miles of highways, of which 20,045 miles were earth roads, 3,878 miles of sand and clay or gravel, 358 miles of macadam and 37 miles of concrete or asphalt. Only 37 miles can be called first-class and 358 second-class. About 16,000 are fit for motor traffic.

There were (1930) about 30,000 automobiles and 14,700 trucks and motor-buses. There are 851 miles of navigable river, and 497 miles of navigable lakes.

The length of State Railway lines amounted in 1930 to 3,600 miles; private railway lines, principally British-owned, to 1,940 miles, making a total of 5,540 miles. State Railway lines are:—Arica-La Paz Railway, (Chilean section) 128 miles; North Longitudinal Railway, 442 miles; Central North Line, 1,078 miles; Central South Line, 1,770 miles; and Puente Alto-Valcan Railway, 38 miles. The Government has 70 per cent. ownership of the Chilean Transandine Line. State-owned lines produced an operating profit in 1930 of 23,649,545 pesos. Electrification of the railways was commenced in 1921 on the line between Valparaiso and Santiago, a distance of 115 miles. Aviation is highly developed between interior points and abroad; a plant for the manufacture of airplanes was established in 1930.

The 890 post-offices and agencies dispatched in 1930, 101,231,000 postal pieces. The length of telegraph lines at the end of 1930 was 19,727 miles (10,555 miles Government and 9,172 miles private). In 1930, there were 430 Government offices, and 532 private offices. There were (1930) 327 telephone exchanges with 35,489 subscribers. The largest telephone company is the American-owned Chile Telephone Company which operates in Santiago, Valparaiso and other cities, with 249 exchanges and 30,967 subscribers.

A chain of wireless stations along the coast for shore-to-ship transmission is operated by the Navy; stations are at Arica, Antofagasta, Coquimbo, Valparaiso, Talcahuano, Valdivia, Puerto Montt, Magallanes (formerly known as Punta Arenas), and Quilicura (near Santiago). The first international radio station was opened at Quilicura in 1928. A wireless station is also being erected on the Juan Fernandez Islands, about 400 miles west and south of Valparaiso. There are 3 large broadcasting stations.

Banking and Credit.

In August, 1925, the Government established at Santiago the Central Bank of Chile, with (1930) 90,832,000 pesos paid up capital, which should have the right of issuing a new peso, value 6d., to be the basis of a new national currency. The Central Bank commenced operations on January 11, 1926, and gold payments were re-established. On December 25, 1931, the Central Bank had gold at home amounting to 66,831,000 pesos, gold abroad, 122,150,000 pesos and deposits, 87,683,000 pesos; bank notes in circulation were 313,852,000 pesos. In January, 1932, its minimum reserve was set at 25 per cent.

The paid-up capital and reserve funds of 16 leading Chilean and 7 foreign banks amounted on December 31, 1930, to 643,325,838 pesos; total loans and investments, 1,834,525,098 pesos. Three mortgage banks specializing in industrial, agrarian and mining loans were merged in 1931 into the Chattel Mortgage Bank at Santiago. A decree in March, 1931, gave the Caja Nacional de Ahorros a monopoly of savings accounts, other banks being given from 6 to 12 months in which to close out their savings accounts; on December 31, 1930, the savings deposits amounted to 28,400,000 pesos; total deposits, 472,200,000 pesos.

Money, Weights, and Measures.

The monetary unit is the gold Peso, containing 0.183057 gramme of fine gold, worth 6d. sterling or 12 cents, U.S. £1 sterling therefore equals, at par, 40 gold pesos. Only gold coins of 20, 40 (called, officially, the 'libra Chilena' and equal to the £ sterling), 50 and 100 pesos are minted. The stability of the currency, normally the concern of the Central Bank, was placed in charge of a control commission in June, 1931. In 1931 the exchange value of the peso in London ranged between 26·80 pesos to the £ and 40·10; in New York it was maintained at from 12·11 cents, U.S. to 12·18 cents. The law also provides for silver coins of 5, 2 and 1 pesos, and nickel coins of 0·20, 0·10 and 0·05 peso. Actually the currency in circulation is chiefly paper issued by the Banco Central in lieu of gold, in denominations of 1,000, 500, 100, 50, 10 and 5 pesos. Coins in circulation are 2 and 1 peso in silver, and 20, 10 and 5 centavos in nickel.

The metric system has been legally established in Chile since 1865, but the old Spanish weights and measures are still in use to some extent. Greenwich time has been adopted in place of Chilean time.

CHINA.

(CHUNG-HUA MIN-KUO, i. e. REPUBLIC OF CHINA.)

Government.

ON February 12, 1912, China, one of the oldest of Monarchies, became a Republic.

The Chinese Imperial family was of Manchu origin, dating from 1644, and was styled Ta Ch'ing Ch'ao ('Great Pure Dynasty'). The last Emperor, P'u-yi, was the tenth of the line; but the official genealogy is carried back six generations earlier than the real founder, and P'u-yi's will be the sixteenth name in the canonised series of Ta Ch'ing Emperors. He was born on February 11, 1906, succeeded his uncle the Emperor Kuang-Hsü on November 14, 1908, and abdicated on February 12, 1912. On December 1, 1923, he was married. He retained the title of Emperor of the Manchu Imperial House up to November 5, 1924 (when it was abolished), together with other rights of preferential treatment secured under the Abdication Agreement, making P'u-yi an ordinary citizen of the republic. For account of the Revolution of 1911, see STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK for 1912, pp. 699-701, and for later developments, see STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK for 1919, pp. 740-41, and the STATESMAN'S YEAR BOOK, 1928, p. 734.

The present Government at Nanking (March 1932) is a Committee Government, representing broadly the "Kuomintang," or Nationalist party. According to the "Organic law of the Nationalist Government of the Republic of China" which the Kuomintang promulgated on October 4, 1928, the Nationalist Government is to be composed of five Yuan (Councils)—Executive, Legislative, Judicial, Examination, and Control. There shall be a President and from 12 to 16 State Councillors of the National Government, from whom Presidents and Vice-Presidents of the five Councils shall be appointed. The Executive Council shall be the highest organ of the National Government. It shall establish Ministries to which will be entrusted various executive duties, and it may appoint commissions for specified executive matters. It may introduce in the Legislative Council Bills on matters within its competence. Budgets, amnesties, declarations of war, peace negotiations, conclusions of treaties, and other important international matters are to be submitted to the Legislative Council.

The Legislative Council shall be the highest legislative organ. It shall have power to decide, upon legislation, budgets, amnesties, declarations of war, negotiations for peace, the conclusion of treaties, and other important international matters. It shall have a President and Vice-President, and shall be composed of between 49 and 99 members to be appointed by the National Government at the instance of the President of the Legislative Council. The term of office shall be two years, and members shall not concurrently be non-political administrative officials of the various organs of the Central or local Governments.

The Judicial Council shall be the highest judicial organ, and shall take charge of judicial trial, judicial administration, disciplinary punishment of officials, and trial of administrative cases. The granting of pardons, reprieves, and restitution of civil rights shall be submitted by the President of the Judicial Council to the National Government for approval and action.

The Examination Council shall be the highest examination organ, and shall take charge of examinations and determine qualifications for the public service. All public functionaries shall be appointed only after they have passed an examination and their qualifications for the public service have been determined by the Examination Council.

The Control Council shall be the highest supervisory organ, and shall, according to law, exercise the powers of impeachment and auditing. It shall have a President and Vice-President, and shall be composed of 19 to 29 members who are to be appointed by the National Government at the instance of the President of the Control Council. The security of tenure of office by members shall be determined by law, and members shall not concurrently hold any office in any organs of Central or local Governments.

The Provisional Constitution was adopted by the National People's Convention on May 12, 1931, to take effect on June 1, 1931.

President of the National Government of China.—Lin Sen (December 27, 1931).

There is also a Cabinet of Ministers, appointed in January, 1932, as follows:—

President of the Administrative Council.—Wang Chao-min.

Minister of Finance.—Soong Tse-ven (T. V. Soong).

Minister of Foreign Affairs.—Dr. Lo Wen-kan.

Minister for War.—General Ho Yin-chin.

Minister of the Navy.—Admiral Chen Shao-kuan.

Minister of Industry.—Chen Kung-po.

Minister of Education.—Chu Chia-Hua.

Minister of Railways.—Chen Kung-po.

Minister of the Interior.—General Feng Yu-hsiang.

Minister of Communications.—General Chen Ming-shu.

Minister of Justice.—Dr. Lo Wen-Kan.

The Ministers are merely the functionaries of the Executive Council. There are four other councils, but the five councils themselves are subordinate to the "three conferences" over which that of the Kuomintang is supreme, the system of Government being designed to secure the supremacy of the Kuomintang.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

In July, 1928, six special municipalities were organized at Nanking, Shanghai, Tsingtao, Tientsin, Hankow and Canton, and several new ordinary municipalities were also established, but in May, 1930, the distinction between special and ordinary municipalities was revoked. There is still a difference between municipalities under the direct control of the Executive Yuan and those under provincial control. The Mayor of a city of the former type is appointed by the Government, while in the other case a Mayor is recommended by the Provincial authorities, for approval by the Central Government, or else is directly appointed by the local authorities. In municipalities under Executive Yuan control, the heads of the different bureaux are either directly appointed by Government or are recommended by the Mayor for subsequent approval by the Government. Bureau heads in municipalities under provincial control are either directly appointed by the provincial authority or are recommended by the Mayor for approval by the Provincial Government.

Area and Population.

According to statistics compiled by the Ministry of Interior (July 1931), the total population of China is 474,487,000.

The following table gives a statement of the area and population of the Chinese Republic according to the estimate of the Post Office in 1926:—

Estimates prepared by the Chinese Maritime Customs in 1929 give the total of 438,933,373, inclusive of 19,290,000 for Manchuria. The figures for Mongolia and Tibet are rough estimates, and a certain amount of reserve should be maintained in regard to all these figures.

The Island of Formosa was ceded to Japan in accordance with the terms of the Treaty of Shimonoseki ratified and exchanged at Chefoo on the 8th of May, 1895. The formal transfer of the Island was effected on June 2, 1895.

By agreement with the Chinese Government, dated March 27, 1898, Russia took possession of Port Arthur and Talienswan (called Dalny by Russia and Dairen by Japan) and their adjacent territories and waters, on lease for the term of 25 years, with option of extension by mutual agreement. In 1900, in consequence of the 'Boxer' uprising, Russia occupied Manchuria. Japan, after long and unsuccessful efforts to induce Russia to withdraw, broke off diplomatic relations, and on February 8, 1904, commenced hostilities. The war, in the course of which Japan proved victorious both on land and at sea, was brought to an end by the Treaty of Portsmouth signed September 5, 1905. Under this Treaty Russia and Japan agreed to evacuate Manchuria, except the territory affected by the lease of Kwantung (or the Liao-tung Peninsula), where Japan succeeds to the leasehold and other rights of Russia. The exclusive administration of Manchuria (with the exception mentioned) was to be restored to China. By treaty of December 22, 1905, China agreed to the transfer to Japan from Russia of the lease of the Liao-tung Peninsula and the control of the railway from Port Arthur to Ch'ang-chun (Kwan-ch'engtsu), and conceded to Japan the right to construct a railway from Antung to Mukden, and agreed to open 16 Manchurian ports and cities to foreign commerce.

The Chinese Government granted to the French in April, 1898, a 99 years' lease of the Bay of Kwang-Chau-Wan, on the coast of the peninsula, between Hong Kong and the Island of Hainan, and in November, 1899, the possession of the two islands commanding the entrance of the bay. This territory has been placed under the authority of the Governor-General of French Indo-China.

In accordance with a Convention signed between the British Government and the National Government of China on April 18, 1930, the Rendition of Wei-hai-Wei to China took place on October 1, 1930.

The Belgian concession at Tientsin was formally restored to China on January 15, 1931.

Peking (now called Peiping), the capital of China until 1928, has a population of 811,138 according to the 1926 census of the Municipal Bureau. According to the Census of the Metropolitan Police Administration, taken in 1927, the population of Peking and its suburbs is close on 1,297,718 (779,704 males and 518,014 females). The population of the treaty ports is given as follows for 1929 by the Chinese Maritime Customs: Aigun, 36,800; Harbin, 252,988; Hunchun, 37,535; Lungchingsun, 6,313; Antung, 93,781; Dairen, 220,588; Newchwang, 106,242; Chinwangtao, 19,100; Tientsin, 1,388,747; Lungkow, 9,409; Chefoo, 119,305; Tsingtao, 350,464; Chungking, 635,000; Wanshui, 207,837; Changsha, 606,972; Yochow, 4,200; Ichang, 112,309; Shasi, 95,843; Hankow, 777,993 (including Wuchang and Hanyang); Kiukiang, 43,987; Wuhu, 130,706; Nanking, 522,696; Chinkiang, 153,613; Shanghai (including neighbouring districts), 2,674,447 (the International Settlement at Shanghai has a total of 1,007,868 inhabitants, of which 971,397 are Chinese and 36,471 foreigners); Soochow, 260,000; Hangchow, 426,916; Ningpo, 212,518; Wenchow, 678,376; Santuao, 9,000; Foochow, 388,164; Amoy, 196,717; Swatow, 141,063; Canton, 812,241; Kongmoon, 94,598; Samshui, 9,050; Kiungchow, 45,751; Pakhoi, 34,600; Wuchow, 77,353; Nanning, 73,412; Lungchow, 14,731; Mengtsz, 38,562; Szemao, 10,000; Tengyueh, 19,000. In addition, there are also a number of other places open to international trade; these are called commercial ports or marts, and were opened at the instance of the Chinese Government. Nanking is the present capital.

According to the estimate of the Customs authorities, in 1930 the total number of foreigners resident in China was 361,940, made up as follows:—

American . . . . .	6,875	French . . . . .	8,575	Russian . . . . .	65,361
Austrian . . . . .	249	German . . . . .	3,006	Spanish . . . . .	327

The total number of Chinese abroad was estimated in October 1928 to be about 6,246,682 persons, including 1,456,264 in British South India and South Sea Islands.

Until 1929 there were 23 Treaty Powers in China, as follows: Great Britain (1842), United States (1844), France (1844), Norway and Sweden (1847), Denmark (1863), Netherlands (1863), Spain (1864), Belgium (1865), Italy (1866), Peru (1874), Brazil (1881), Portugal (1887), Japan (1895), Mexico (1899), Chile (1915), Switzerland (1918), Bolivia (1919), Persia (1920), Germany (1921), Soviet Russia (1924), Austria (1926), and Finland (1927). Of these powers, Germany, Bolivia, Persia, Chile, Austria, Mexico, Soviet Russia, and Finland have renounced the privilege of consular jurisdiction. Fixed Customs Tariff Conventions have been definitely renounced by all powers except Japan in 1928. Italy, Belgium, Denmark, Spain and Portugal signed treaties with China in 1928 and on certain conditions agreed to subject to Chinese jurisdiction after January 1, 1929.

During 1928 the National Government announced that treaties that had lapsed, or were about to lapse, would be abrogated and new treaties negotiated on a basis of "equality." Treaties of a commercial character have been made with the principal nations. As from January 1, 1930, the Chinese Government withdrew extra-territorial privileges of foreigners in China. In an Aide Mémoire from the British Government on December 20, 1929, however, it was stated that 'His Majesty's Government are willing to agree that January 1, 1930, should be treated as the date from which the process of the gradual abolition of extra-territoriality should be regarded as having commenced in principle.' This date was later extended to January 1, 1932, but at the end of December 1931 the Chinese Government announced that the proposal to abandon extraterritorial rights on January 1, 1932, had been postponed.

Religion.

Three religions are acknowledged by the Chinese as indigenous and adopted, viz. Confucianism, Buddhism, and Taoism.

With the exception of the practice of ancestral worship, which is everywhere observed throughout the Republic, and was fully commended by Confucius, Confucianism has little outward ceremonial.

Buddhism and Taoism present a very gorgeous and elaborate ritual in China, Taoism—originally a pure philosophy—having abjectly copied Buddhist ceremonial on the arrival of Buddhism 1,800 years ago. Most Chinese (not Mohammedans or Christians) profess and practise all three religions. The bulk of the people, however, are Buddhist.

Mohammedans are found in every province of China, being most numerous in Kansu, Sinkiang, Shansi, Shensi, Chihli, and Yunnan. There are 30,000 in Peking, with 30 mosques. Estimates for all China vary widely, from 3,000,000 to 80,000,000; 20,000,000, however, is generally favoured.

Roman Catholicism has had a footing in China for more than three centuries. In 1929 it had 76 bishoprics and 3,616 foreign missionaries, and counted 2,486,841 native Christians. Protestant Missions date from 1807. In 1922, native Christians numbered 806,926 (366,524 communicants). Attached to Protestant Missions in 1920 were 27 colleges of university standing, 256 middle schools, and 581 higher elementary schools. Under Christian instruction were 189,794 pupils. The Russian Orthodox Mission dates from 1685. In 1923, the Church counted 5,000 baptised Chinese adherents.

Most of the aboriginal hill-tribes are still nature-worshippers, and ethnically are distinct from the prevailing Mongoloid population. There is also a colony of Chinese Jews in K'ai-feng, capital of Honan.

Education.

Since September 3, 1905, an enormous impetus has been given to the new educational movement, schools for the teaching of 'western learning' springing up in every town throughout large portions of the Republic.

There are two kinds of primary schools: the higher and the lower. The former are established by district governments, and are intended as intermediaries between the lower primary schools and the middle schools. The total for the whole country in 1923 was 10,236, with 582,579 pupils. The latter—also called Citizen Schools—are established by local government boards, although in recent years a good number have been founded with private funds. The total number was 167,076, with 5,814,375 pupils in 1923.

The Government Universities are the National University at Peking;

Wuchang Normal University; Chung Chow University, Kaifeng; National South-Eastern University at Nanking; North-Western University at Sianfu, in Shensi Province; North-Eastern University at Mukden; Tung Luh University in Yunnan Province; Peking Normal University; and Hangchow University. In addition to the above there are several Universities supported by private funds. The Chiaotung (Communications) University, under the aegis of the Ministry of Communications, was opened on July 21, 1921. It is now divided into three Colleges, each with a university status; Nanyang, Shanghai; Tang-han, Chihli Province; Communications, Peking. The National University of Peking was established in 1898, and completely reorganised in 1917. In February, 1920, five women students were admitted for the first time. In the year 1928-29, there were 34 universities and colleges and 16 High Technical Colleges in China, including Government and private institutions. The total number of students was 19,453, of whom 3,507 were enrolled in the Faculty of Law; 2,271 Arts; 2,135 Engineering; 1,232 Science, and 1,127 for Business Administration.

The Peking Union Medical College was founded early in 1906 for the training of Chinese medical students. On July 1, 1915, the China Medical Board of the Rockefeller Foundation assumed the full support of the Union Medical College.

There are numerous Protestant and Catholic mission schools, colleges and universities at Shanghai and other ports, where the English and French languages and lower branches of Western science are taught.

A modern university for Chinese with British professors has been successfully established in Hongkong, and attracts students from many parts of China.

According to statistics compiled by the Ministry of Education, 1,484 students in 1929-30 were granted certificates to study abroad. Of this total, 826 students proceeded to Japan, 272 to America, 173 to France, 84 to Germany, 60 to Belgium, 55 to Great Britain, and 14 to Austria. Among these were 162 women students, or about 11 per cent.

Justice.

A provisional Criminal Code was drawn up in the closing year of the Tsing dynasty, and proclaimed on March 10, 1912, the first year of the Republic. The code was framed after the Continental system, and adopts the most modern legislation in regard to conditional release and postponement of punishments. There are special provisions for the treatment of youthful offenders and insane persons. As regards the power of inflicting penalties, the arbitrary use of power by the court is guarded against by fixing a maximum and minimum sentence for each case. A second draft of this code was completed in 1919. Texts in both English and French have also been published. Altogether, three codes have been drawn up and revised—the Code of Civil Procedure, the Commercial Code, and the Code of Criminal Procedure. The work of drawing up and revising the new Codes is undertaken by the Law Codification and Compilation Commission, which is also engaged in the drafting of commercial laws.

There are at present 276 courts and procuratorates, with the Supreme Court and the Procuratorate-General at the head of all. The Supreme Court of China may be likened to the House of Lords or the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council of Great Britain. As its name implies, it is the highest tribunal in the land. It was reorganised in 1912 into two divisions—Criminal and Civil—since increased to seven, five Civil divisions and two Criminal divisions. In each division there is a presiding Judge with four other judges. The cases handled by the Supreme Court in 1926 were: Civil, 5,480; Criminal, 1,953.

Great Britain and the United States have special courts in China, the one, His Majesty's Supreme Court for China at Shanghai (established 1865), and the other, the United States Court for China (established 1906).

Likin (local customs dues on internal transit) was abolished on January 1, 1931.

The collection of the revenue on the Chinese foreign trade and the administration of the lights on the coast of China are under the management of the Chinese Maritime Customs, an institution, founded by Sir Robert Hart, which has a large staff of Foreign and Chinese subordinates. By agreement, dated February 13, 1898, China undertook that the post of Inspector-General must be held by a British subject so long as British Foreign Trade predominates.

By the terms of the Re-organisation Loan Agreement of 1913, the Chinese Government agreed to take immediate steps for the re-organisation, with the assistance of foreigners, of the system of collection of the salt revenues. A Central Salt Administration was established in Peking under the control of the Minister of Finance, with a Chief Inspectorate under a Chinese Chief Inspector and a foreign Associate Chief Inspector, who exercise the chief authority for the superintendence of the issue of licence and the compilation of reports and returns of revenue.

By exchange of Notes effected on September 19 and September 22, 1930, it was agreed that Great Britain will return her share of the Boxer Indemnity as from December 1, 1922, to the control of the Chinese Government which will apply the bulk of the funds thus remitted to the creation of an endowment to be devoted to the rehabilitation and building of railroads in China and to educational purposes. The funds to which the agreement refers amounted on June 30, 1930, to 3,515,419*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.*, and the total amount of the sums payable by the Chinese Government between that date and December 31, 1945, when all payments are due to cease, will be 7,847,098*l.* 4*s.* 9*d.*

The customs receipts for 4 years were (in Haikwan taels) :—

Year	Foreign Trade	Home Trade	Total	Total	Exchange
	Taels	Taels	Taels	£	Pence

Of the former, arrears of capital and interest to January 1, 1931, amounted to some 19,989,000*l.*; and of the internal loans, 488,413,189 dollars were secured on customs revenue.

Defence.

ARMY.

The task of creating an army on modern lines was undertaken during the Sino-Japanese War in 1894, when Judge Hu Yün-mei, a provincial treasurer, was instructed to raise a combatant force. This force was taken over and renamed the New Imperial Army in 1895 by Yuan Shih-kai, who came from Korea, where he was Chinese Resident, to act as Director-General of the force. There were 8,000 men—infantry, cavalry, artillery, and pioneers—in this army in the early days of its existence, and they were trained under German instructors at Hsiaoohan, which lies between Tientsin and Taku, and which was the old camping-place of the troops that Li Hung-chang brought up in the '60's after fighting the Taiping rebels. The new army was concentrated at Hsiaoohan till 1899, when Yuan Shih-kai was made Governor of Shantung. He took the troops with him to his new province and they remained there till their Director-General was made Viceroy of Chihli in 1902. By 1904, the force had grown to 6 divisions of 12,000 men each, with headquarters at Paotingfu.

Added to the regular divisions of the army list are numerous bodies of irregulars, and these are directly controlled by independent Tupans and commanders, who, however, look to the Government for the payment of their forces.

According to the 1923 Constitution, the organisation of the national army was based on a system of compulsory citizen service. Service is normally voluntary for three years with the active army and three years in the reserve. Recruits must be between the ages of 20 and 25. The army is at present composed of approximately 1,300,000 men, but the vast majority owe allegiance only to independent and semi-independent commanders.

Civil war in China has caused the disrapture of the national army. Authorities estimate that there are over 750,000 men under arms in China at present (1931).

NAVY.

The weakening of the central power had seriously affected the efficiency of the Navy, but this has been restored to some extent since the Nanking Government was established. In July, 1920, the Government requested the services of a British Naval Mission to reorganise the training of the Fleet; the services of two officers of the Royal Navy and a number of ratings have since been lent. A number of Chinese junior naval officers are under training in the British Navy.

The largest vessel is the cruiser Hai Chi, of 4,300 tons displacement and 24 knots, carrying a main armament of 2 8-in. guns, 10 4·7-in. guns and 5 above-water torpedo tubes. The Ying Swei and the Chao Ho were built in England (1911), mainly for training purposes, each having a displacement of about 2,600 tons and a contract speed of 20 knots. The main armaments consist of 2 6-in. and 4 4-in. guns. There are also three 3,000-ton cruisers, Hai Yung, Hai Chow, and Hai Shen, built 1897-98, of 19·5 knots speed, armed with 3 6-in. and 8 4·1-in. guns; and the Yat Sen, built 1930, of 1,650 tons, armed with 1 6-in., 1 5·5-in., and 4 3-in. guns. In addition there are 21 steel gunboats of over 400 tons, 16 smaller river and other gunboats, 4 destroyers, 8 torpedo-boats, and various other vessels, many of which, as the result of neglect, are believed to be without fighting value. A cruiser of 1,900 tons and a number of gunboats are under construction.

There are no naval bases of any importance. Existing dockyards are: Foochow, Taku, Kiangnan (Shanghai), and Whampoa (Canton).

Production and Industry.

Agriculture.—China is essentially an agricultural country, and the land is mostly freehold held by families on the payment of an annual tax. Total arable land in China is estimated at about 192,060 square miles. The holdings are in general small; irrigation is common. Chinese agriculture is intensive rather than extensive. Rotation of crops is practised. Horticulture is a favourite pursuit, and fruit trees are grown in great variety. Indeed the Chinese are gardeners rather than farmers. Vegetable culture has reached a high state of perfection. Wheat, barley, maize, and millet and other cereals, with peas and beans, are chiefly cultivated in the north, rice, sugar, and indigo in the south. Treaties forbid the export of grain with the exception of wheat, soya beans, kaoliang, indian corn, buckwheat, and barley from Manchuria. An embargo may be applied in case of a famine in China. China's fibre crops are also important: chief are abutilon, hemp, jute, ramie and flax.

Cotton is grown widely even as far north as the southern and central part of Chihli, the chief area of production being the Yangtse valley. In 1930-31, the area under cotton in the 11 principal cotton producing provinces (Hopei, Shantung, Shansi, Honan, Shensi, Kiangsu, Chekiang, Anhwei, Kiangsi, Hupeh, and Hunan) was given as 37,593,012 mow or 6,265,502 acres, and the yield 8,809,567 piculs of ginned cotton. In 1929-30, the area was 33,811,255 mow (5,635,209 acres), and the yield 7,589,958 piculs. Tea is cultivated exclusively in the west and south; silk culture is one of the most successful industries of China; about 25 per cent. of the world's supply of raw silk is from China. The production of silk cocoons is estimated at 3,300,000 piculs, of which about 40 per cent. is produced in the central provinces of Kiangsu, Chekiang and Anhwei.

Pigs are raised everywhere in China, and pigs' bristles have become an important article of export. The annual output is over 100,000 piculs, valued at about 10,000,000 Hk. Tls.; about two-thirds are exported. In Mongolia, camels are raised solely for the hair they produce, each camel yielding on an average 6½ lb. of good quality fine, soft wool at its annual shearing. China abounds in wild game.

Manufacture.—An important feature in the development of the Chinese industries is the erection of cotton and wool mills, and of silk filatures in Shanghai, Canton and elsewhere, while native looms are found in most dwellings. The production of cotton yarn in China during the year ended December 31, 1931, totalled 2,380,671 bales, of which 823,437 bales were produced in Japanese, 1,480,919 bales in Chinese, and 76,315 bales in British-owned mills. The production of cotton piece goods for the year amounted to 16,179,844 pieces, of which 7,587,767 pieces were manufactured in Japanese, 6,854,091 in Chinese, and 1,737,986 bales in British mills. In December 1931, 130 cotton mills in China had 4,497,902 spindles and 33,580 looms distributed as follows: 45 Japanese-owned mills (1,821,280 spindles and 14,082 looms); 82 Chinese-owned (2,499,394 spindles and 17,018 looms); 3 British-owned (177,228 spindles and 2,480 looms). At the large centres flour and rice mills are beginning to supersede native methods of treating wheat and rice. Flour milling is making rapid strides in China. There are 173 modern mills in Shanghai (of which only 18 were working in 1930), 11 mills at Tsingtao, 6 at Wusih, and 5 at Hankow. Manchuria possesses about 50 flour mills. At Hanyang, near Hankow, are large Chinese iron-works, supplied with ore from mines at Tayeh, about 60 miles distant. There are also 400 glass factories.

Mining.—Most of the 18 provinces and the 3 provinces of Manchuria contain coal, and China may be regarded as one of the first coal countries of the world. The coal-fields cover an area of 133,513 acres and the average annual coal output is estimated at 29,000,000 metric tons, of which 9 to 10 million metric tons are from native coal mines, over  $7\frac{1}{2}$  million metric tons from semi-modern mines, and 11,196,100 metric tons from the Fushun and Kailan coal mines. Iron ores are abundant in the anthracite field of Shansi, where the iron industry is the oldest in the world, in Chihli, in Shantung and other provinces, and iron (found in conjunction with coal) is worked in Manchuria. Three hundred million tons of ore are estimated to be in Shansi; the reserve of other deposits amounts to about 300 million tons. The production of iron ore in 1928 was about 2,008,800 tons. The Tayeh iron deposits, near Hankow, are among the richest in the world. They have an ore reserve of 35,000,000 tons. On the Upper Yangtse and in Shensi province petroleum is being worked; there are 91 wells in the country. Oil is also being extracted from shale beds in South Manchuria and Shansi Province. Tin ore is plentiful in Yunnan where the tin-mining industry has long existed. Tin is the most important mineral export; about 10,000 tons are produced annually. It is mined extensively in Yunnan, and through Mengtze it reaches Hong Kong, whence it is shipped to foreign countries. In antimony China occupies a unique position; since 1908 the country has produced more than 60 per cent. of the world's total production. More than 90 per cent. comes from Hunan; the output in 1930 was 14,700 tons. Mining for wolfram is being carried on at Swatow, and in the Kiangsi and Hunan Provinces; molybdenum ore has been found at Yungtai-hsien, in Fukien and Kiangsi; bismuth has also been worked. The total output of salt in 1930 was 2,562,000 tons (2,408,000 tons in 1929).

During 1930, 180,981 vessels of 155,605,954 tons entered and cleared Chinese ports. Of these 49,402 of 57,246,927 tons were British; 6,638 of 6,490,351 tons, American; 1,131 of 1,846,278 tons, French; 1,045 of 4,245,842 tons, German; 211 of 734,495 tons, Italian; 33,755 of 45,630,705 tons, Japanese; 2,043 of 4,218,277 tons, Norwegian; 3,339 of 1,121,459 tons, Portuguese. ### Internal Communications.

China is traversed in all directions by numerous roads, and, though few are paved or metalled, and most are badly kept, a vast internal trade is carried on partly over them, but chiefly by means of numerous canals and navigable rivers. At the end of 1929 there were 34,810 miles of motor roads open for traffic.

Chinese railway history began in 1876 when the Woosung line, built by foreign enterprise, was opened. At the end of 1930, there were 12,335 miles of railway in China (excluding 1,857 miles in Manchuria), of which about 1,300 miles have been constructed by British enterprise and British capital.

The principal railways in China are :—(1) South Manchuria Railway, from Changchun to Dairen, 693 miles [see also under Manchuria]; (2) Peiping-Mukden line, 847 miles; (3) Peiping-Suiyuan Railway, 817 miles; (4) Peiping-Hankow Railway, 1,244 miles; (5) Lung Hai Railway, 832 miles; (6) Shanghai-Nanking Railway, 253 miles; (7) Tientsin-Pukow Railway, 1009 miles; (8) Shanghai-Hangchow-Ningpo Railway, 219 miles; (9) Hupeh-Hunan Railway, 417 miles; (10) Kiaochou-Tsinan Railway, 395 miles; (11) Yunnan Railway, from the Tonkin border to Yunnanfu, 290 miles; and (12) the Chinese Eastern Railway running eastward from Manchuli through Northern Manchuria to Suifênho (Russian name, Pogradichnaya), the last station in Chinese territory, where it joins the Ussuri Railway, and then runs due east to Vladivostok, and southerly from Harbin to Changchun, joining the South Manchuria Railway. This line was built by the Russians, and under agreements dated October 2, 1920, and May 31, 1924, is operated by Russians and Chinese. It runs for 1,100 miles in Chinese territory. The gauge is the Russian standard of 5 feet, whilst that of all the other railways is 4 feet 8½ inches, with the exception of the Yunnan Railway, which has a gauge of 1 metre. The total revenue of the Government railways in 1930 amounted to 104,848,368 dollars, as compared with 103,788,746 dollars in 1929.

China has a fairly well developed telegraph service. Telegraphs connect all the principal cities in the country, and there are lines to all the neighbouring countries. The telegraph lines have a length of 52,050 miles. Number of telegrams transmitted by the Post-office in 1929, 24,501. The value of the international money orders issued in 1929 was 1,800,332 dollars, and of those cashed, 3,136,692 dollars. Domestic money orders issued in 1929 amounted to 131,784,800 dollars, and those cashed to 131,204,800 dollars. The administration is now completely under Government control. Wireless Telegraph Stations have been installed at many centres.

Telephones are in use in the main cities of China, and long distance telephone communication has been introduced along the railways and in the trade areas. Wireless telephone services have also been established.

The postal work of China, formerly carried on by the Government Courier service and the native posting agencies, was gradually taken in hand by the Chinese Imperial Post Office, begun in 1897 under the management of the Maritime Customs. By Edict of November 6, 1906, the control of the Postal Service was transferred to the Ministry of Communications, and the transfer was actually effected in July, 1911. The work of the Post Office extends over the 18 Provinces of China proper, the New Dominion and Manchuria, which have been divided into postal districts, or sub-districts (42,518 at the end of 1924). The Postal Service with Tibet has been suspended. In 1929, there were 12,263 post offices open, and the number of letters posted was 447,060,250; of postcards 44,166,090; of newspapers, 49,876,890; of printed matter, 63,596,810; of commercial papers, 3,413,920; of samples of merchandise, 1,216,100; of trade circulars, 7,897,360; grand total of 724,512,360. The number of parcels posted in 1929 was 6,857,250. The revenue of the post office in 1929 was 38,423,311 dollars, and the expenditure 37,411,618 dollars. On December 31, 1929, the postal staff numbered 85 foreigners and 37,783 Chinese. China in 1914 joined the Postal Union.

The transmission of mails by air on the Shanghai-Nanking sectional line of the Hu-jung (Shanghai-Chengt'u) Aerial Transportation Administration and the Shanghai-Hankow line of the China National Aviation Corporation was commenced from July 8 and October 21, 1929, respectively.

Banking and Credit.

Banking on modern lines dates from the close of the Tai-ping rebellion in the 'sixties, when the rapid expansion of trade in Shanghai created a demand for credit facilities. In 1902, the Board of Finance established the Ta Ching Bank, with a capital of 4,000,000 Kuping Taels, which was soon raised to 10,000,000 Kuping Taels. Prompted by the success of the Ta Ching Bank, the Board of Posts, Railways, and Telegraphs launched in 1905 a scheme to organise a bank for the control of the finances of the Railways, Telegraphs, Posts and Navigations, and the management of an issue of national loan bonds for the redemption of the Peking-Hankow Railways, and this scheme finally culminated in the establishment of the Bank of Communications in 1906. The year 1905 marked also the beginning of commercial banks in China. The Chekiang Railway Company, which was then a private company, founded the National Commercial Bank in Hangchow, with a capital of 1,000,000 dollars, half of which was subscribed by the Railway itself, and the other half by its stockholders. In the same year was formed the Commercial Bank of China, in the following year, the Ningpo Commercial Bank, and in 1910, the Commercial Guarantee Bank of Chihli. In 1911, the Manchu régime collapsed, and with it the Ta Ching Bank. However, it was speedily reorganised as the Bank of China. From 1914 onwards the establishment of new banks proceeded at a rapid pace, and there are now about 150 banks with over 400 branch offices. The total capitalisation of Chinese banks approximates 400,000,000 dollars, but not more than 150,000,000 dollars have been paid up. Total reserve funds amount to about 20,000,000 dollars.

Of these banks, the Bank of China is the largest, having about 100 branches and sub-branches, and an authorised capital of 60,000,000 dollars, and a paid-up capital of 19,760,200 dollars. Next in order comes the Bank of Communications, whose capital has reached 20,000,000 dollars, 7,713,500 dollars of which are paid-up. It has about 40 branches. The Chinese Government's share in the Bank of China and the Bank of Communications has been wiped out. The Bank of China declared a net profit in 1925 of 1,347,076 dollars; the Bank of Communications, 597,548 dollars.

A new State bank, called the Central Bank of China, was opened in Shanghai on November 1, 1928. It is capitalised at 20,000,000 dollars and has the right to issue convertible notes, to mint and issue coins, and direct the flotation of foreign and domestic loans. The Minister of Finance is appointed Director-General of the bank. The capital is supplied by the Treasury, and though shares may be issued to the public they must never exceed 49 per cent. of the total capital. On December 31, 1930, total assets were 124,386,244 dollars, and included total cash, 56,963,622 dollars; reserve against notes in circulation, 19,475,228 dollars in cash and 3,191,000 dollars in securities. Deposits amounted to 66,042,175 dollars, and the notes in circulation were 22,669,228 dollars. The name of the State bank was subsequently changed to 'The Exchange Bank of China' and a sum of 4,000,000 dollars added to the share capital.

Sino-foreign banking institutions are numerous, having grown rapidly during 1921. In 1918, the Exchange Bank of China was established with Sino-Japanese capital. It has a subscribed capital of 10,000,000 yen. The Italian Bank of China, the Sino-French Bank, the Sino-Scandinavian Bank, and numerous Sino-Japanese institutions were inaugurated in 1921. The Chinese American Bank of Commerce was established by American and Chinese capitalists, with equal interests, under a special charter issued on April 12, 1920, by the Chinese Government.

On July 1, 1924, the Manchurian Official Bank, Fengtien Industrial Bank, and the Bank of the Three Eastern Provinces were amalgamated under the name of the Government Bank of the Three Eastern Provinces, with a capital of 20,000,000 dollars.

Government ordinances governing savings banks in China were first promulgated in 1908. About May in that year a savings department was organised by the Ta Ching Bank, now Bank of China. This was followed later by the establishment of special savings banks in various provinces and other savings departments attached to commercial banks in recent years. In 1925, there were 20 such institutions with total savings deposits amounting to 33,017,942 dollars.

Post Office savings banks at 11 district head offices were opened on July 1, 1919. By the end of 1930, there were 288 savings banks, with 72,343 depositors, and total deposits amounting to 12,699,370 dollars in big dollar account, and 12,435 depositors with 2,317,288 dollars in small coin currency.

Money, Weights, and Measures.

MONEY.

The currency of China is on a silver basis, and consists of taels, dollars, copper cash, and bank notes. The tael is really a weight of silver (about an ounce) of a certain degree of fineness. Theoretically it is divided into 10 mace; 1 mace = 10 candareens. The denominations of the dollar are: 1 dollar = 100 coppers; 1 copper = 10 cash. The tael varies in different parts of the country, the principal taels being (1) the haikwan or customs tael, weighing 583.3 grains (in 1928 it was equal in value to 2s. 11½d) (2) the K'up'ing tael, weighing 575.8 grains, (3) the Tsao'ping tael, weighing 565.65 grains. These are all called treasury taels. The principal local taels are: (1) Peking or Kung'fah tael; (2) Tientsin or Hang P'ing Hwa Pao tael; (3) Canton tael; (4) Newchwang tael (nominal); (5) Shanghai tael. Different taels, about 170 altogether, are in use in every province in the country.

There is unparalleled currency confusion. Although a dollar should be equal to 100 coppers, in fact it is worth almost 350 coppers in some parts of the country, varying from day to day. In the treaty of September 5, 1902, China agreed with Great Britain to take the necessary steps to provide a uniform national coinage which should be legal tender for all purposes throughout the Empire, and an Imperial Decree was issued in October, 1908, commanding the introduction of a uniform tael currency, of which the unit must be a silver tael coin of .98 touch weighing 1 K'up'ing or Treasury-scale tael or ounce. This decree was cancelled by a further decree of May 25, 1910, establishing the silver dollar (yuan) of .90 touch and weighing .72 Treasury-weight tael as the unit of currency. The touch and weight of the silver subsidiary coins (50c., 25c., 20c., and 10c.) were also definitely specified, while provision was made for further subsidiary coins (5c. nickel, 2c., 1c.,  $\frac{1}{2}$ c., and  $\frac{1}{4}$ c. copper) of touch and weight to be laid down later. The minting of these silver coins has begun, but as they are at a discount in every province other than the one in which they are minted, confusion has been rendered more confounded. There are ten different varieties of dollars in circulation. Although the law of May, 1910, was intended to bring the provincial mints under the control of the Central Government, the Governors have effected a serious depreciation of silver and copper money by their indiscriminate minting of subsidiary coins. A new Central Mint has now been established in Shanghai by the National Government.

In China, standards of weights, measures and length vary all over the country. Generally speaking, two kinds of standards are now in use, namely, the old and the new. The old standard was formulated from the Weights and Measures Law promulgated in 1914, establishing a double system, the standard metric unit and that based on ying tsao ch'ih, or 'builder's foot' for length and Kuping tael or liang for weight. The law governing the new standard was promulgated by the National Government on February 6, 1929, and it is intended to be the legal standard of weights and measures throughout China. For convenience' sake and customary usage it also established a double system; one is the standard metric unit and the other, which is temporary in nature and to be abolished as soon as the people are accustomed to the use of standard units, is designed only for market use. The latter is derived from the former by taking one litre of Kung Sheng as one Shih Sheng, which is nearest to the Chinese customary unit of capacity 'Sheng'; one-half kilogramme as one Shih Chin, which is the average weight of the different varieties of 'Chin' in different localities; and one-third of a metre or Kung Ch'ih as one Shih Ch'ih, which is the average length of different varieties of Chinese 'Foot' in different localities, thus constituting the so-called 1-2-3-system of Chinese weights and measures based on International metric standard. Such a system as devised by the Ministry of Industry, Commerce and Labour and proclaimed by the National Government to be put into force may also have great bearing on the users of British 'Foot-Pound' system by taking the following approximate value: 1 quart equals to 1 litre, 1 pound equals to  $\frac{1}{2}$  kilogramme and 1 yard equals to 1 metre. The Russian and Japanese system can also be thus varied accordingly so as to fit themselves to the International System. The following table shows the old units of weight, capacity and length:—

Chinese Outer Territories.

Manchuria.

Manchuria, lying between the province of Chihli and the Amur river, and extending from the Hingan mountains eastwards to Korea and the Ussuri river, has an area of about 363,610 square miles and a population, according to the latest investigation, of 24,520,661 at July 31, 1927. Immigration from the densely crowded parts of Central China is rapidly increasing the population. In the year ending June 30, 1930, 77,000 Chinese arrived in Manchuria. Manchuria consists of 3 provinces, Sheng-King or Feng-tien (area, 56,000 sq. miles; population, 15,000,000), capital Mukden; Kirin (105,000 sq. miles; population, 7,500,000), capital Kirin; and Heilung-chiang or the Amur province (203,000 sq. miles; population, 2,500,000) with Tsitsihar (Heilung Hsien) (population 30,000) for its capital. The chief towns are Mukden, the capital, with about 250,000 inhabitants; Newchang (65,600) standing about 30 miles up the Liao river, at the mouth of which is the port of Ying-k'ou, often called Newchang. Besides Newchang, Mukden, An-tung (72,500), Tatung-kou, Tiehling, Tung-chiangtzu, and Fakumen are open to commerce. Other important towns are Hsin-min-fu, Liao-yang, Feng-hwang-cheng, and Taonanfu, a town rapidly risen to importance, on the border of Eastern Mongolia. In Kirin province is the town of Chang-chun (Kwangchengtze), with 80,000 inhabitants.

There is no longer a Manchu population in Manchuria. A few scattered communities alone remain. Owing to the enormous development of the soya-bean industry and the improved railway facilities, Manchuria has grown more rapidly in wealth than any other part of China. Manchuria is primarily an agricultural country, its soil is one of the richest in the world. The area under cultivation in Manchuria totals 81,718,945 acres. Beans, millet, wheat and rice are the principal crops. In 1930 the area under wheat was 2,125,000 acres (1,552,470 tons); millet, 2,890,000 acres (3,692,000 tons); soya-beans, 7,000,000 acres (5,351,000 tons); kaoliang, 3,060,000 acres (5,136,000 tons). Formerly the whole of the wheat yield was exported, but of late years the flour industry has been growing with the increase in the wheat production. There are now some 40 mills in Manchuria, which turn out about 15,000,000 sacks annually. Extensive forests also abound; their estimated extent is 28,756,000 acres. The soil of certain districts—especially in the vicinity of Mukden and Harbin—is suitable for beet and flax growing, and the industry is slowly developing. Manchuria is rich in minerals, such as coal, iron, gold, silver, lead and marl for cement.

The Russian lease of Port Arthur and Talien-wan (called Dalny by the Russians and Dairen by the Japanese), and the southern extremity of the Liao-tung peninsula and the South Manchuria Railway were transferred to Japan by the Portsmouth Peace Conference, September 5, 1905. On December 22, 1905, China gave official recognition to this transfer and granted Japan the right to extend the railway from Mukden to Antung at the mouth of the Yalu river, where it connects with the Korean railway. In 1912 a branch line (78 miles) from Changchun, the northern terminus of the Japanese South Manchuria Railway to Kirin, constructed by joint Japanese and Chinese enterprise, and operated under special convention by the South Manchuria Railway, was opened to traffic. The total length of the South Manchuria Railway is 693 miles (Dairen to Changchun, main line 438 miles; branch to Port Arthur, 29 miles; branch to Newchwang, 14 miles; Fushun coal mines, 31 miles; branch to Yentai, 10 miles; and Mukden to Antung, 171 miles). On August 1, 1917, the whole of the railway system of Korea (some 1000 miles in length) passed under the management of the South Manchuria Railway, giving the latter a through line under its own management from Fusan, the Korean port nearest Japan, to Changchun, where connection with the railway system to Harbin and thence to Leningrad is effected. The total capital of the company is, 440,000,000 yen, and the operating revenue from railways in 1929-30, 122,103,742 yen; expenditure, 47,213,507 yen; net profit, 74,890,234 yen. The total receipts, including those from industrial undertakings, in 1929-30, 240,998,062 yen; total expenditure, 195,492,205 yen; profit, 45,505,857 yen. Besides the South Manchuria Railway, Manchuria is traversed by the Chinese Eastern Railway (1,078 miles), the Perping-Mukden Railway (723 miles), the Ssuningkai-Taonan Railway (312 miles), and a number of smaller lines (2,058 miles); total length, 35,448 miles. The Kirin Provincial Government proposes to construct a new railway running from Kirin in a north-easterly direction to Tungkiang. There are 265 post offices and 550 postal agencies.

Tibet.

Tibet, extending from the Pamir region eastwards between the Himalaya and Kwen-lun mountains to the frontiers of China, has an area of 463,200 square miles with a population estimated at between 1,500,000 and 6,000,000. Probably 2,000,000 is near the mark. Lhasa, the capital, has from 15,000 to 20,000 inhabitants. The country being bleak and mountainous and strangers having been jealously excluded, wide regions are still unexplored.

Chinese authority was in the past represented by two Ambans who had charge, respectively, of foreign and military affairs. There were three Chinese commandants of troops at Lhasa, Shigatse, and Dingri where the permanent military force of about 4,600, provided by China, were mostly quartered. There were a few other Chinese officials, but the civil and religious administration of the country was left almost entirely to Tibetans. The head of the government is the Dalai Lama, who resides at the Po-ta-la (or palace) near Lhasa. He acts through a minister or regent appointed from among the chief Tibetan Lamas and assisted by five ministers. Early in 1908 the territory of Western Szechuen and the adjoining territory of Eastern Tibet were united into a new 'special administrative area,' Sikañg, or Szechwan Marches, with Batang, re-named Baanfu, as capital.

The prevailing religion is Lamaism, a corrupt form of Buddhism, but along with it there exists the Bon, or Shamanistic, faith. In some places agriculture is carried on, barley and other cereals as well as pulse and vegetables being grown. In some favoured regions fruits, including peaches and even grapes, are produced. In other places the pursuits are pastoral, the domestic animals being sheep and yak (often crossed with Indian cattle), while in some regions there are buffaloes, pigs, and camels. Wool-spinning, weaving, and knitting are common, and there are many hands skilful in making images and other decorations for religious edifices. The chief minerals worked are gold, borax, and salt. There is a large trade with China and considerable traffic across the Indian frontier. A telegraph line, 144 miles long, connects Lhasa with Gyantse.

The trade between India and Tibet has to be carried through lofty passes between 14,000 and 18,000 feet high, most of which are practically impassable during seasons of heavy rain and snow. Sheep and also crosses between yaks and ordinary cattle are used as beasts of burden. The most important route into Tibet from India is from Siliguri, near Darjeeling in northern Bengal, and across the small Frontier State of Sikkim to Gyantse and Yatung in Tibet, the two leading trade marts authorised by the existing Convention. The other chief means of access to Tibet are from Almora in the northern part of the United Provinces, and from Simla over the Simla-Tibet road to Gartok in western Tibet, which is at about 14,200 feet elevation above the sea. From Almora to Gartok the direction is almost due north, and from Simla to Gartok is almost due east.

For the removal of hindrances to the Indian trade a treaty was made with China in 1890, supplemented by a second treaty in 1893, but the hindrances still remained. Consequently, in 1904, the Indian Government sent a mission with an escort to arrange matters directly with the Tibetan Government. The mission met with a good deal of armed opposition, but at length, on September 7, a convention was executed at Lhasa. The convention provides for the re-erection of boundary stones (alluding to former pastoral disputes) on the Sikkim frontier; for marts at Yatung, Gyantze, and Gartok for Tibetan and British merchants; for the demolition of forts on the trade routes; for a Tibetan commissioner to confer with British officials for the alteration of the objectionable features of the treaty of 1893 ; for the settlement of an equitable customs tariff ; for the repair of the passes and the appointment of Tibetan and British officials at the trade marts. China paid an indemnity of 2,500,000 rupees (166,666 $\frac{2}{3}$ .), and the evacuation of the Chumbi valley by the British began in February, 1908. Further, no Tibetan territory may be sold, leased or mortgaged to any foreign Power, nor may Tibetan affairs, or Tibetan public works, be subject to foreign management or interference without the consent of the British. The adhesion of China to this convention was secured by an agreement signed at Peking on April 27, 1906. Under the Convention of August 31, 1907, Great Britain and Russia agree not to enter into negotiation with Tibet except through the Chinese Government, nor to send representatives to Lhasa. But this engagement does not affect the provisions of the British-Tibetan convention of September 7, 1904, ratified by China in 1906. Negotiations were begun at Simla in Sept. 1907, for the conclusion of Trade Regulations between India and Tibet, and were brought to a satisfactory conclusion in April, 1908.

Sin-Kiang, or the New Dominion, consists of Chinese Turkestan, Kulja, and Kashgaria, and comprises all Chinese dependencies lying between Mongolia on the north and Tibet on the south. It is now regarded as a separate province, its Governor residing at Urumchi, or Tihwafu, the capital. Its area is estimated at about 550,340 square miles and population at about 1,200,000. The inhabitants are of various races, known as Turki (Kashgari, Kalmuk, Khirghiz, Taranchi, etc.), mostly Mohammedan and Chinese, who have of recent years greatly increased in numbers. The chief towns are Ili, Kashgar, Yarkand, Khotan, and Aksu. The country is administered under Chinese officials, residing at Urumchi, the subordinates being usually natives of the country. In regions about the Kashgar and Yarkand rivers the soil is fertile, irrigation is practised, and cereals, fruits and vegetables are grown. Other productions of the country are wool, cotton, and silk. Jade is worked, and in some districts gold is found. The whole territory is yearly increasing in population and prosperity. A trade agreement with Soviet Russia was signed in 1924.

In 1927, imports from India totalled 11,86,848 rupees, and exports to India 28,14,568 rupees ; trade with Afghanistan in the same year was : imports, 8,30,500 rupees ; exports, 5,47,540 rupees ; with China : imports, 19,39,850 rupees ; exports, 7,37,250 rupees.

Mongolia.

The vast and indefinite tract of country called Mongolia stretches from the Khinghan mountains on the east to the Tarbagatai mountains on the west, being intersected towards its western end by the Altai mountains and the Irtysh river. On the north it is bounded by Siberia and on the south by the outer Kan-su and other regions which are united into Sin-Kiang. The area of Mongolia is about 1,875,000 square miles, and its population about 750,000 Mongols and about 100,000 other nationalities, principally Chinese and Russians. The monks (lamas) are the most important element in the population, forming 15 per cent. of the total, and over 30 per cent. of the male population. A wide tract in the heart of this region is occupied by the Desert of Gobi which extends south-westwards into Chinese Turkestan. The inhabitants are nomadic Mongols and Kalmucks who range the desert with camels, horses, and sheep. Even in fertile districts they are little given to agriculture. But of recent years there has been a great extension of Chinese immigration, and a large area of what was known as Mongolia, extending from China proper and Manchuria to the Gobi Desert, is now indistinguishable from Chinese territory, and has in fact been absorbed within Chinese administration in Manchuria. Chinese settlers are gradually invading the Gobi Desert. Irrigation alone is needed. Inner Mongolia and portions of the adjacent provinces in China proper have been divided into three special districts or administrative areas, Jehol, Chahar, and Suiyuan, each of which is governed by a Tartar-General (Tu'tun) appointed by the Chinese Government. The chief town or centre of population is Urga (which, since 1924, is known as Ulan Bator Hoto, i.e. 'Town of the Red Heroes'), 170 miles due south of Kiakhta, a frontier emporium for the caravan trade carried on with China across the Gobi Desert. Urga has some 100,000 inhabitants. Kiakhta is a Siberian frontier town, and stands about 100 miles from the south end of Lake Baikal. Chief exports are wool, skins and hides, furs, horns, &c. Number of animals in 1928: horses, 1,340,000; camels, 270,000; cattle, 1,500,000; sheep, 10,600,000. During the summer months motor-car services cross the Gobi desert, the journey between Kalgan and Urga (1,160 road miles) occupying 4-6 days. It was inaugurated in 1917. During 1930 work was commenced on the new railway line from Tao An to Solun.

Many gold mines are found in Outer Mongolia, but few are worked. There are also deposits of copper, silver, iron, and tin. The only industries are one tannery, one brick-works and one saw-mill.

For a history of political events in Mongolia from 1912 to 1923, see THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK for 1923, p. 794.

In May 1924, Outer Mongolia became a Republic now known as the 'Mongolian People's Revolutionary Government,' run on Soviet lines; Inner Mongolia remaining part of China and the Mongolian-Buryatik Republic joining the Soviet Union. In 1928 Outer Mongolia had a population of 676,036, of whom 579,000 are Mongols, 90,000 Russians and 7,000 Chinese. Principal towns: Urga, Uliassuti and Kobdo.

On December 12, 1929, a new independent Republic was proclaimed in the district of Burga, with Hailar as its capital.

According to the Mongolian constitution, the highest power is vested in a parliament (the large Huruldan) which is elected by universal suffrage, male and female, over 18 years of age. This met first in November 1924. It has to meet once a year at least, and alone has the power to amend the constitution. It elects from its number 30 members who form the executive committee (the small Huruldan) which is responsible to it. This committee elects five of its members to a Board which carries on current state affairs.

Since March, 1915, Mongolia has had a legal currency of its own, based on the 'Tukhrik,' a silver coin equivalent theoretically to half an American gold dollar, and divided into 100 Mongo, but recent political troubles have delayed the passing of the system of barter in business transactions. In 1923 a state note-issuing bank, the 'Commercial and Industrial Bank,' ('Mongolbank') was founded.

Buddhist Lamaism is the prevalent form of religion, the Lamas having their residence at Urga and other centres.

COLOMBIA.

(LA REPÚBLICA DE COLOMBIA.)

Constitution and Government.

THE Republic of Colombia, which in colonial days was called 'Vice-royalty of New Granada,' gained its independence of Spain in 1819, and was officially constituted December 17, 1819, together with the present territories of Panama, Venezuela and Ecuador, the State of 'Greater Colombia,' which continued for about twelve years. It then split up into Venezuela, Ecuador, and the Republic of New Granada in 1830. The Constitution of May 22, 1858, changed New Granada into a confederation of eight States, under the name of Confederation Granadina. May 8, 1863, saw another Constitution, and the adoption of the name of the United States of Colombia. The revolution of 1885 led the National Council of Bogotá, composed of two delegates from each State, to promulgate the Constitution of August 5, 1886, which abolished the sovereignty of the States, converting them into departments, with governors appointed by the President of the Republic, though they retained some of their old rights, such as the management of their own finances. A decree of May, 1928, abolished their right to borrow abroad without the sanction of the central Government.

The legislative power rests with a Congress of two Houses, the Senate, of about 58 members, elected for 4 years, and the House of Representatives, of about 131 members, chosen for 2 years. By the Act of 1930 the Senators are elected indirectly by departmental assemblies, at least 3 senators for each department and more according to population; the Representatives are chosen by the people in each department (one for every 50,000). Congress meets annually at Bogotá on July 20.

The President is elected by direct vote of the people for a term of 4 years, and is not eligible for re-election until 4 years afterwards. Congress elects, for a term of one year, two substitutes, one of whom occupies the presidency in the event of a vacancy during a presidential term. Public expenditures are supervised by the Controller General, who is responsible, not to the President, but to Congress.

President of the Republic.—Dr. Enrique Olaya-Herrera. Elected February, 1930. Holds office from August 7, 1930, to August 7, 1934.

The ministries are those of the Interior, Foreign Affairs, Finance, War, Public Instruction, Industry and Labour, Public Works, Agriculture and Commerce, and Posts and Telegraphs.

On November 3, 1903, Panama asserted its independence and was formed into a separate Republic. On April 6, 1914, Colombia signed a treaty with the United States, at Bogotá, agreeing to recognise the independence of Panama and receiving as indemnity for the Panama Canal zone 25 million dollars (5 millions sterling) and certain rights in the zone. (See Introduction of THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK, 1915.) This Treaty was ratified by both countries in 1921.

A boundary dispute with Peru, which has lasted for over 100 years, was settled in 1928; another with Brazil was settled in 1930. Diplomatic relations with Ecuador, suspended in 1925, were resumed in 1931.

Area and Population.

The area of the Republic is estimated at about 447,536 square miles. It has a coastline of about 2,046 miles, of which 868 miles are on the Caribbean Sea and 1,178 miles on the Pacific Ocean. The area and population of the 14 departments, 3 intendencies and 7 commissaries were, according to the census of November, 16, 1928, as follows (the capitals in brackets).

Grand Total . . .	447,536	3,899,923	3,881,210	69,867	7,851,000

Of the total population (including Indians) in 1928, 3,937,892, or 50·16 per cent., were males, and 3,913,108, or 49·84 per cent., were females. Immigration is almost negligible; foreigners in 1928 numbered 35,251, including: German, 1,682; English, 1,436; United States, 1,607; Italian, 1,916; Syrian, 2,967; and Venezuelan, 14,743. Urban population totalled 2,437,848, or 31 per cent.; for every 1,000 townspeople there are 2,200 country people. Population over 10 years of age numbers 5,610,715, of whom 51·57 per cent. are literate. Illiterate men number 23·12 per cent., and illiterate women 25·12 per cent. of those over 10 years of age. Illiterates were 68 per cent. of the population at the 1918 census.

The bulk of the population lives at altitudes of from 4,000 to 9,000 feet above sea level.

The capital, Bogotá (census population, 1928, 235,421), lies 8,600 feet above the sea. The chief commercial towns, with their population in 1928, are Barranquilla (139,974), connected with the coast at Puerto Colombia by 17 miles of railway; Cali (122,847); Medellín (120,044), a coffee and mining centre; Cartagena (92,494); Manizales (81,091); Ibagué (56,333); Cúcuta (49,279); Bucaramanga (44,083). Buenaventura, the principal port on the Pacific, was destroyed by fire in 1931; it is being rebuilt.

The language spoken is Spanish—the purest Spanish spoken in South America.

Religion, Education and Justice.

The religion of the nation is Roman Catholicism. There are 4 Catholic archbishops, viz. of Bogotá, Cartagena, Medellín, and Popayán, the first having 4 suffragans and the other three 2 each. One of the suffragan sees is Panamá, belonging to ecclesiastical province of Cartagena, and now also to the Republic of Panamá. Other forms of religion are permitted, so long as their exercise is 'not contrary to Christian morals nor to the law.'

The Ministry of Public Instruction has supreme direction of education. Primary education is free but not compulsory. In 1930-31 there were 7,506 primary and secondary schools with 458,079 pupils; 25 industrial schools with 1,892 children; 6 art schools with 399 pupils; 17 normal schools with about 1,000 pupils. The oldest University is that of Bogotá (founded 1572). This and the School of Mines at Medellín are national institutions. The other Universities are maintained by Departments; they are the Universities of Antioquia at Medellín (founded 1822), with 1,000 students, of Bolívar at Cartagena, of Cauca at Popayan, and of Narino at Pasto.

A new judicial code, published in the Diario Oficial, October 24, 1931, went into effect January 1, 1932. The Supreme Court, at Bogotá, is divided into 4 chambers—civil cassation, criminal cassation, general business and civil 'de unica instancia.' Each judicial district has a superior court of 3 judges or more. Circuit and municipal courts hear minor cases.

Finance.

Ordinary revenue and expenditure for 6 fiscal years in gold pesos (1 gold peso = 97 cents, U.S.) :—

Year	Revenue	Expenditure	Year	Revenue	Expenditure
1927-28	63,267,488	55,607,764	1930-31	49,357,917	61,991,755
1928-29	75,514,380	52,334,199	1931-32 <sup>1</sup>	39,610,000	37,610,000
1929-30	75,238,923	84,025,618	1932-33 <sup>1</sup>	35,800,000	35,800,000

Estimates.

The main items of ordinary expenditure in 1930-31 were: Interior, 8,919,030 pesos; Finance, 20,840,752 pesos; War, 4,325,273 pesos; National Education, 4,406,095 pesos; Public Works, 14,248,684 pesos; Posts and Telegraphs, 5,635,028 pesos.

The external debt on June 30, 1931, stood at 204,381,037 gold pesos, divided as follows: Central Government, 66,839,872 pesos; Departments, 63,427,076 pesos; Municipalities, 23,451,340 pesos. This does not include 50,662,746 pesos borrowed abroad by various banks. About 88 per cent. are dollar obligations. The national internal debt on December 31, 1930, was 20,913,370 pesos. On February 12, 1932, the Government suspended the transfer abroad of the sinking fund payments on its external debt.

British investments in 1930 were 8,609,808£., including 2,920,041£. in Government bonds and 2,919,840£. in railways; American investments (U.S. Department of Commerce estimate) were 171,698,000 dollars in Government, departmental and municipal bonds, and 129,994,000 dollars in direct investments, including about 56,000,000 dollars in oil lands.

Defence.

Military service is compulsory, from 1 to 1½ years. The permanent army consists of 3 divisions of 2 brigades of 2 regiments of infantry; total 12 infantry regiments; 2 cavalry regiments, each of 4 squadrons; 1 artillery regiment; 1 engineer battalion; 1 transport battalion of 3 companies. The peace effective in 1930 was 499 officers and 8,000 other ranks. In war time every fit Colombian is compelled to serve, and the war effective is about 50,000. The infantry are armed with rifles of the improved Remington pattern, with the French Gras rifle, and with the 88 pattern Mauser.

Colombia has 1 seagoing gunboat, 3 coastguard patrol vessels built in 1925, 5 river gunboats, and several motor launches for customs services. Three of the river gunboats, armed with one 3 in. and four machine guns each, built in the United Kingdom were supplied to the Colombian Government in 1930.

Production and Industry.

Very little of the country is under cultivation; Colombia is a heavy importer of foodstuffs. But much of the soil is fertile, and is coming into use as roads improve. Colombia is the largest producer of mild coffee, demand for which is unaffected by over-production in Brazil. Crops are grown by smallholders, and are picked all the year round. Quality is carefully guarded; importation of foreign seeds has been forbidden since 1923. Exports, 1931, 3,660,221 bags of 60 kilos. United States takes over 80 per cent. of the total. Tobacco is also grown. Cotton area is 150,000 acres. Cocoa, sugar (about 40,000 metric tons annually), vegetable ivory, tagua (or vegetable ivory nut), and dyewoods are produced, besides wheat, maize, plantains, &c. Banana cultivation is extending; exports, 1931, 5,424,000 stems. About one-third of the bananas imported into the United Kingdom are from Colombia. The rubber tree grows wild, and its cultivation has begun. Tolu balsam is cultivated, and copaiba trees are tapped but are not cultivated. Dye and cedar woods are abundant on the Magdalena River, but little or no wood of any sort is exported. Forest lands total 150 million acres.

Colombia is rich in minerals, and gold is found in all the departments; exports in 1930, 9,063,057 pesos. The richest mines are in Antioquia, Cauca, Caldas, Tolima, Nariño, Choco, and Cundinamarca. Other minerals are copper, lead, mercury, cinnabar, manganese, emeralds, and platinum (first discovered in Colombia in 1735), which is abundant in the alluvial deposits of the Choco River; almost the whole population of the Choco region is engaged in platinum mining; average annual output, 45,000 ozs. The working of the emerald mines is a Government monopoly or Government-controlled; exports are rigidly controlled, only the finest stones being sent abroad. The chief mines are those of Muza (Government-owned) and Chivor (American-owned). The country also has coal, iron, limestone, sand, and fireclay deposits, so that in some parts it is highly favourable for the development of metallurgical industries. The extraction of salt from the mines in Zipaguira and the evaporation at the numerous natural salt pans along the Caribbean coast are a Government monopoly, leased to the Banco de la República; annual revenue is about 1,500,000 gold pesos. There are extensive deposits of coal of high quality, especially near Cali. Petroleum has recently been found; production has risen from 447,744 barrels in 1924 to 20,346,000 barrels in 1930; 1931, 17,000,000 barrels. The output is piped from the oilfields to the coast.

Commerce.

Exports and imports were placed in 1931 under Government control, to protect the foreign exchange value of the gold peso.

Imports and exports for 6 years (5 gold pesos = 17.) :—

Shipping and Communications.

Owing to the mountainous character of the country, the construction of arterial roads and railways is both costly and difficult. The roads are generally simple mule tracks, though some progress has been made by the Government in the construction of main roads, railways and ropeways. Overhead ropeways are used ; one connecting Mariquita with Manizales is the longest in the world. Total length of motor roads in use, about 3,560 miles ; total of graded roads, 19,014 miles in 1930.

In Colombia there are 15 lines of railway (11 national, and 3 British companies), with a total length (1930) of 1,846 miles ; about 2,480 miles are under construction. Of the total, 614 miles have a gauge of 3 ft. ; the rest a metre gauge. The national lines were placed in 1931 under the administration of a non-political council. Most of them are small disconnected lines serving principally as feeders to the Magdalena river, which is the main traffic route between the Caribbean and the interior. A new railway to serve the western section of the Republic, the Bolombolo-Canafistula Railway, 521 miles in length, is under construction.

A daily airplane service connects Bogotá with Barranquilla on the Atlantic coast ; from there a bi-weekly service (mail and passengers), reaches New York in  $3\frac{1}{2}$  days. A Colombian company furnishes daily service between Barranquilla and Buenaventura on the Pacific coast, as well as Colon.

The Magdalena river is subject to drought and despite possible minor improvements, navigation will always be impeded during the dry season. That river is navigable for 900 miles; small steamers ascend to La Dorada, 592 miles from Barranquilla. A British river-transport company has contracted with the Government to convey mails and passengers to and from the interior every three days. Other companies, British, German, and native, ply on the rivers. A project is on foot to open the Bocos de Cenezia to navigation by ocean steamers, converting Barranquilla into an ocean port.

In 1930, the post-office handled 15,286,583 letters and post-cards and 15,659,322 packets of printed matter, samples, and business papers. Number of offices, 1,075. There are 23,020 miles of Government telegraph lines; number of offices, 880. Telephone system is being extended; wireless telephony is utilized between Colombia and Chile.

International cable service to all Latin America and the United States is furnished by the lines of All-America Cables which touch Colombia at Cartagena, Barranquilla and Buenaventura. From the last point a connecting land line, operated by the company, extends to Bogotá via Cali. The company is installing wireless telephone and telegraph stations at Bogotá and Medellín for North American and European service; the Marconi Wireless has a station in Bogotá covering points in the interior as well as abroad.

Money, Weights, and Measures.

Under the Law of June 12, 1907, the monetary unit is a gold peso equal to one-fifth of a pound sterling and of proportionate weight, the fineness being the same; it equals 97.3 cents, U.S. Gold coins are  $2\frac{1}{2}$ , 5, and 10 pesos. Silver coins are (900 fine) the half-peso, and 20 and 10 centavos. Nickel coins for 1, 2, and 5 centavos are legal tender. There are also notes representing gold pesos of 1, 2, 5, and 10 pesos respectively. On June 30, 1931, the total currency of Colombia consisted:—gold coinage, 11,393,000 pesos; bullion, 588,000 pesos, nearly all in the Banco de la República; paper money (gold certificates and old issues), 36,819,000 pesos; silver and nickel coinage, 11,551,000 pesos; Treasury bonds, 40,000 pesos; other domestic specie, 55,000 pesos; foreign specie, 56,000 pesos, making a total of 55,502,000 pesos. Gold reserves on June 30, 1931, were 10,080,000 held at home and 11,089,000 held abroad by the Banco de la República; other banks had gold reserves of 1,901,000 pesos, making a total of 23,070,000 pesos of which 11,981,000 was held within the country. Bills of the Banco de la República totalled 23,889,000 pesos.

On July 23, 1923, the Banco de la República was inaugurated as a central bank. The capital and reserves (June 30, 1931) amount to 14,102,000 pesos; total assets, 43,583,850 pesos. It has the exclusive privilege until 1943 of issuing banknotes in Colombia. Its deposits and note issues must be covered (law of December 1, 1931) by a gold reserve of 50 per cent. of their value (later reduced to 35 per cent.); a decree of October, 1931, required all banks to turn their gold over to the Central Bank, which has sole power, through a Central Exchange Board, to buy and sell gold and foreign exchange.

The Agricultural Mortgage Bank of Bogotá, formed by the consolidation of the mortgage departments of 5 principal banks in 1925, was supplemented in 1931 by the Agrarian Credit Bank with capital of 10 million pesos subscribed by Government, Departments, Municipalities and others.

There are 21 commercial banks with total paid-up capital and reserves (June 30, 1931) of 45,437,000 pesos, including 4 foreign (2 English, 1 Canadian) commercial banks and 2 native mortgage banks. This does not include the Banco de la República.

The metric system was introduced into the Republic in 1857. In custom-house business the kilogramme, equal to 2·204 avoirdupois pounds, is the standard. In ordinary commerce the arroba, of 27·5 pounds, or 12½ kilos; the quintal, of 4 arrobas, or 50 kilos; and the carga, or "mule load," of 2½ quintals, or 125 kilos, are generally used. The Colombian libra is equal to 1·102 pound avoirdupois. The Colombian vara, or 80 cm., is still in some cases the measure of length used for retailing purposes, but in liquid measure the French litre is the legal standard.

COSTA RICA.

(REPÚBLICA DE COSTA RICA.)

Constitution and Government.

THE Republic of Costa Rica (literally the 'Rich Coast'), an independent State since the year 1821, and forming from 1824 to 1829 part of the Confederation of Central America, is governed under a Constitution promulgated on December 7, 1871, and modified very frequently since that date. Practically there was no constitution, but only dictatorships, between 1870 and 1882. The legislative power is now vested in a single chamber called the Constitutional Congress, and made up of 43 deputies, one for every 8,000 inhabitants. The members of the Chamber are elected for the term of four years, one-half retiring every two years. The President is elected for four years. By the Election Law of August 18, 1913, universal suffrage was adopted for all male citizens who are of age and able to support themselves, except those deprived of civil rights, criminals, bankrupts and the insane. Voting for President, Deputies and Municipal Councillors is, by the Law of July 26, 1925, secret, direct and free. Diplomatic relations with Panama, severed since 1921, were resumed October, 1928.

President of the Republic.—Don Cleto González Víquez, elected on February 12, 1928; assumed office May 8, 1928.

The administration normally is carried on by seven Secretaries of State, appointed by the President, who direct the departments of: Interior and Police; Foreign Affairs; Justice, and Public Worship; Education; Public Security; Finance and Commerce; Public Works and Hygiene and Public Health.

Area and Population.

The area of the Republic is estimated at 23,000 English square miles, divided into seven provinces, San José, Alajuela, Heredia, Cartago, Guanacaste, Puntarenas, and Limón. The last Census, taken in May, 1927, showed a population of 471,525, made up as follows:—

Province	Population	Province	Population
San José . . . .	153,183	Guanacaste . . .	51,142
Alajuela . . . .	97,577	Puntarenas . . .	28,739
Heredia . . . . .	38,407	Limón . . . . .	32,278

Estimated population on January 1, 1931, was 516,031.

The vital statistics for four years were as follows:—

	Marriages	Births	Deaths	Increase	Immigration	Emigration
1927	3,769	22,588	10,677	11,911	7,975	7,274
1928	3,517	23,109	11,832	11,777	8,858	8,420
1929	3,098	22,662	11,829	10,833	8,506	8,024
1930	2,975	23,650	11,225	12,425	6,707	6,957

The population of European descent, many of them pure Spanish blood, dwell mostly around the capital, the city of San José (population, 1928, 51,459, with suburbs, 62,637), and in the towns of Alajuela (8,611), Cartago (16,261), Heredia (10,763), Liberia (7,473), Puntarenas (7,848), and Limón (15,690). The last-named, on the Caribbean coast, is the country's chief seaport. There are some 18,000 coloured British West Indians, mostly in Limón Province, on the banana farms. The native Indian population is dwindling.

Spanish is the language of the country.

Religion and Education.

The Roman Catholic is the religion of the State, but there is entire religious liberty under the Constitution. The Archbishop of Costa Rica has under him the Bishop of Alajuela.

Elementary instruction is compulsory and free. Elementary schools are provided and maintained by local school councils, while the national government pays the teachers, besides making subventions in aid of local funds. In 1931 there were 516 elementary schools with 1,892 teachers and 51,668 enrolled pupils. For secondary instruction there are at San José a lyceum for boys with 684 pupils and 38 instructors, and a college for girls with 423 pupils and 43 teachers. A normal school established in 1915 at Heredia has 689 pupils and 28 teachers. The towns of Cartago and Alajuela have each a college. Expenditure on education, 1930, 5,032,320 colones (£257,120).

Justice.

Justice is administered by the Supreme Court of Justice, two Appeal Courts, and the Court of Cassation. There are also subordinate courts in the separate provinces, and local justices throughout the Republic. Capital punishment cannot be inflicted. In 1930 there were 2,534 criminal cases, of which 783 were convicted, and 9,718 cases of misdemeanour, including 5,877 drink convictions; there were 5,961 civil cases.

Finance.

The revenue and expenditure for five years have been as follows (nominally, £1 sterling = 10.45 colones; 1 colon = 46½ cents, U.S., but since 1926 it has been stabilized at 25 cents, U.S.):—

	colones	colones	colones	colones	colones

Revenue in 1930, at 19.57 colones to the £, equalled 1,403,460£.; expenditures, 1,661,240£. Customs revenue furnished 12,579,323 colones; liquor monopoly 4,384,725, and Pacific Railway 2,332,200 colones. The largest items of expenditure are finance (about 12 per cent.), public instruction (19 per cent.), and internal development (17 per cent.). Military expenditures were 1.73 per cent. of the total. In 1931 the importation and sale of gasoline was made a government monopoly, proceeds of which are to be applied to the floating debt.

The foreign debt of the Republic outstanding on January 1, 1931, was 68,341,190 colones, made up of gold refunding bonds, 1911, 1,542,000£.; the French Loan of 1911 (in liquidation), 5,774,000 (pre-War gold) francs; a U.S. loan of 1926, 7,600,000 dollars; Pacific Railway bonds, 1,800,000 dollars (U.S.); and 97,369£. due to an English construction company. The internal debt amounted to 25,753,562 colones. British investments in Costa Rica (1930) were about 5,200,000£.; American investments (U.S. Department of Commerce) were 10,247,000 dollars in Costa Rican bonds, and 22,416,000 dollars in railways, public utilities and agriculture.

Defence.

Costa Rica has an army, including reserve and national guard, of 150,485 officers and men, of whom in 1929, 50,485 were enrolled and organized in 33 battalions to be called out on mobilization. The standing and active army is limited to 500 by a convention reached in 1923 by the States of Central America. Its strength in 1930 was 321. The Republic has also 1 motor launch on the Atlantic side and 1 on the Pacific side for Revenue purposes.

Production and Industry.

Agriculture is the principal industry. The cultivated area is about 1,039,883 acres; grass lands cover 6,552,000 acres. There are thousands of square miles of public lands in Costa Rica that have never been cleared, on which can be found quantities of virgin rosewood, cedar, mahogany, and other cabinet woods. The principal agricultural products are coffee, 23,536 metric tons in 1930-31, bananas 5,834,045 stems, and cocoa, 7,317 metric tons. Coffee and bananas account for nine-tenths of the exports. Maize, sugar-cane, rice, and potatoes are commonly cultivated. About 5,000 acres are under tobacco. The distillation of spirits is a government monopoly. The live-stock, in 1929, consisted of 398,737 cattle, 84,563 horses, 83,174 pigs and 8,177 mules. The second industry of importance is that of gold and silver mining on the Pacific slope. Gold output, 1930, was valued at 38,699 dollars, U.S. There are also deposits of quartz, alabaster, granite, oil, alum, slate, onyx, and mercury; and sulphur and copper also exist, but mining in the Republic is not very fully developed.

There were (1929) officially enumerated 6,532 factories and industries in the Republic, all small, including 144 cigar and cigarette factories, 308 cheese-making establishments, 151 hydraulic sawmills, 68 candle-making factories and many coffee-drying establishments, starch, broom and wood-work factories. The most important industries are shoes, soap, and candles. Electricity, derived from water power in the highlands, is widely used as motive power; it was nationalized in 1928.

Commerce.

The value of imports into and exports from Costa Rica in 5 years (including coin and bullion) was as follows (at par 10·45 colones = £1, and 1 colon = 46·5 cents, U.S., but since 1926 it has been stabilized at 25 cents, U.S.):—

—	1926	1927	1928	1929	1930

Of the import value in 1930, 50 per cent. was from the United States, 12 per cent. from Germany, 12 per cent. from the United Kingdom, 8 per cent. from Central and South America. Of the value exported in 1930, 59 per cent. went to the United Kingdom, 26 per cent. to the United States, 10 to Germany, and 3 per cent. to Latin America.

Shipping and Communications.

No official figures are available as regards Costa Rican shipping. On the Atlantic coast there are several small sailing vessels and power launches, and on the Pacific coast some motor launches.

In 1930, there entered the ports of the Republic 595 ships of 1,313,078 tons, and cleared, 588 ships of 1,310,851 tons. Nearly all the steamers of the United Fruit Company are under the British flag.

The railway system connects San José with Limón, the Atlantic port, and has been extended to connect the capital with Puntarenas, the Pacific port. The length of railway is 413 miles—the Costa Rica Railway, 189 miles (main line and branches; San José to Limón, 103 miles); the Pacific Railway (state owned), 81 miles (San José to Puntarenas, 73 miles); the Northern Railway, 75 miles, and the United Fruit Co. Railway, 67 miles. When the railway system is completed, through rail communication will be established between Port Limón and the new port of Almirante in Panama. About 130 miles of motoring roads are now open.

In 1930 there were 205 post offices; air mail service between San José and Puntarenas, and with Central America and the United States was established in 1930.

There are about 3,000 miles of telegraph lines, with 205 telegraph offices. On December 31, 1928, there were 2,560 telephones; the telephone lines had a length of about 1,387 miles. Wireless telegraphy is working from Limón to Bocas del Toro (Panama) 60 miles, and to Bluefields, in Nicaragua, and to Colon, in Republic of Panama. Limón has a radius of 300 miles. The Government has a large wireless station at San José, and a small one at Colorado (mouth of R. San Juan, near Nicaraguan border). There is an international wireless station at Paraiso of high power; it is open for public service.

Banking and Credit.

In October, 1914, the Banco Internacional de Costa Rica was established as a Government Bank of Issue. It is authorised to issue up to 19,000,000 colones in notes to bearer (guaranteed by Government 6 per cent. Bonds, un-issued balance of Costa Rica Gold Refunding Bonds of 1911, and other Government securities). The Exchange Control Department, founded in November 1922, is authorised to purchase and sell New York Bank drafts at a fixed rate of 400 per cent. (4 to 1), and to issue and to receive in exchange for such drafts its own notes. On July 31, 1931, the Department had balances at New York bankers or in hand of 318,767 U.S. dollars gold. The total circulation of the country on that date was: Banco Internacional de Costa Rica, 14,816,000 colones; Exchange Control Department, 1,275,071 colones; silver certificates, 1,374,700 colones; copper, 710,000 colones. Total, 18,175,771 colones.

The National Insurance Bank—a Government bank which has a monopoly of new insurance business—reported July 31, 1931, total insurance written amounting to 75,912,846 colones. The Mortgage Loan Bank on that date, with capital and reserves of 1,800,000 colones, had mortgage loans outstanding of 23,555,162 colones.

Money, Weights, and Measures.

On October 26, 1896, an Act was passed for the adoption of a gold standard, the monetary unit to be the gold colon, weighing 778 grammes, .900 fine (value about 22·9d. at par or 46·5 cents, U.S.). The colon (1930) has been practically stabilized at 1 colon = 25 cents, U.S. Gold coins have, however, practically disappeared from circulation. Silver coins are: 1 colon, 50 centimos, 25 centimos. There are copper coins of 10 centimos, 5 centimos, 1 centimo, and a nickel coin of 2 centimos.

The metric system is legally established and now in use; but in the country districts the following old Spanish weights and measures are found:—

The Libra	.	.	.	.	= 1·014 lbs. avoirdupois.
„ Quintal	.	.	.	.	= 101·40 „
„ Arroba	.	.	.	.	= 25·35 „
„ Fanega	.	.	.	.	= 11 bushels (imperial bushel).

On January 15, 1921, the Republic adopted as its standard time that of the meridian 90 degrees west of Greenwich.

CUBA.

Constitution and Government.

CUBA, except for a brief period of British occupancy in 1762–63, remained a Spanish possession from the date of its discovery by Columbus until December 10, 1898, when the sovereignty was relinquished under the terms of the Treaty of Paris which ended the armed intervention of the United States in the struggle of the Cubans against Spanish rule. Cuba thus became an independent State. A convention which assembled on November 5, 1900, drew up a constitution which was adopted February 21, 1901, under which the Island assumed a republican form of government, with a President, Vice-President, a Senate and a House of Representatives. A law was passed in Washington authorising the President of the United States to hand over the government to the Cuban people upon the undertaking that they should conclude no treaty with a foreign power that would endanger the independence of Cuba, that no debts should be contracted for which the current revenue would not suffice, that the United States should have certain rights of intervention, and be granted the use of Naval Stations. On June 12, 1901, these conditions were accepted. On February 24, 1902, the election of the President and Vice-President took place, and the control of the Island was formally transferred to the national government on May 20. The coaling station of Guantanamo Bay was leased to the United States for 2,000 dollars annually, on July 2, 1903. A reciprocal commercial treaty, December 27, 1903, further strengthened the ties between Cuba and the United States. After political disturbances, an American Commission formed a provisional government in August, 1906, which was continued until January 28, 1909, when the national government was resumed after the institution of electoral reforms. A constitutional convention was convened March, 1928, and approved various changes in the constitution including a proposal to increase the President's term to 6 years without right of re-election. These changes came into effect on May 11, 1928, and, among other things, conferred upon women over 21 years of age the right to vote.

President.—General Gerardo Machado y Morales. Inaugurated (second term) May 20, 1929; term expires May 20, 1935.

There is a Cabinet consisting of the Secretaries of State, of Justice, of War and Marine, of the Interior, of Finance, of Agriculture, Commerce, and Labour, of Public Instruction, of Public Works, Sanitation and Charity, and of Telegraph and Posts (created in 1925).

The National Congress is made up of a Senate of 36 members and a House of Representatives (126 members, 1 for every 25,000 of the inhabitants). The latter, like the Senators, sit for six years (one-half elected every 3 years), but after 1933 senators will sit for nine years.

The country is divided into six provinces and 119 municipalities. The province is ruled by a Governor elected indirectly by the people and a Council; and the municipality by an Alcalde (Mayor), and an elected municipal council. Havana, the capital, was made a Federal District in 1931, with an Alcalde and Council appointed by the President.

Area and Population.

Cuba has an area of 44,164 square miles (41,634 square miles for the island of Cuba, 1,180 square miles for the Isle of Pines, and 1,350 square miles for the other islands), with an estimated population, on December 31, 1930, of 3,638,174, excluding 68,478 tourists and 12,219 immigrants. About 68 per cent. are white. The area, population, and density of population of each of the six provinces, on that date, were as follows:—

Province	Area	Population (December 31, 1930)	Pop. per sq. mile
	Square miles
Havana . . . . .	3,170	971,466	306·4
Pinar del Río . . . . .	5,206	324,036	62·2
Matanzas . . . . .	8,356	859,562	110·4
Santa Clara . . . . .	8,257	787,449	95·3
Camagüey . . . . .	10,064	271,286	26·9
Oriente . . . . .	14,211	924,345	65·0
Total . . . . .	44,164	3,638,174	82·4

The language is Spanish, though English is widely understood. Havana is the capital.

The chief towns (with population, excluding suburbs, 1930) are Havana, 589,079; Cienfuegos, 39,946; Camagüey, 48,773; Santiago de Cuba, 44,975; Guantánamo, 14,199; Santa Clara, 26,740; Manzanillo, 24,670; Pinar del Rio, 17,563; Sancti Spiritus, 30,419; Trinidad, 13,851; Cárdeñas, 29,304.

Justice and Religion.

There is a Supreme Court in Havana and a Court of Appeal in each of the Provinces. The Provinces are divided into judicial districts, with courts for civil and criminal actions, with municipal courts for minor offences. The Civil Code guarantees aliens the same property and personal rights as are enjoyed by natives. There is no State Church, though Roman Catholics predominate.

Education.

Education is compulsory and free. In the year ending June 30, 1931, the 3,816 elementary schools had 7,567 teachers, and an average attendance of 452,016 children. There were also 70 travelling teachers who taught 3,499 children; 102 night schools for working people with 9,185 pupils. There were also 568 private schools with 1,668 teachers and 32,450 pupils. In each province the Government maintains a special Institute for advanced education, and normal schools for training teachers. Near Havana there is a special school with a staff drawn from English public schools, on which the school is modelled. University instruction is given at the University of Havana (founded on September 12, 1721). In 1929-30, it had 4,795 students, of whom 2,303 were studying medicine.

Cuba has 58 libraries containing 622,461 volumes. There are 193 periodicals published, including 50 dailies, 44 weeklies and 46 monthlies.

Production and Industry.

The staple products of Cuba are tobacco and sugar, but coffee, cocoa, cereals, and potatoes are grown, and a considerable trade is done in fruits and minerals. Cuba is the largest producer of sugar in the world. In July, 1929, there were 163 sugar mills. Sugar plantations cover 1,600,000 acres. The sugar crop was in 1928-29, 5,178,012 tons; in 1929-30, 4,787,676 tons; in 1930-31, 3,120,796 tons. Exports, 1929, 4,885,411 long tons; in 1930, 3,353,600 tons. By the 'Chadbourne Agreement' of December 8, 1930, Cuba agreed to segregate its surplus stocks of 1,500,000 tons and to market for five years no more than 3,400,000 tons annually, plus 20 per cent. of its surplus. Production of raw sugar in recent crop years has been limited by presidential decree; in 1931-32, to 3,000,000 tons, or possibly less. Exports of refined sugar, 284,171 tons. The production of molasses in 1930-31 amounted to 129,332,412 gallons. Exports, 1930, chiefly to the United States, 160,000,000 gallons. Domestic consumption in 1930 was valued at 26,920,211 dollars. Total tobacco exports, 1930, 33,540,575 dollars; 1929, 37,878,765 dollars. Tobacco is grown principally in the famous Vuelta-Abajo district, near Pinar del Rio. Coffee production, chiefly from the Province of Oriente, 1929, 20,620,926 kilos; 1928, 19,823,424 kilos. The principal fruits exported are pineapples, bananas, citrus fruit, and coconuts. Cuban fisheries had an output in 1930 valued at 4,442,949 dollars. Output of sponges, 1930, 1,111,703 dozen.

Cuba has forest lands, many of which are in private ownership: State forests total about 1,250,000 acres. These forests contain valuable cabinet woods, such as mahogany and cedar, besides dye-woods, fibres, gums, resins, and oils. Cedar is used locally for cigar-boxes, and mahogany is exported; hard woods are used for railway sleepers, carts, ploughs and other local purposes.

Iron ore abounds; total exports 1930, 25,001 tons. Copper (61,113 tons exported in 1930), manganese (exports, 2,148 tons in 1930) and gold are also worked. Six salt deposits yield about 50,000 tons annually.

In Cuba there were in 1929, 3,057 miles of railway—the United Railways of Havana, 1,393 miles and the Cuba Railway, 778 miles, being the greatest systems. The lines now connect the principal towns and seaports from Pinar del Rio in the west, to Santiago de Cuba in the east. The larger sugar estates have extensive private lines connecting them with the main lines.

There were 1,990 miles of Government highways open to traffic in 1930, of which 846 miles are first-class. The new and impressive Central Highway, traversing the island for 706 miles from Pinar del Rio to Santiago and costing 101,123,000 dollars, was opened February 24, 1931. There are 463 post, 346 telegraph offices, and 150 radio and radio-telegraph stations; there are ten wireless stations operated by the Government. There are 10,939 miles of telegraph wires. The telephone system (1929) had 74,584 instruments and 239,417 miles of wire. Direct telephone connection with American and European cities has been maintained since 1921. Air mail service between Cuba and Mexico, and between Cuba and New York, was established in 1930; air service between domestic points is highly developed.

Currency and Banking.

On November 7, 1914, a law was published authorising a new coinage issue in Cuba with a gold peso (equal to the U.S. gold dollar) of 1.6718 grammes (1.5046 grammes fine) as the monetary unit. The gold coins are the 20, 10, 5, 4, 2 and 1 peso pieces; the 20, 10 and 5 pesos pieces are of the same weight and value as the corresponding United States gold coins. Silver is coined in pieces of 1 peso, 40 cents, 20 cents, and 10 cents, while nickel coins of 5, 2, and 1 cent pieces are also issued.

The coinage of gold is unlimited, but silver must not be minted to the value of more than 12,000,000 pesos. The extent of the nickel coinage is determined by the National Executive. The United States coinage is legal tender.

The total amount of currency on June 30, 1931, was 50,276,591 dollars, of which 26,827,958 dollars were United States bank notes, 718,748,775 dollars were Cuban and American gold coins, and 3,718,648 dollars were silver coins.

Banking is largely in the hands of the Royal Bank of Canada, the National City Bank of New York, the Chase National Bank of New York, the Bank of Nova Scotia, and the Banco del Comercio. Total number of banks and branches is 169. Total deposits, June 30, 1931, 134,390,848 dollars, compared with 144,696,522 dollars the previous year.

The metric system of weights and measures is in use.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA.

(ČESKOSLOVENSKÁ REPUBLIKA.)

THE term Czechoslovaks comprises two branches of the same Slav nation: the Czechs (pronounced Tchechs) of Bohemia, Moravia, and Silesia, and the Slovaks of Slovakia.

The Czechoslovak State came into existence on October 28, 1918. On that day the Národní Výbor (National Council) took over the government of the Czechoslovak countries, including Bohemia, Moravia, Silesia, and Slovakia, which had hitherto belonged to the former Austro-Hungarian Monarchy. On November 14, 1918, the Czechoslovak National Assembly met in Prague, and formally declared the Czechoslovak State to be a Republic, with Professor T. G. Masaryk as its first President.

By the Treaty of Peace of September 10, 1919 (the Treaty of St. Germain), the Allied and Associated Powers formally recognized the Czechoslovak Republic, declaring that 'the peoples of Bohemia, of Moravia, and of part of Silesia, as well as the peoples of Slovakia, have decided of their own free will to unite . . . for the purpose of forming a single sovereign independent state under the title of the Czechoslovak Republic.' For the sake of brevity the Czechoslovak Republic is designated Czechoslovakia.

Constitution and Government.—The Constitution of the Czechoslovak Republic was passed by the National Assembly on February 29, 1920.

According to the terms of the Constitution, the Czechoslovak State is a democratic Republic having an elected President at its head. The territory of the Republic forms a single and indivisible unity. The National Parliament, which constitutes the only legislative body for the whole of the Republic, is composed of a Chamber of Deputies elected for a period of six years and containing 300 members, and of a Senate comprising 150 members to be renewed every eight years. The two Chambers in joint congress elect the President of the Republic for seven years. The President, as head of the State, is supreme commander of the armed forces, and can declare war with the consent of Parliament. He appoints the higher officers and officials, exercises the right of reprieve, and is himself amenable to the laws only on a charge of high treason. He also appoints and recalls Ministers. The Constitution guarantees freedom of the Press and of speech, and safeguards racial minorities, to whom it assures the maintenance of their schools. Privileges derived from sex, birth or calling are not recognised. Marriage, the family and motherhood are placed under the special protection of the law. All these guarantees and rights are protected by the Supreme Administrative Court, which sees to the legality of the public administration.

In principle the two Chambers are equal in so far that they both enjoy the right of initiative, and that even Government Bills may be first introduced in either house. Only in the case of the Budget and Army Bills must the measures first pass through the Chamber of Deputies. It is also the Chamber of Deputies alone that by a vote of non-confidence can compel the resignation of the Government. A measure passed by the Chamber of Deputies becomes law, despite an adverse decision of the Senate, if the Chamber of Deputies adheres to its first decision by an absolute majority of all its members.

The franchise for the Chamber of Deputies is open to all citizens, without distinction of sex, who are over 21, while all citizens over 30 are eligible for election. The franchise for the Senate is open to all citizens who are over 26; and all citizens over 45 are eligible for election. The electoral system is based on proportional representation.

The Constitution regulates the parliamentary elections on a 'closed scrutiny' basis, the votes being in favour of parties, not of candidates. The allocation of electoral areas is as follows:—Bohemia, 9 (for Chamber of Deputies), 5 (for Senate); Moravia and Silesia, 6 and 3; Slovakia, 7 and 4; Carpathian Ruthenia, 1 and 1.

DANZIG.

(DIE FREIE STADT DANZIG.)

By Article 102 of the Treaty of Versailles, the Principal Allied and Associated Powers undertook to establish the Town of Danzig with the surrounding territory as a Free City, to be placed under the protection of the League of Nations. The League of Nations also appoints a High Commissioner.

High Commissioner.—Count Manfred Gravina. Appointed September 22, 1928.

The proclamation of the Freedom of the City and adjacent territory, as well as the coming into force of the Danzig-Polish Treaty, in accordance with Article 104 of the Treaty of Versailles, took place on November 9, 1920. According to this Treaty Danzig and Poland form a single customs territory. Since January 1, 1922, the Polish-German customs frontier extends to the sea, i.e., Danzig is a unit in the Polish customs administration.

The Constitution provides for a Volkstag or Diet of 72 members elected for 4 years and a Senate. This Senate consists of a President, a Vice-President and 10 Senators, whereof the President the Vice-President and 4 Senators receive salaries. The members of the Senate are elected by the popular assembly (Volkstag) for an indefinite period. Election is by majority of votes. Any citizen over 25 years of age is eligible. The salaried members of the Senate may hold no other public office, nor may they without the approval of the Senate follow any other profession; the unpaid members hold no public office except with the approval of the Senate. No member may serve on a board of managers or of directors of a commercial company without the consent of the Senate. The President of the Senate directs and exercises general supervision over the work of the Administration. The Senate is the highest State authority, and its meetings are not public. Plebiscites take place if demanded by a tenth of the voters. Any alteration of the Constitution by the Volkstag can only be effected by a two-thirds majority, with at least two-thirds of the Deputies present.

Elections are universal, direct, equal, and secret on the basis of proportional representation, suffrage being granted to all men and women belonging to the State of Danzig who have attained 20 years of age. The elections for the Legislative Assembly held on November 16, 1930, resulted in the return of the following parties: Social Democrats, 19; German Nationalists, 10; Centre, 11; National Liberals, 2; Communists, 7; German-Danzig People's Party, 2; German Liberals, 1; Poles, 2; German People's Community, 3; National Socialists, 12; smaller parties, 3; total, 72.

Area and Population.—The area of the Free City of Danzig is about 754 square miles, and population 407,517 (August 1929).

The territory contains a total of 264 localities, of which 258 are rural communes, 2 forest-estate districts, and 4 cities. In addition to the municipality of Danzig, whose administrative district had a population in August, 1929, of 285,237 (the district of Oliva having been incorporated with it on July 1, 1926), the following localities are cities:—Zoppot, 30,835 inhabitants; Neuteich, 3,160; and Tiegenhof, 3,252. Several centres classed as rural communes or otherwise are considerably larger than most of the 'cities,' as appears from the following list:—Ohra, 13,218; Praust, 3,878; Emaus, 2,503; Bürgerwiesen, 2,249; Stutthof, 2,698; Brentau, Hohenstein, Pasewark, Kalthof, Steegen, Lichtenau, Liessau, and Schöneberg, between 1,000 and 2,000.

Births 1930, 8,811; marriages, 3,258; deaths, 4,907.

Education.—In May, 1929, Danzig had the following schools:—8 high schools for boys, 8 for girls, and 2 for boys and girls; 11 middle schools and 296 elementary schools. In the high schools there were 6,207 pupils (2,915 girls); in the middle schools, 3,228 pupils (1,328 girls); in the elementary schools, 44,632 pupils (21,869 girls). Teachers in high schools, 351, and middle schools, 141; in elementary schools, 1,120.

The Technical University had in the summer term of 1931, 77 teachers and 1,858 students.

Finance.—For 1926, the Budget of the Free City of Danzig balanced at 117,885,180 gulden; for 1927 at 113,209,220 gulden; for 1928 at 117,028,590 gulden; for 1929, at 128,000,410 gulden; for 1930 at 134,842,600 gulden, and for 1931 at 142,896,050 gulden.

Commerce and Shipping.—The total registered gross tonnage on January 1, 1930, was 148,372, comprising 41 steamships, 12 motor-ships, 8 sea lighters of over 250 tons burden each, 7 motor sailing-boats, and 7 other ships; on April 1, 1931, there were registered 83 ships of 210,493 tons.

Shipping in 1930: entered, 6,078 vessels of 4,143,098 tons, and cleared 6,087 vessels of 4,142,802 tons, German shipping predominating, followed by Danish, Swedish, Latvian, Polish, English and Norwegian.

In accordance with Article 19 of the Polish-Danzig Convention of November 9, 1920, a Danzig Port and Waterways Board, composed of 5 Polish and 5 Danzig Commissioners with a President of Swiss Nationality, has been formed to administer and exploit the Port of Danzig.

For centuries Danzig has been a well-known grain and timber market and shipping point. Its advantageous geographical situation at the mouth of the Vistula, its vicinity to the great German, Polish, and Russian grain districts, and its foreign shipping connections have placed it at times in the first rank. For lumber Great Britain is Danzig's best customer. Exports in 1930 were as follows: lumber 824,300 tons (661,250 tons in 1929); grain, 391,300 tons (257,400 tons in 1929); sugar, 192,900 tons (211,600 tons in 1929); coal, 5,348,300 tons (5,321,800 tons in 1929).

Communications.—Danzig is connected with Germany by four main railway lines:—Danzig to Königsberg, 120 miles; Danzig (via Kreuz-Schneidemuehl) to Berlin, 292 miles; Danzig to Stettin, 230 miles; Danzig to Breslau (via Posen) 297 miles. Danzig is connected with Poland by three main lines:—Danzig to Warsaw, 236 miles; Danzig to Lodz, 230 miles; and Danzig to Posen, 183 miles. Besides these railway-lines there are regular connections by aeroplanes to Berlin (3 hours), to Königsberg (1 hour), to Warsaw (3 hours), to Marienburg (25 minutes), to Stolp (1 hour), to Stettin (2 hours, 20 minutes). A regular passenger-steamer service is carried on between Danzig (Zoppot) and Swinemünde, Pillau (Königsberg), and Memel. Other shipping-lines have arranged a regular passenger-service to Libau (weekly), to London-Hull (weekly), to Reval-Leningrad (weekly), to Riga and Helsingfors (weekly), to America and Canada (every third week), to Kalmar and Stockholm (every tenth day), to Copenhagen (every tenth day).

The Berlin Königsberg air line and the Polish mail air line serves Danzig. There is also a freight air service between Danzig and Warsaw.

On January 1, 1931, there were 11,520 principal and 8,361 branch telephone connections in Danzig, or a total of 19,881. Telephone calls in 1929 numbered 21,282,000, of which 1,130,000 were toll calls the remainder being local calls.

The metric system is the sole legal system of weights and measures in Danzig.

Banking and Currency.—On October 22, 1923, a new gulden currency was issued by the Danziger Zentralkasse, the provisional bank of issue. According to this arrangement the pound sterling becomes current in the Free City, being equivalent to 25 gulden of 100 pfennige each. On September 21, 1931, the currency was placed on the gold standard. The introduction of the Danzig currency was effected through the Bank of Danzig, which was founded in January, 1924. The crown of Denmark was elective from the earliest times. In 1448 after the death of the last male scion of the Princely House of Svend Estridsen the Danish Diet elected to the throne Christian I., [Count of Oldenburg, in whose family the royal dignity remained for more than four centuries, although the crown was not rendered hereditary by right till the year 1660. The direct male line of the House of Oldenburg became extinct with the sixteenth king, Frederik VII., on November 15, 1863. In view of the death of the king without direct heirs, the Great Powers of Europe, 'taking into consideration that the maintenance of the integrity of the Danish Monarchy, as connected with the general interests of the balance of power in Europe, is of high importance to the preservation of peace,' signed a treaty at London on May 8, 1852, by the terms of which the succession to the crown of Denmark was made over to Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Glücksburg, and to the direct male descendants of his union with the Princess Louise of Hesse Cassel, niece of King Christian VIII. of Denmark. In accordance with this treaty, a law concerning the succession to the Danish crown was adopted by the Diet, and obtained the royal sanction July 31, 1853.

King Christian X. has a civil list of 1,000,000 kroner. Annuities to other members of the royal house amount to 72,000 kroner.

Constitution and Government.

The present Constitution of Denmark is founded upon the 'Grundlov' (charter) of June 5, 1915, as amended on September 10, 1920. This may in many respects be said to be a further development along the lines laid down in the 'Grundlov' of June 5, 1849, the charter which introduced the Constitution in Denmark. The amendments of September 10, 1920, are mostly of a formal character, necessitated by the incorporation of parts of Slesvig in 1920.

According to the present 'Grundlov,' the legislative power lies with the King and the 'Rigsdag' (Diet) jointly. The executive power is vested in the King, who exercises his authority through the ministers. The judicial power is with the courts. The King must be a member of the Evangelical-Lutheran Church, the official Church of the State. The King has not the right of declaring war or signing peace without the consent of the 'Rigsdag.' The 'Rigsdag' is composed of two bodies: the 'Folketing' (House of Commons) and the 'Landsting' (Senate). All men and women 25 years of age and with a fixed place of abode possess the franchise and are eligible for election. The 'Folketing' is at present composed of 149 members; 117 members are elected by the method of proportional representation in 23 districts. In order to attain an equal representation of the different parties, 31 'Tillægsmandater' (additional seats) are divided among such parties not having obtained sufficient returns at the district elections. One member is elected for the Faroe Islands by simple majority. The term of the Legislature is four years, but the King has power to dissolve the 'Folketing' before the end of the four years. The members of the 'Landsting' are elected indirectly by the 'Folketing's' voters of 35 years of age in the following way. In every 'Folketing's' district electors in a number corresponding to the population are elected by the method of Proportional Representation. The whole country is divided into six 'Landsting's' districts. In each of these the electors elect a number of members of the 'Landsting,' between 10-12. In this way 56 members are elected; one is elected in the Faroe Islands. Moreover, there are 19 members elected by the former 'Landsting,' according to the system of Proportional Representation. The members of the 'Landsting' sit for a term of eight years. There are elections every fourth year for the half of those elected by the electors, while those elected by the 'Landsting' go out all at once after an eight years' term.

The members of the 'Rigsdag' receive 5,600 kr. or 7,200 kr. a year, according to whether their homes are in or outside the capital.

The Rigsdag must meet every year on the first Tuesday in October. To the Folketing all money bills must in the first instance be submitted by the Government. The Landsting, besides its legislative functions, has the duty of appointing from its midst every four years judges who, together with the ordinary members of the Høiesteret, form the Rigsret, a tribunal who can alone try parliamentary impeachments. The ministers have free access to both of the legislative assemblies, but can only vote in the chamber of which they are members.

The executive (appointed April 29, 1929), acting under the king as president, and called the State Council—Statsraadet—consists of the following departments:—

The Presidency of the Council and Ministry of Navigation and Fishing.—Th. Stauning.

Minister of Agriculture.—K. M. Bording.

Ministry of Foreign Affairs.—P. Munch.

Ministry of the Interior.—B. Dahlggaard.

Ministry of Social Affairs.—K. K. Steincke.

Ministry of Justice.—C. Th. Zahle.

Ministry of Defence.—L. Rasmussen.

Ministry of Public Instruction.—F. Borghjerg.

Ministry of Ecclesiastical Affairs.—N. P. L. Dahl.

Ministry of Public Works.—J. F. N. Friis-Skotte.

Ministry of Finance.—C. V. Bramsnaes.

Ministry of Commerce and Industry.—C. N. Hauge.

The ministers are individually and collectively responsible for their acts, and if impeached, and found guilty, cannot be pardoned without the consent of the Folketing.

State of parties in the Landsting, after the election of September, 1928 :—28 Liberals, 27 Socialists, 12 Conservatives, and 8 Radicals.

Folketing, elected April 24, 1929 :—44 Liberals, 16 Radicals, 61 Socialists, 24 Conservatives, 1 Slesvig (German Party), and 3 Georgistic Party.

In the year 1920 there were incorporated into Denmark parts of Slesvig which voted for Denmark at the plebiscite held in accordance with the Versailles Treaty of June 28, 1919 (made effective Jan. 10, 1920). The Northern Zone voted on Feb. 10, 1920, and 75,431 votes were cast for Denmark, and 25,329 votes for Germany. The Southern Zone voted on March 14, 1920, and 12,800 votes were given for Denmark, and 51,724 votes for Germany. The new Slesvig territories were incorporated on July 9, 1920, being officially named 'Sønderjydske Landsdele' (South Jutland Provinces).

For administrative purposes Denmark is divided into 22 counties (Amt), each of which is administered by a Governor (Amtmand). Moreover, the county is a municipal division with a county council superintending the rural municipalities (about 1,300). There are 88 urban municipalities with a mayor and a town council. Rural as well as urban municipal councils are elected direct by universal suffrage and Proportional Representation. Copenhagen forms a district by itself, and has its own form of administration.

Area and Population.

According to the census held on November 5, 1930, the area of Denmark is 16,576 square miles (42,931 square kilometres), and the population 3,500,656, including North Slesvig with 1,500 square miles (3,882 square kilometres) and 177,696 inhabitants.

The following table gives the area and population of Denmark in 1930:—

Divisions	Area 1930 English sq. m.	Population 1930	Population 1930 per sq. m.
City of Copenhagen (Kjöbenhavn) } without suburbs . . . }	28	617,069	22,038

Peninsula of Jutland . . . .	11,412	1,623,362	142
Total . . . . .	16,576	3,550,656	214

The area of the Faroe Islands is 540 square miles, and the population in 1930 was 24,200.

The population (excluding the Faroes) consisted of 1,736,306 males and 1,814,350 females in 1930. The total population at the census of 1925 was 3,434,555, showing an increase during 1925-30 of 0·67 per cent. per annum. In Denmark the town population has increased from 1,482,297 in 1925 to 1,558,910 in 1930; while the rural population has increased from 1,952,258 in 1925 to 1,991,746 in 1930. The population is almost entirely Scandinavian; in 1921, of the inhabitants of Denmark proper, 96·57 per cent. were born in Denmark.

The population of the capital, Copenhagen (Kjöbenhavn), in 1930 was 617,069, or with suburbs, 771,168; Aarhus, 81,279; Odense, 56,759; Aalborg, 44,365; Horsens, 28,363; Randers, 27,722.

The following table gives the total number of births, deaths, and marriages with the surplus of births over deaths, for three years:—

Years	Total Births (living)	Still Births	Marriages	Deaths	Surplus of Births over Deaths
1928	68,516	1,636	27,300	38,484	30,032
1929	65,297	1,619	27,725	39,486	25,811
1930	66,303	1,588	28,973	38,174	28,129

Of the births in 1928, 11·04 per cent. were illegitimate; in 1929, 10·77; in 1930, 10·70. In 1930, there were 2,300 divorces; in 1929, 2,265.

Emigrants, chiefly to the United States and Canada, in 1928, 7,699; in 1929, 6,277; in 1930, 3,348.

Religion.

The established religion of Denmark is the Lutheran, which was introduced as early as 1536. The affairs of the National Church are under the superintendence of seven bishops, who have no political character. Complete religious toleration is extended to every sect, and no civil disabilities attach to Dissenters.

According to the census of 1921 there were 3,221,843 Protestants, 22,137 Roman Catholics (under a Vicar Apostolic resident in Copenhagen), 535 Greek Catholics, 5,947 Jews, 17,349 other or of no confession.

Education.

Elementary education has been widely diffused in Denmark since the beginning of the last century, and in 1814 it was made compulsory. The school age is from 7 to 14. In 1930 Denmark had 4,479 lower schools; of these 34 were maintained by the Government, 3,870 by the local communities and 575 were private institutions. The instruction in the public schools is mostly gratuitous. The number of pupils in the 4,479 schools was on January 1, 1930: 494,883. In 1930, 1,693 pupils were admitted to the university; of these 517 were girls. For higher instruction there are furthermore (1930): a veterinary and agricultural college at Copenhagen with 70 professors and teachers and 600 pupils; 283 technical schools with about 28,000 pupils; 20 training colleges for teachers with about 1,800 pupils; a high school of commerce with about 450 pupils; 95 commercial schools with about 13,000 pupils; 22 agricultural or horticultural schools and 61 folkehøjskoler or popular high schools (adult schools with about 9,400 pupils); a college of pharmacy (founded 1892) with 10 teachers and about 100 students; a school for dentists with 18 teachers and about 150 pupils; a Royal academy of arts (founded 1754) with 22 teachers and about 250 pupils; a Polytechnic Institution (founded 1829) with 100 professors and teachers and about 1,000 students. The folkehøjskoler are all private, but to them and the agricultural schools the State annually makes a grant of about 1,320,000 kroner. The University of Copenhagen, founded in 1479, has about 120 professors and teachers, and about 4,700 students. The University of Aarhus, founded in 1928, has about 100 students.

Pauperism and Old Age Pensions.

Ordinary poor relief is regulated by the poor relief law of April 9, 1891 (and its amendments), under which in the financial year 1929-30, 113,172 (3·2 per cent. of the population) were relieved at a cost of approximately 39 million kroner.

A law of July 1, 1927, entering into force on October 1, 1927, grants an annual sum of money as old age pension (Aldersrente) to any person being 65 years of age and fulfilling certain conditions. The old age pension, which does not involve the loss of civil rights, is granted according to the principle of fixed rates, the law stating the sums which have to be paid under the various circumstances. The pension varies according as the commune of domicile is a town commune or a rural one, and certain deductions are made for self-earned incomes. In Copenhagen, for example, the old age pension of a married couple, both 65 years of age, without any earned income, is 1008 kroner per annum. The subvention is paid by the commune of domicile and seven-twelfths of it is refunded by the State. For the financial year ending March 31, 1930, 98,500 persons were relieved. The total expenditure was 59·7 million kroner.

According to a law of 1913, assistance without the loss of civil rights is granted to children living with their widowed mothers. The expenditure (divided between the municipalities and the State) amounted in the financial year 1929-30 to 2,200,000 kroner.

Justice and Crime.

The lowest courts of justice in Denmark are organized in 99 tribunals where cases of only small consequence are dealt with by a single judge. Cases of greater consequence are dealt with by the superior courts (Landsretterne); these courts are also courts of appeal for the above-named minor cases. Of superior courts there are three: Ostre Landsret in Copenhagen with 17 judges, Vestre Landsret in Viborg with 12 judges, and Søndre Landsret in Sønderborg with 4 judges. From this an appeal lies to the supreme court (Højesteret) in Copenhagen, composed of 13 judges. Judges under 65 years of age can be removed only by judicial sentence.

In 1928, 4,497 men and 548 women were convicted of crimes and delicts. On March 31, 1930, 1,324 men and 49 women were in the penitentiaries of Denmark.

Finance.

By the terms of the Constitution of Denmark the annual financial budget, called the 'Finanslovsforslag,' must be laid on the table of the Folketing at the beginning of each session, i.e. at the beginning of October. As to the annual financial accounts, called 'Statsregnskab,' the Constitutional Charter prescribes them to be examined by four paid revisers, two of whom are elected by the Folketing and two by the Landsting. Their report is submitted to both Chambers which, after due consideration, pass their resolution generally to the effect that they have no remarks to make on the balance-sheet.

The following shows the actual revenue and expenditure for four years ending March 31 and the estimates for two years :—

Defence.

The Danish army is a national militia, resembling in some respects the Swiss army. Every able-bodied Danish subject is liable to serve in the army or navy, except the inhabitants of the Faroe Islands. Exemptions in Denmark are few, even clergymen having to serve.

Service commences at the age of 20 and lasts for 16 years. For the first 8 the men belong to the active army, and for the second 8 years to the reserve. At the time of joining, the recruits are continuously trained for 150 days in the infantry, 215 days in the field artillery, 245 days in the coast artillery, and 425 days in the cavalry. The engineers have 200 days, and the train 60 days' continuous training. In the case of about one-fourth of the men, their initial training is prolonged by periods ranging from 2½ to 8½ months, according to the arm of the service to which they belong. Subsequent training for all arms only takes place twice in the remaining eight years of army service, and then only for 28 days on each occasion.

The country is organised in one territorial command.

Infantry and mounted troops are armed with the Krag-Jorgensen 8 mm. rifle or carbine and the Madsen machine gun, field artillery with a Krupp gun, firing a 14·88-pound shell.

The number of recruits called up annually for training is 8,625, which with the permanent establishment, armed police and air force, made up a total of 14,136 all ranks. The military budget for 1931-32 was 32,279,434 kroner.

The naval forces have been reconstructed pursuant to the law of National Defence of August 8, 1922. The Navy, as well as the Army, is under the direction of the Minister of Defence.

The fleet is for purposes of coast-defence. It now includes three coast defence ironclads of 3,650-3,800 tons, Peder Skram, Olfert Fischer, Heriuf Trolle, each carrying a pair of 9·4-inch and four 6-inch guns, and one of 4,300 tons, Niels Juel, with ten 6-inch guns; 4 fishery patrol vessels (Hvidbjørnen, Islands Falk, Beskytteren and Diana), the ex-British sloop Fylla (also used for fishery patrol work), the training cruiser Hejmdal, 23 torpedo boats, 13 submarines, the depot ship Henrik Gerner, and the minelayer Lossen. It has recently been proposed to scrap the three older coast-defence ironclads.

Production and Industry.

The soil of Denmark is greatly subdivided, owing partly to the state of the law, which interdicts the union of small farms into larger estates, but encourages, in various ways, the parcelling out of landed property, and leaves the tenant entire control of his land so long as the rent is paid.

According to the census of July 15, 1930, the extent of the cultivated area in Denmark was as follows (in thousand acres):—grain areas, 3,255; root crop, 1,264; other crop, 98; green fodder and grass, 3,137; fallow land, 151; total cultivated area, 7,905. The acreage and production of the chief crops for two years were as follows:—

On July 15, 1931, there were in Denmark 498,000 horses, 3,197,000 head of cattle, 5,435,000 swine, and about 20,000,000 hens.

According to statistics collected on July 15, 1925, there were 89,175 industrial factories and shops in Denmark, employing altogether 392,000 persons, of whom 270,000 were actual labourers. Of the total establishments 26,300 factories used mechanical power. In 1930, there were in Denmark 4 distilleries whose output of brandy reduced to 100° amounted to 7,161,000 litres. In 1930, there were produced 1,524,000 litres of strong beer, and 767,000 litres small beer. In the same year 139,806 tons of beet-sugar were produced at 9 sugar factories, and 78,160 tons of margarine were manufactured at 135 factories.

In the Danish fisheries the total value of the fish caught was, 1928, 2,021,000*l.*; 1929, 2,097,000*l.*; 1930, 2,234,000*l.* The fleet in 1930 consisted of 15,560 boats.

DOMINICAN REPUBLIC.

(REPÚBLICA DOMINICANA.)

Columbus in 1492 discovered the island of Santo Domingo which he called La Española, and the city of Santo Domingo, founded by his brother, Bartholomew, in 1496, was for long the centre of Spanish power in America.

The country declared its independence of Spain in 1821, was invaded and held by the Haitians from 1822 to 1844 when the Dominican Republic was founded and a Constitution adopted. The country was occupied by American marines from 1916 to the adoption of a new constitution in 1924.

Constitution and Government.—The Republic is governed in general under the Constitution of 1844, re-proclaimed, with changes, at various dates down to 1929 when the Constituent Assembly passed a new Revised Constitution. Senators, deputies, governors of provinces and certain provincial officials are chosen by direct popular vote. An Act adopted in 1927 extended to 1930, the terms of office of the President and Congress.

Each province is represented in the legislature by one senator and (in practice) by two deputies, with the exception of Santo Domingo province which has five. Senators and deputies are elected for four years, and receive 300 dollars per month.

The executive functions of the Republic are vested in the President who may be succeeded by the Vice-President in case of death or disability. There are six Secretaries of State, who are the heads of the departments of: the Presidency; Interior, Police, War and Marine; Finance, Labour and Communications; Agriculture and Commerce; Foreign Relations; Health, Social Services and Public Works.

President of the Republic.—General Rafael Leonidas Trujillo Molina. (Assumed office on August 16, 1930.)

Vice-President.—Señor Rafael Estrella Urena.

Area and Population.—The Dominican Republic occupies the eastern portion (about two-thirds) of the island of Haiti, Quisqueya or Santo Domingo, the western division forming the Republic of Haiti. Area is estimated at 19,332 square miles, with 1,017 miles of coast line, 193 miles of frontier line with Haiti, and a population, according to the census of 1920, of 894,665. Total population (1931) is estimated at 1,200,000. The boundary with Haiti, long in dispute, is being resurveyed under a treaty signed in 1929. The population (1921) of the 12 provinces was as follows: Santo Domingo, 146,446; Macoris, 43,612; Seybo, 58,408; Azua, 100,577; Barahona, 48,180; Samaná, 16,915; La Vega, 105,820; Pacificador, 77,620; Espailat, 50,956; Santiago, 122,773; Puerto Plata, 59,025; and Monte Cristi, 67,073. Immigrants, 1930, 9,827; emigrants, 10,998.

The population contains some creoles of Spanish descent, but is mainly composed of a mixed race of European, African and Indian blood; there are, however, many Syrians, especially in Santo Domingo City, where the drapery trade is mainly in their hands. The language used by the populace is Spanish, but on the Samaná Peninsula there are a few hundred farmers, descended from American negro immigrants of 1828, who speak corrupt English. The Haitian patois is spoken to a considerable extent along the frontier. The political power is in the hands of the white or nearly white population.

The capital, Santo Domingo, on the left bank of the river Ozama, was destroyed in 1502 by a hurricane, and subsequently rebuilt on the right bank of the same river. It was again practically destroyed, except for a few historic buildings, by a second disastrous hurricane on September 3, 1930. It is being rapidly rebuilt. According to the census of 1920, the City of Santo Domingo had 30,957 inhabitants and the City of Puerto Plata 7,807; Santiago de Los Caballeros 17,152; San Pedro de Macoris, 13,802; La Vega, 6,564; Samaná, 1,656; Sanchez, 3,075; Azua, 4,797; Monte Cristy, 2,580; San Francisco de Macoris, 5,188; and Moca, 3,994.

Religion and Education.—The religion of the State is Roman Catholic; other forms of religion are permitted. There is a Papal Nuncio with residence at Port-au-Prince (Haiti) as well as an Archbishop, known as the Primate of the Indies, in Santo Domingo City.

Primary instruction is gratuitous and obligatory, being supported by the communes and by central aid. The public or State schools are primary, secondary, technical schools, and normal schools. The Professional Institute was formed into a University by Presidential decree on November 29, 1914. In 1930 there were 841 public schools in the Republic (33 being technical) with 90,366 pupils and 1,807 teachers. School budget, 1931, was for 700,233 dollars.

Justice.—The chief judicial power resides in the Supreme Court of Justice, which consists of a president and 6 justices chosen by Congress, and 1 (Procurador General de la Republica) appointed by the executive; all these appointments are only for 4 years, but may be prolonged indefinitely. The territory of the Republic is divided into 12 judicial districts, each having its own civil and criminal tribunal and court of first instance, and these districts are subdivided into 60 communes, each with a local justice (alcalde), a secretary and bailiff (alguacil). There are three appeal courts, at Santiago de los Caballeros, at Santo Domingo City, and at La Vega. The death penalty was abolished in 1924.

Finance.—The receipts and disbursements for 6 years, in U.S. dollars (adopted in 1897 as the monetary standard; 5 pesos = 1 dollar) were:—

—	Revenue	Expenditure	—	Revenue	Expenditure
	Dollars	Dollars		Dollars	Dollars
1926 . .	14,279,375	13,481,619	1929 . .	13,984,860	13,967,544
1927 . .	15,319,674	14,495,958	1930 . .	9,975,674	10,642,189

Chief sources of revenue, 1929: Customs, 5,453,529 dollars; Internal Revenue, 6,118,417 dollars; Lottery (leased to private interests in 1931), 2,991,305 dollars; New Loan, 4,185,958 dollars.

In accordance with the American-Dominican Convention of 1924, which provided for a loan up to 25,000,000 dollars, an American Receiver-General of Customs supervises customs collections and controls the payment of interest and amortization of the three Dominican Bond issues. This arrangement, which dates back to the first American intervention in 1905, is to last until the loans are repaid. The total customs collected by the American Receiver-General from April, 1905, to December 31, 1930, was 103,862,767 dollars.

The bonded debt of the Republic on June 30, 1931, was 17,283,000 dollars. On November, 11, 1931, the Government announced a 2-years moratorium on annual payments of principal (between 8 and 9 million dollars) though declaring that interest will be maintained. The step was attributed to lower income due to the hurricane of 1930 and the decline in sugar and tobacco industries. U. S. Department of Commerce (1931) estimates American investments at about 87,000,000 dollars, of which 61,000,000 dollars are in the sugar industry and 17,000,000 in loans to the Government. British investments are about 4,000,000% at par.

Defence.—The National Military Force consists of a native foot constabulary comprising, in September, 1931, 2,100 men and 139 officers.

The Republic has no navy.

Production and Industry.—Agriculture is the chief source of wealth, sugar cultivation being the principal industry. Of the total area, 9,900 square miles are cultivable, and about 6,600 are under cultivation. The remainder is forest land, mostly pine-groves, and is useless for agriculture. The largest sugar estates are in the southern part of the Republic. Exports of raw sugar in 1929, 322,088 metric tons; in 1930, 345,981 metric tons. There are 21 sugar 'centrals,' mostly owned and operated by American companies, although very little of the sugar is sold to the United States. The other principal exports in 1930 were: cocoa, 20,701 tons; coffee, 4,847 tons; leaf tobacco, 12,970 tons; sugar cane, 190,834 tons; and molasses, 91,705 tons.

The live-stock census taken on May 15, 1921, showed 360,155 cows, 87,876 oxen, 199,127 calves, 162,800 horses, 64,860 mules, 674,232 pigs, 705,000 goats and 2,949,053 fowls; a census of cattle in 1928 showed 487,608.

Various minerals are found, principal among which are gold and copper. Iron is found in the form of black magnetic oxide of iron, and petroleum has been found in the Azua region. Coal of the lignite variety of little commercial value is known to exist in small quantities. Silver and platinum have been found, and rock salt near Neiba exists in large quantities, there being several hills of native salt covered with only a thin layer of soil.

Commerce.—The total imports into and exports from the Dominican Republic for 5 years were valued as follows in dollars (5 pesos, by law = 1 dollar U.S.):—

—	1926	1927	1928	1929	1930

Shipping and Communications.—The merchant marine of the Republic consists of 94 vessels, two of which are steamers with a tonnage of 374 and 92 sailing vessels of 2,066 tonnage.

In 1930, 1,687 vessels of 2,381,606 tons entered the ports of the Republic and 1,509 with a tonnage of 2,218,259 cleared.

Three main trunk highways, with branches, now extend eastward from Santo Domingo City to Higüey (105 miles), northward to Santiago and Monte Cristi (180 miles), and westward to Comendador (on the Haitian border), and San Juan (161 miles). At Comendador the road joins the Haitian road to Port-au-Prince. The journey between the Haitian and Dominican capitals is now possible by motor in 12 hours. Total highway mileage in 1930 was 845 miles. There was also about 600 miles of inter-communal roads.

There are two small railway lines in the Republic: (1) Samaná-Santiago line, belonging to an English company, which runs from Sanchez on the Bay of Samaná to La Vega (62 miles) and manages several branch lines (total, 87 miles); (2) a Government line, the Dominican Central railway, which runs from Puerto Plata to Santiago and Moca (60 miles). Total length of line (1930) 147 miles. There are, besides, about 255 miles of private lines on the large estates.

Postal and telegraphic services are united; number of offices, 1930, 99.

The telegraph has a total length of about 1,034 miles, and has been leased to the All-America Cables, Incorporated, which also controls submarine cables connecting, in the north, Puerto Plata with Porto Rico and New York, and in the south, Santo Domingo with Porto Rico, Cuba and Curaçao.

The telephone system, owned by the Dominican Government, has been leased to an American Company which is installing modern apparatus. There are wireless stations in Santo Domingo City, Santiago and four other towns. Radio telegraph service with the United States was opened in 1931.

Money, Weights, and Measures.—On July 1st, 1897, the United States gold dollar was adopted as the standard of value. A small amount of debased silver coin circulates as small change at the ratio of 5 to 1, viz.,

1 peso = 20 cents United States currency. On December 31, 1930, the coinage and currency in the banks of the Republic was: gold, 129,706 dollars; Dominican silver, 122,548 dollars; U.S. silver, 165,821 dollars; notes, 1,372,925 dollars. Total notes in circulation were estimated at between 2 and 3 million dollars.

The metric system was adopted on August, 1, 1913, but English and Spanish units are quite common in ordinary commercial transactions.

ECUADOR.

(REPÚBLICA DEL ECUADOR.)

Constitution and Government.

THE Republic of Ecuador, which is situated in the north-west of South America, was constituted May 11, 1830, following the war of independence against the Spanish power in South America. Known originally as the Presidency of Quito, it withdrew from the original Republic of Colombia, founded by Simon Bolivar by uniting the Presidency of Quito to the Vice-Royalty of New Granada (now Colombia) and the Captaincy-General of Venezuela. The Presidency of Quito became the Republic of Ecuador.

Under the present Constitution, promulgated March 26, 1929, the President is elected directly by the people for a term of four years; there is no Vice-President, but the Minister of the Interior succeeds in the event of a vacancy. The cabinet consists of six ministers, enjoying considerable power, both collectively and individually.

Congress consists of two Houses; the Upper has 32 senators (chosen for four years) elected in the following manner: one for each province of the Interior and Coast; one for the Oriental provinces; one representative for the Universities; one for Secondary and Special Education; two for Primary and Normal Education; one for the Press, Academies and Scientific Societies; two for Agriculture; two for Commerce; one for Industry; two for Labour; two for the country folk; one for the Army and one for the defence of the Indian race. The Chamber of Deputies (56, serving for two years) has one deputy for every 50,000 inhabitants for provinces with a population of over 100,000, and two deputies for provinces with less than 100,000 inhabitants. The Oriental provinces elect one deputy each. Electors are adults, of either sex, who can read and write. Congress meets on the 10th of August every year at Quito, the capital, without being summoned by the Government.

Privileges of rank and race are forbidden under the Constitution. Peonage, which had prevailed on many landed estates, was abolished on October 20, 1918. Since 1896 the Indians have been exempted from paying tribute, and have been admitted to citizenship, provided they could read and write.

President-Elect.—Neptali Bonifaz (September 1, 1932–36).

The Provinces are administered by Governors, appointed by the Government; their subdivisions, or cantons, by political chiefs; and the parishes by political lieutenants. The Galapagos Archipelago is under the administration of a military Territorial Chief.

Area and Population.

Since the frontiers of Ecuador have not been settled, no definite figure of the area of the country can be given. Ecuador is said to have more boundaries than any other country, and there are maps of the Republic showing six different frontiers according to six different authorities. Taking the boundaries arranged with Brazil in 1904, with Colombia by the Treaty of July 15, 1916, and those for Peru according to the Royal Decree of 1740, the area of Ecuador is 571,250 square kilometres (220,502 square miles). Taking its Peruvian boundary in accordance with the Protocol Pedemonte-Mosquera of 1830, its area is 443,750 square kilometres (171,287 square miles). One official estimate shows 873,844 square kilometres (337,304 square miles). Calculations of the geographer Wolf, also officially adopted, show 714,860 square kilometres (275,936 square miles). The area of the Archipelago of Colon (the 13 Galapagos Islands) adds 7,430 square kilometres (2,868 square miles). The country is divided into 17 provinces and one territory—the Archipelago of Galapagos—officially called 'Colon,' situated in the Pacific Ocean about 600 miles to the west of Ecuador.

So far no exact census has been taken. It was estimated (1929) that of the total the whites are 10 per cent.; Indians, 38 per cent.; mixed, 41 per cent.; lowland Indians, 1 per cent.; Negroes, 5 per cent.; others, 5 per cent. The foreign community is composed of about 10,000 persons.

The estimated population of the Republic (October 31, 1931) was distributed as follows among the provinces (capitals in brackets) :—

Provinces	Area in Square Miles (Wolf's estimates)	Population (Est. 1931)	Population per Square Mile

The chief towns are the capital, Quito (91,641 in 1930), Guayaquil (120,000), Cuenca (40,000), Riobamba (30,000), Ambato (14,000), Loja (10,000), Latacunga (15,000), Bahía (3,000), Esmeraldas (4,000).

In 1930 there were 97,361 births, 44,385 deaths and 13,799 marriages.

Religion and Education.

The State recognises no religion, but grants freedom of worship to all. The Catholic Church has one archbishop (Quito) and six suffragan bishops. Since 1895 all State appropriations for the benefit of the Church have ceased. All members of the Episcopate are required to be Ecuadorian citizens. Civil marriages are obligatory since December, 1902.

Primary education is gratuitous and obligatory. Higher education (for which fees are nominal) is carried on in 21 secondary schools or colleges (6 private) and in the Central University at Quito (founded in the eighteenth century by the Dominicans); at the Guayas University, in Guayaquil, the Azuay University, in Cuenca, and the Law College at Loja. Private schools, both primary and secondary, are under some state supervision. Estimated expenditures for public education in 1931 are : superior education, 1,161,690 sucres ; secondary, 1,443,836 ; primary, 3,997,618 ; special, 863,794 ; total, 7,466,938 sucres. Number of students at the Universities in 1931, 852. There are (1931) 2,081 primary schools in the Republic, including 1,638 Government schools, 155 municipal, 76 farm schools, and 212 private schools. Enrolment at the primary schools (1931) was 149,065 ; at the 17 secondary schools, 2,600 ; teachers' colleges, music and special schools, 2,802. There are 4 training colleges for teachers.

Justice and Crime.

The Supreme Court in Quito is the highest tribunal and consists of 11 justices elected by Congress for a term of 6 years. The eight superior courts are located at Quito, Guayaquil, Cuenca, Riobamba, Ibarra, Ambato, Loja and Portoviejo. The first two are composed of 6 judges, the remainder of 3 judges each, all elected by Congress for 6 years. There are 496 parochial justices. The popular jury was abolished in 1928; criminal and civil cases are heard before a "special jury" consisting of 3 members of the Ecuadorean bar, or "three citizens of recognised integrity" appointed annually by the superior courts. Capital punishment and all forms of torture are prohibited under the Constitution. Likewise imprisonment for debt and contracts involving personal servitude or slavery.

Finance.

The revenue and expenditure for recent years are given as follows (24·8 sucrés = £1 through 1928; thereafter 24·5 sucrés = £1; at par, 5 sucrés = 1 dollar U.S.).

—	1928	1929	1930	1931 <sup>1</sup>	1932 <sup>1</sup>

Customs receipts for year ending December 31, 1930, 22,287,137 sucrés.

The public debt on October 31, 1931, was:—Foreign debt, including a small loan from the Swedish Match Company of 10,000,000 sucrés obtained in 1928, 114,840,047; internal debt, 11,013,466 sucrés; total, 125,853,513 sucrés. Debt service, 1931, took 6,319,641 sucrés. The 1928 Swedish Match loan was guaranteed by a match monopoly granted the company, but Congress revoked this in 1931, following the enforced resignation of President Ayora. British investments, 1931, are estimated at 4,000,000£; American investments (U.S. Department of Commerce), 11,770,000 dollars.

Defence.

The Ecuadorean regular army has an establishment of 664 officers and 4,796 men. This force is composed of 3 regiments of artillery, 10 battalions of infantry, 4 regiments of cavalry, 2 battalions of sappers, and 1 aviation company, which form the native army. Military service was made compulsory on May 24, 1921, but is not enforced. The regular infantry have the Mauser rifle; the artillery have Vickers Maxim, Z.B. machine guns, old-fashioned Krupps and new Ehrards. The country is divided into 4 military districts. A military school is established at Quito. An Italian Military Mission of 4 members is at present instructing the Ecuadorean army.

The Government has established at Duran an aviation company with Ecuadorean personnel. Two American 'Travel Air' machines have been purchased by the Government. Flying fields are being established at Guayaquil, Quito, Latacunga, Ambato and Riobamba.

The Navy consists of the gunboat Cotopaxi (1884), 300 tons, and several small vessels on coastguard service.

Production and Industry.

Ecuador is divided into two agricultural zones: the coast regions and the lower river valleys, where tropical farming is carried on in an average temperature of 22° C.; and the hill country, the foothills, and the mountain valleys, adapted to grazing, dairying, and the production of cereals, potatoes, and the fruits and vegetables suitable to temperate climates, with an average temperature of 16° C. Of the total surface of the Republic only 11,480,000 acres are actually cultivated, rendering an annual gross production of 416,000,000 sucres. The staple produce of Ecuador is cocoa; a decline in output owing to the disease known as 'witch-broom,' has now been checked. The production of cocoa was (in quintals of 101·47 lbs.), in 1929, 335,052 (exports, 18,208 metric tons); in 1930, 387,424 (exports, 20,082 metric tons). Cocoa furnishes, in value, about 30 per cent. of total exports. Coffee is also grown; 9,450,440 kilos were exported in 1930. Rice production is increasing; output, 1930, 907,807 quintals. Wild rubber is abundant, but output has suffered from the competition of plantation rubber in the Orient. Mangrove bark (for tanning), alligator skins, and kapok (silk cotton tree fibre, Bombax ceiba) are exported in small quantities. Considerable attention is being paid to the cultivation of cotton, especially in the province of Manabí, and to sugar; ivory nuts, or tagua, are produced and exported in large quantities.

Ecuador is auriferous. In 1930, 15,597 kilos of gold (cyanide ore), valued at 7,388,624 sucres, were exported. At Pillzhum in Cañar rich silver ore is found, but is not now worked. Petroleum is found; the estimated annual production in the Republic is about 180,000 tons. In 1930, 161,102 tons of petroleum, valued at 15,798,435 sucres, were exported. The total area of oil lands in exploitation in the Republic is 251,253 acres, located in the Santa Elena Peninsula, in the Province of Guayas. The country is known to be also rich in copper, iron, lead and coal; and sulphur exists in great quantities in the Chimborazo district and in the Galapagos Islands. Since December, 1927, all salt mined must be sold to the Government, which has a monopoly of imports, exports and sales. Exports of mineral earth in 1930 amounted to 7,388,624 sucres, about 10·4 per cent. of total exports.

Excepting the inter-Andean plateau and a few arid spots on the Pacific coast, Ecuador is a vast forest. Roughly estimated, 10,000 square miles on the Pacific slope extending from the sea to an altitude of 5,000 feet on the Andes, and the Amazon Basin below the same level containing 80,000 square miles, nearly all virgin forest, are rich in dyewoods, cinchona trees, and other valuable timber. The 'balsa wood,' renowned for its lightness and strength, is widely used in airplane construction.

Panama or 'Jipijapa' hats, made of Toquilla straw, are made very largely in Ecuador, the principal centres being Jipijapa, Monticristi and Cuenca. The Government of Ecuador attempted to monopolise the hat business for its own people by placing a heavy export duty on 'paja toquilla,' but large quantities of the material still go to Peru; both Peru and Japan have become strong competitors of Ecuador in the manufacture of Panama hats. Exports in 1930 were valued at 8,402,658 sucres. There are flour mills, 13 sugar works, breweries, chocolate factories and 20 textile factories, with capitalization of 11,500,000 sucres.

Commerce.

The value of imports and exports for five years is given as follows in sucres (for 1926, £1 sterling equalled 24·3 sucres; for 1927 and 1928, 24·42 sucres; and for 1929 and 1930, 24·5 sucres; at par 5 sucres = 1 dollar, U.S.).

Shipping and Internal Communications.

Guayaquil, the chief seaport, is visited by the steamers passing through Magellan's Straits, as well as by steamers plying only on the Pacific coast. During 1930, 695 steam and sailing vessels entered, and 709 cleared from, Guayaquil.

Considerable progress in road improvement is being made. A motor road, 375 miles long, from the Colombian border to Babahoya, a river town near Guayaquil, was opened in 1930. There are now 1,388 miles of main trunk roads, 2,217 miles of branch roads and 1,176 miles of bridle paths. There is river communication, improved by dredging, throughout the principal agricultural districts on the low grounds to the west of the Cordillera by the rivers Guayas, Daule, and Vines (navigable for 200 miles by river steamers in the rainy season), and other small affluents thereof.

A railway is open from Duran (opposite Guayaquil) to Quito (280 miles). The total length of the 9 Ecuadorean railways actually in operation is 639 miles. The journey from Guayaquil to Quito takes two days, with a stop at Riobamba. Railways for the development of local trade have been undertaken by several local authorities. A bi-weekly mail and passenger air service has been established between Ecuadorean and South American ports.

Quito is connected by telegraph with Guayaquil and the coast, with the Republics of Colombia and Peru, and by cable with the rest of the world. Wireless telegraphy has been installed; there are six stations in Quito, Guayaquil, Esmeraldas and other towns.

In 1930 there were 302 post offices in the country and 5,400 miles of telegraph wires.

Banking and Credit.

Ecuador having no mint, the coin of the country is minted in England and the United States.

On March 4, 1927, a decree was issued establishing at Quito the 'Central Bank of Ecuador,' with a capital of 10,000,000 sucres, the only body authorised to issue currency. It is organised to protect the country's gold reserves and its general functions resemble those of the Federal Reserve Banks of the United States. On December 31, 1931, it had gold in its vaults, 5,663,375 sucres; deposits abroad, 9,665,675 sucres; other reserves, 4,119,912 sucres; total reserves, 19,448,932 sucres; note circulation was 19,134,115 sucres; deposits, 8,974,768 sucres. The member banks affiliated with it number 21, with an aggregate capital and reserves (November 30, 1931) of 40,422,681 sucres.

A new General Banking Law has also been enacted, creating the office of Superintendent of Banks to supervise local banks. In addition, all commercial banks are required to have cash reserves equivalent to at least 25 per cent. of their demand deposits and to 10 per cent. of their time deposits.

Money, Weights, and Measures.

A new Monetary Law, prepared by the Kemmerer Financial Mission, was decreed on March 4, 1927. Under this law Ecuador returned to the gold standard with its currency stabilized at the rate of 24·3 sucres to the £ or 5 sucres per American dollar, the previous legal par value of the sucre having been 10 sucres = £1 or 1 sucre = 48·665 cents U.S. But on February 9, 1932, the Government was forced to suspend the gold backing of the sucre "until November 10, 1932." The new gold sucre (named after the national hero, Marshal Antonio José de Sucre) is to contain 0·300933 gramme of pure gold, instead of the previous weight of 0·73224. It is divided into 100 centavos. Gold coins known as 'condors' (25 sucres), and 'double condors' (50 sucres), 900 fine, are minted. Also silver 2 sucre, 1 sucre and  $\frac{1}{2}$  sucre pieces, as well as 10 centavos, 5 centavos, 2 $\frac{1}{2}$  centavos and 1 centavo in nickel and copper.

By a law of December 6, 1856, the metric system of weights and measures was made the legal standard of the Republic; but it is not adopted by commerce, the Spanish measures being more general. The quintal is equivalent to 101·47 pounds.

The meridian of Quito has been adopted as the official time.

EGYPT.

(MISR.)

EGYPT was originally part of the Turkish Empire. On December 18, 1914, a British Protectorate over Egypt was declared, and the next day a Proclamation was issued deposing 'Abbās Hilmi, lately Khedive of Egypt, and conferring the title of Sultan of Egypt upon Hussein Kamil, eldest living prince of the family of Muhammad Ali. The British Protectorate was recognised by France, Russia, Belgium, Serbia, Greece, Portugal, and the United States of America. Sultan Hussein Kamil died in 1917, and was succeeded by his brother. The Protectorate terminated on February 28, 1922, and the Sultan was proclaimed King on March 15, 1922.

King.

Fuad I. Ahmed Fuad, G.C.B., was born on March 26, 1868, son of the Khedive Ismail Pasha; succeeded his brother as Sultan on October 9, 1917; took title of King on March 15, 1922; married (1) Princess Chivekar, daughter of his cousin, Prince Ibrahim Ahmed, on May 30, 1896; divorced in 1899; (2) Princess Nazli on May 24, 1919; offspring (first marriage) Princess Fewkieh, born Oct. 6, 1897; married May 12, 1919, to Mahmud Pasha Fakhry; (second marriage) Prince Faruk, heir to the throne, born February 11, 1920; Princess Fawzieh, born November 5, 1921; Princess Faiza, born November 8, 1923; Princess Faika, born June 8, 1926 and Princess Fathia, born December 17, 1930.

According to Article 161 of the Constitution, the King's Civil List is fixed at £E150,000, and the Royal Family's Allowances at £E111,512.

The present sovereign of Egypt is the ninth ruler of the dynasty of Muhammad Ali, appointed Governor of Egypt in 1805, who made himself, in 1811, absolute master of the country by force of arms. On April 13, 1922, the King issued a Rescript fixing the order of succession to the Kingdom of Egypt and declaring the Throne hereditary in the dynasty of Muhammad Ali. The Rescript confirms the King's son, Prince Faruk, as Heir Apparent, and establishes the succession of Kings in the direct male line by primogeniture. Failing such direct line, it provides that the Throne shall pass first to the King's brothers and their direct descendants by right of age, whom failing to the King's uncles and their direct descendants by right of age, it being laid down that each new King establishes a new house and that the succession is vested in his direct line.

Female members of the house and their descendants are excluded, also anyone who is not in possession of full mental powers, who is not a Moslem, or who is not the son of Moslem parents. The King's majority is fixed at 18 years, and in the event of his being a minor when he succeeds a Regency Council will be appointed either by his predecessor under a secret seal to be opened after his death and ratified by Parliament, or in default by Parliament. This Council will consist of three members chosen from Princes, ex-premiers, ministers and ex-ministers, and Presidents and ex-Presidents of whatever Houses of Parliament may exist.

Constitution and Government.

For an account of the government before 1922, see THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK, 1924, pp. 834-5.

The Constitution, which was promulgated on October 22, 1930, declares Egypt to be a Sovereign State, its monarchy hereditary, and its government representative. Egyptians have equal legal, civil and political rights, irrespective of race, language, or religion. Liberty of the individual and of religious belief is guaranteed, and compulsory elementary education is established for both sexes free in Government schools. All powers emanate from the nation. The King exercises legislative powers concurrently with the Senate and Chamber of Deputies, but the right to initiate financial laws is reserved for the King. No measure can become law unless it is voted by Parliament and sanctioned by the King. The Throne is hereditary in the family of Muhammad Ali, and the succession in accordance with the existing rescript (see above). The King can dissolve the Chamber of Deputies, to which the Ministers jointly and separately are responsible. He is also commander-in-chief of the army and navy. But no war of offence may be declared without the consent of Parliament. All powers shall be exercised through the intermediary of the Ministers. No one who is not an Egyptian, and no member of the reigning dynasty, can be a Minister. The King appoints and dismisses Ministers and, on the proposal of the Foreign Minister, diplomatists. The Parliament consists of a Senate and Chamber of Deputies. The Senate consists of 100 members of whom the King nominates 60 and the remaining 40 shall be elected by universal suffrage, for a period of ten years. One half of the Senate is to be renewed every five years. The King nominates the President of the Senate. The number of Deputies shall be 150 elected by indirect universal suffrage, with a mandate for five years. Members of Parliament receive an annual allowance to be fixed by internal regulations. Taxes can only be imposed, reduced, or abolished by law, and no public loan, or undertaking committing the Treasury, may be contracted, without the consent of Parliament. The Budget must be presented to Parliament three months before the beginning of the financial year, and must first be discussed and voted in the Chamber of Deputies. The existing financial obligations incurred through the Public Debt or other international engagement cannot be modified. The strength and organisation of the army will be fixed by law.

Islam is the State religion and Arabic the official language. Cairo is the capital of Egypt. The King may exercise his powers in regard to religious establishments and pious foundations and the nomination of religious chiefs according to the laws of the country and in the absence of legislative dispositions, in accordance with current practice. The Constitution does not affect Egypt's obligations to Foreign States or the rights of foreigners acquired in Egypt by virtue of recognised treaties and customs. The provisions relative to the representative Parliamentary régime, the succession to the throne, or the principles of liberty and equality cannot be revised. The Constitution is applicable to the Kingdom of Egypt without prejudice to the rights which Egypt has in the Sudan. The King's title will be established after the status of the Sudan has been definitely fixed by negotiation.

The results of the last elections (June 1-11, 1931), were as follows:—Shaabists (the Party under the leadership of Sidky Pasha) 85; Ittihadists, 38; Nationalists, 8; Independents, 19. The Government had a majority of 96 seats. The forty elected Senators included only Shaabists, Ittihadists and Independents.

The present Prime Minister took office on June 21, 1930; by October 9, 1930, the ministry was composed as follows:—

Prime Minister, Minister of Finance, and Minister of Interior.—Ismail Pasha Sidky.

Foreign Affairs.—Abdel Fattah Pasha Yehia.

War and Marine.—Ali Pasha Galal Ed Din.

Justice.—Aly Pasha Maher.

Agriculture.—Hafez Pasha Hassan.

Public Works.—Ibrahim Pasha Fahmy.

Wakfs.—Ahmed Pasha Ali.

Education.—Hilmy Pasha Issa.

Communications.—Tewfik Pasha Doss.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

The Provincial Councils were endowed in 1909 with the powers of applying bye-laws, authorising public-markets, fixing the number and pay of ghasirs (village watchmen), and authorising the creation of ezbas (hamlets). They are the local authorities in connection with elementary vernacular education and trade schools. They consist of two elected representatives from each Markaz. The Mudir is the ex-officio President of the Council.

Egypt Proper is administratively divided into 5 governorships (muhâfzas) of principal towns, and 14 mudirias or provinces, subdivided into districts or Markazes.

In fourteen towns (Alexandria, Mansûra, Medînet el-Faiyûm, Tanta, Zagazig, Damanhûr, Beni Suêf, Mahalla el-Kubra, Minya, Mit Ghamr, Zifta, Kafr el-Zayât, Benha, and Port Said), Mixed Commissions composed of both Europeans and Egyptians in equal numbers have been formed to govern locally the towns and look after their interests.

With the exception of Alexandria, all Mixed Commissions have the power to impose taxes on all residents in the town alike, but in case of non-Egyptian residents taxes can only be obtained from those who have already given their express consent to be taxed for municipal purposes.

The Municipal Commission of Alexandria obtained in 1890 from European Powers full power to impose local taxation on all residents in the town.

In 56 other towns, another form of local commission exists with four elected members only. Foreign members, not to exceed two in number, can be nominated at the discretion of the Central Government.

These local commissions have practically the same taxing powers as the Mixed Commissions mentioned above.

A third form of local commissions was formed in 1918 under the name of Village Council and exists now in 39 towns in Egypt. This is composed of four elected members only, but without any power of nomination of Foreign members. It has more or less the same taxing power as the Mixed Commissions.

The Central Government has complete power of Veto on all decisions of every form of Commission in Egypt.

Area and Population.

The total area of Egypt proper, including the Libyan Desert, the region between the Nile and the Red Sea, and the Sinai Peninsula is about 383,000 square miles; but the cultivated and settled area, that is, the Nile Valley, Delta and Oases covers only about 13,600 square miles. Canals, roads, date plantations, &c., cover 1,900 square miles; 2,850 square miles are comprised in the surface of the Nile, marshes, and lakes. Egypt is divided into two great districts—'Wagh-el-Bahri,' or Lower Egypt, and 'El-Said,' or Upper Egypt.

The following table gives the area of the settled land surface, and the results of the census taken in 1917 and on February 18-19, 1927:—

In 1925, Egypt ceded to Italian Cyrenaica the oasis of Jarabub. (For the new frontier between Egypt and Cyrenaica, see map in the 1927 edition of the STATESMAN'S YEAR BOOK.)

The growth of the general population of the country is exhibited by the following figures:—

1846 (Census) . . . . .	4,476,440	1907 (Census) . . . . .	11,287,359
1882 (Census) . . . . .	6,831,131	1917 (Census) . . . . .	12,750,918
1897 (Census) . . . . .	9,734,405	1927 (Census) . . . . .	14,217,864

The annual rate of increase from 1846 to 1882 was 1·18 per cent.; from 1882 to 1897, 2·39 per cent.; 1897–1907, 1·49 per cent.; 1907–1917, 1·23 per cent.; 1917–1927, 1·09 per cent.

Births registered, 1929, 645,217; deaths, 403,457; 1930, births, 670,817; deaths, 367,118.

The principal towns, with their populations, according to the census of 1927, are:—Cairo, 1,064,567; Alexandria, 573,063; Port Said, 104,603; Tanta, 90,016; Mansûra, 63,676; Asyût, 57,136; Faiyûm, 52,863; Zagazig, 52,839; Damanhûr, 51,709; Mahalla el Kubra, 45,642; Minya, 44,325; Suez, 40,523; Beni Suêf, 39,595; Damietta, 34,907; Benha, 28,626; Qena, 27,658; Shibîn el-Kôm, 27,440; Gîza, 26,921; Sohâg, 25,289; Rosetta, 23,048; Aswân, 16,458.

Religion and Education.

In 1927, the population (excluding 40,000 Nomads) consisted of 12,929,260 Moslems; 999,170 Orthodox; 66,080 Protestants; 116,660 Latins and Uniats; 63,550 Jews; 3,144 others and unknown. Thus Moslems formed 91·19 per cent. of the population; Christians, 8·34 per cent.; Jews, 0·45 per cent.; others, 0·02 per cent. The principal seat of Koranic learning is the Mosque and University of El-Azhar at Cairo, founded in the year 361 of the Hegira, being 972 of the Christian era. Other centres of higher learning (Islamic Religious Institutions) are the Institutes of Alexandria (Mashiakheth 'Ulamâ el Iskandariya), Tanta (Ahmadi Mosque), Asyût, Dîsûg (Mosque of El Dîsûgi), Dâmietta (Ashrafiya Institute and El Bahr Mosque), and Zagazig. All these institutions are under the supervision of the Council of the University of El-Azhar.

There are in Egypt large numbers of native Christians connected with the various Oriental churches; of these, the largest and most influential are the Copts, the descendants of those ancient Egyptians who adopted Christianity in the first century of the Christian era. Their head is the Coptic Patriarch Mgr. Yoannes XIX, who was consecrated on December 16, 1928. There are three metropolitans and twelve bishops in Egypt, one metropolitan and five bishops in Abyssinia, and one bishop for Khartum; there are also arch-priests, priests, deacons, and monks. Priests must be married before ordination, but celibacy is imposed on monks and high dignitaries. The Copts use the Diocletian (or Martyrs') calendar, which differs by 284 years from the Gregorian calendar.

Scattered throughout the country there have existed from time immemorial a number of indigenous schools called 'Maktabs.' In 1897, the Ministry of Education endeavoured to bring these independent 'Maktabs' voluntarily under Departmental supervision by means of a system of inspection and reward. Government aid was made dependent upon daily instruction being given in reading, writing, and arithmetic, apart from any religious teaching, and upon the school reaching a satisfactory level of efficiency. The extent to which the scheme has developed is shown in the following table:—

Justice.

Before 1883 the only native tribunals in the country were the Mehkemas, presided over by the Qadis. At the present time, they retain jurisdiction only in matters of personal law (marriage, succession, &c.), and wakfs—the latter being either charitable foundations, or family settlements with an ultimate remainder in favour of a charitable foundation—and also in certain non-religious cases (e.g. succession) between non-Moslem natives. Other Courts of Personal Status, the Magalis Hasbya (reorganised by a Law of October 1925), deal with the appointment of tutors; the interdiction of incapable persons and the nomination of guardians for them; the nomination of mandatories for the absent, and the control of the persons so appointed or nominated. In matters of personal law other than intestate succession, non-Mussulmans are, however, in general subject to their own Patriarchate, or other religious authority. In other matters, natives are justiciable before the so-called Native Tribunals established in 1883. These now consist of 93 Summary Tribunals and of four Judicial Delegations, each presided over by a single judge, with civil jurisdiction in matters up to £E250 in value, and criminal jurisdiction in offences punishable by fine or by imprisonment up to three years, that is, police offences and misdemeanours; ten Central Tribunals, each of the Chambers of which consists of three judges; and two Courts of Appeal, one at Cairo and the other at Asyût. Under a law of 1904, there are also weekly sittings of the Markaz Tribunals (to the number of 29) in the Governorates of Cairo, Alexandria, Port Said, Suez, and Ismailia for the disposal of petty offences, the judge having powers up to three months' imprisonment or fine of £E10, and the prosecution being conducted by the police. Civil cases not within the competence of the Summary Tribunals are heard in first instance by the Central Tribunals, with an appeal to one of the Courts of Appeal. The Central Tribunals also hear civil and criminal appeals from the Summary Tribunals. Since 1905 serious crimes (and, under a law of 1911, and a decree of 1925, all press offences) are tried at the Central Tribunals by three judges of the Court of Appeal sitting as an Assize Court, assizes being held monthly. By a law of 1930 a separate Court of Cassation over and above the Courts of Appeal was set up. The new Court of Cassation is composed of twelve Judges divided into two Chambers of 6 Judges each, one for Civil and the other for Criminal cases. The prosecution before Summary Tribunals and Assize Courts is entrusted to the Parquet, which is directed by a Chef de Parquet, having under him a Substitut or Substitut-Adjoint at each Summary Tribunal of the circumscription; the investigation of crime is ordinarily conducted by the Parquet, or by the police under the direction of the Parquet: cases going before an Assize Court are further submitted to a special committing judge. Offences against irrigation laws, &c., are tried by special administrative tribunals.

The so-called 'Cantonal' Courts (numbering approximately 240) composed of village notables, created in 1912, with a general civil jurisdiction in suits up to £5 in value and a petty criminal jurisdiction were suppressed by Law No. 34 of 1930, their jurisdiction being transferred to the Summary Tribunals.

Owing to the Capitulations, which still apply to Egypt, foreigners who are nationals of Powers possessing capitulatory rights are exempted from the jurisdiction of the local tribunals. Mixed tribunals were instituted in 1875, consisting partly of native and partly of foreign judges, with jurisdiction, in civil matters, between natives and foreigners and between foreigners of different nationalities, or even between foreigners of the same nationality if the dispute relates to land in Egypt. These Tribunals have, also, a limited penal jurisdiction, notably in cases of police offences, offences against the bankruptcy laws, and misappropriation of property seized by order of the tribunal. There are three Mixed Tribunals of First Instance, with a Court of Appeal sitting at Alexandria.

The foreign debt of Egypt began in 1862, when loans amounting to 3,292,800*l.* were issued for the purpose of extinguishing the floating debt. Other issues followed in rapid succession. The dual control by England and France began in 1879. In January, 1880, the two Controllers-General reported that Egypt could not possibly meet her engagements in full, and in July the Liquidation Law, in accordance with the recommendation of an International Commission of the Great Powers, was promulgated. By this law the Unified Debt was reduced to 4 per cent. interest; further conversions were made, and the Unified Debt thus increased to 57,776,340*l.*; certain unconsolidated liabilities were added to the Preference debt, which thus rose to 22,587,800*l.*; and the Daira Sania debt was increased to 9,512,900*l.*, the interest being reduced to 4 per cent. In 1885 and subsequent years further loans and conversions were entered into.

The Daira Sania and the Domains loans were paid off on October 15, 1905, and June 1, 1913, respectively. The amount and the charge of the various debts in April, 1931, were as follows:—

—	Debt	Charge
	£ sterling	£E
Guaranteed Loan, 3 per cent. . . . .	3,760,400	807,125
Privileged Debt, 3½ per cent. . . . .	30,633,980	1,045,884
Unified Debt, 4 per cent. . . . .	55,250,460	2,154,768
Total	89,644,840	8,507,277

The charges on account of debts of all kinds (including tribute), as shown in the estimates for 1931-32, amount to £E4,101,903.

In 1888 and 1890, reserve funds were established, the balances of which, in virtue of the Anglo-French Convention of April 4, 1904, were placed at the disposal of the Egyptian Government in 1905, less certain sums remaining in the hands of the Caisse de la Dette Publique for the service of the debt. The amount received by the Egyptian Government was carried to a General Reserve Fund. In this Fund on April 30, 1931, there was a balance of £E37,950,791. Of this amount £E19,750,509 represents the engaged Reserve.

Defence.

EGYPTIAN ARMY.

By the terms of the British recognition of the independence of Egypt defence is for the present reserved and remains under British control. Service in the army is compulsory, but, owing to the small contingent required, only a fraction (approximately 4 per cent.) of the men who are liable actually serve. Service is for five years with the colours and five years in the reserve. In the Sudanese battalions service is voluntary and extended. The army consists of 2 squadrons of cavalry, 4 batteries and 2 garrison companies of artillery, 11 battalions of infantry, and various departments. A few of the higher posts are held by British officers. The strength of the army is about 12,500 officers and other ranks, excluding His Majesty's Bodyguard. The strength of the latter is approximately 40 officers and 1,100 other ranks.

ARMY OF OCCUPATION.

In 1931, the normal British garrison consisted of 2 regiments of cavalry, 3 batteries R.H.A., 3 batteries Light Brigade R.A., 2 companies of engineers and 5 battalions of infantry in Egypt and 2 in the Sudan, and 2 armoured car companies (as well as companies of medical, ordnance, Pay, Service, Signal, and Veterinary departments), the strength being 9,982. Egypt is also the Headquarters of the Middle East Air Command, and contains four squadrons of aeroplanes and a number of air depôts.

NAVY.

There are three patrol vessels, El Amir Farouq, Rachib, and Abdul Moneim, maintained by the Coastguard and Fisheries Department; the transports Sollum (ex-British sloop Syringa) and El Amira Fawzia, and some smaller vessels, under the Ports and Lighthouses Department; the fishery research vessel Mabahiss; and the Royal yacht Mahroussa.

Production and Industry.

The cultivable area of Egypt Proper was reckoned in 1929-30 at 8,239,185 feddâns (1 feddân = 1·038 acre), and of this 739,945 were taken up for public utility purposes and 1,950,578 were uncultivated for want of reclamation. The corvée, or forced labour, has been abolished, but the inhabitants are still called out to guard or repair the Nile banks in flood time. The agricultural population (Fellahin) forms about 62 per cent. of the whole. A large proportion of them are small landholders with under 51 feddâns, while others, almost or altogether landless, are labourers, the relation between the employers and the employed being mostly hereditary. The following table shows, on December 31, 1930, the number of landholders and the distribution of the land among foreigners and natives :—

Extensive reservoir works, consisting of a dam at Aswân, a barrage at Esna, a barrage at Nag' Hammâdi (completed in October, 1930), a barrage at Asyût, and a barrage at Zifta, have been completed. The original storage capacity of the Aswân reservoir was 1,065,000,000 cubic metres. The level of the dam has been raised by 6 metres and the capacity of the reservoir increased to 2,423,000,000 cubic metres. Another heightening by 7 metres is to be completed in 1933. The Nag' Hammâdi barrage secures the irrigation of Girga Province and part of Qena Province regardless of low flood. The barrage at Esna ensures adequate irrigation to a large area of basin land even in a year of low Nile. The Nag' Hammâdi barrage inaugurated at the end of 1930 is erected across the Nile (Upper Egypt) 588 kilometres south of Cairo. It will improve and assure basin irrigation for a vast area of land, about 580,000 feddâns, on both sides of the Nile. It will regulate the flood waters and thus save the cotton cultivated in these basins from the danger of early floods. It will in future, after the completion of the extensive reservoir works, supply an area of 363,000 feddâns on the left bank of the Nile as well as 150,000 feddâns on its right bank with perennial irrigation. North of Deirût an area of approximately half a million acres has been converted from basin to perennial irrigation in the last ten years. The area and production of cotton in six years were:—

In 1929, the area and yield of wheat were 1,555,377 feddâns and 8,206,161 ardebs; barley, 386,895 feddâns and 2,298,610 ardebs; beans, 501,963 feddâns and 2,290,655 ardebs; lentils, 68,668 feddâns and 256,514 ardebs; onions, 58,459 feddâns and 9,349,850 qantârs; maize, 1,846,606 feddâns and 12,602,077 ardebs; millet, 254,984 feddâns and 2,386,948 ardebs; rice, decorticated, 315,445 feddâns and 948,812 ardebs; sugar-cane, 53,953 feddâns and 38,915,702 qantârs.

In 1930, there were in Egypt 85,866 horses, 763,321 donkeys, 21,105 mules, 776,008 cows, 795,546 buffaloes, 1,129,033 sheep, 643,916 goats and 166,297 camels.

The principal mineral products in 1930 were (in metric tons): phosphate rock, 313,478; petroleum, 285,888; manganese iron ore, 121,211. Other products are: Nitrate shale, carbonates and sulphate of soda, ochres, sulphate of magnesia, talc, building stones, clay, gypsum, natron, nitrate of soda, salt, and turquoise. The following minerals are also known to exist, namely, alum, copper ore, beryl, granite, ornamental stones, and sulphur.

The fishing industry is of some importance. The catch of the Egyptian fisheries in 1930 amounted to 44,224 metric tons, including sea, lake and Nile fisheries. On January 1, 1930, there were 9,540 boats licensed for fishing.

Money, Weights, and Measures.

MONEY.

By decree of October 18, 1916 (20 Zi-l-Higga 1334), the monetary unit of Egypt is the gold Egyptian pound of 100 piastres. It weighs 8·5 grammes ·875 fine, and therefore contains 7·4375 grammes of fine gold. Its value in sterling is £1 0s. 6½d. A new coinage was introduced at the same time in which the Tughra of the Sultan of Turkey was superseded by that of the ruler of Egypt.

The 10-piastre silver piece weighs 14 grammes ·833 fine, and therefore contains 11·67 grammes of fine silver. The piastre is worth 2·46d. in English money. It is subdivided into tenths (ushr el girsh or millièmes).

Coins in circulation are the Egyptian pound (100 piastres) and half pound in gold; 20, 10, 5, and 2 piastre pieces in silver; 1, ½, ¼ piastre pieces in nickel, ⅓ and ⅕ pieces in bronze. Silver coin is legal tender only up to £E2, and nickel or bronze coins up to 10 piastres. For some years gold coins have not been issued, and the gold circulating in Egypt and the Sudan is almost exclusively British sovereigns, which are legal tender at the rate of 97½ piastres. The gold pieces of the former Latin Monetary Union equivalent to the French 20 franc piece are permitted to circulate at a uniform rate of £E0·7715.

Bank notes are issued by the National Bank in various denominations: £E1, 5, 10, 50, 100. They are in principle not legal tender, but since the war they have been made legal tender and inconvertible. The amount in circulation at the end of August, 1931, was £E17,923,417. In 1918 the Government issued currency notes of 10 piastres and 5 piastres, but these have now been withdrawn, and the amount of currency notes in circulation has shrunk from £E1,715,000 in September, 1920, to £E51,000 at the end of August, 1931.

The principal units of Egyptian weights and measures are defined in terms of the metre of the 'Commission Internationale du mètre' by the Law No. 9 of September 26, 1914. The equivalents remain the same as were defined by the Decree of April 28, 1891.

ESTONIA.

(EESTI VABARIK.)

THE Estonian Republic is situated on the Eastern shore of the Baltic Sea, South of the Gulf of Finland between 57° 27' and 59° 42' North Latitude and 21° 46' and 28° 21' Longitude (Greenwich), and includes the Baltic Islands Saaremaa (Oesel), Hiiumaa (Dagö), and Muhumaa (Moon). The Eastern border towards Russia is formed by Lake Peipsi and the Southern by the Republic of Latvia.

In 1721, the country, which had belonged to Sweden since the early part of the seventeenth century, was handed over by Sweden to Russia, and remained under the rule of the latter until 1917. In 1917, after the outbreak of the Russian Revolution, Estonia regained her independence, which was declared on February 24, 1918. By the Treaty of Tartu, of February 2, 1920, Soviet Russia recognised the independence of Estonia. On January 26, 1921, the Supreme Council accorded the Republic de jure recognition.

Constitution and Government.—The Constitution of the Estonian Republic was passed by the Constituent Assembly on June 15, 1920, and has been in force since December 21, 1920.

The power of the State is in the hands of the people. The sovereign power is assured to the people by means of the elections to the Legislative Assembly (Riigikogu, State Assembly), the referendum, and the right of initiating legislation.

The State Assembly is composed of 100 members, elected for three years on the basis of proportional representation, and by universal, direct, equal, and secret suffrage. The Assembly forms the Government, and accepts its resignation, promulgates the laws, passes the budget, decides the financial policy generally, ratifies treaties, the mobilisation decree, and state of siege, &c.

The signatures of 25,000 citizens are necessary in demanding a referendum, proposing a new law, or amending the existing laws. The budget and measures affecting war, peace and foreign treaties cannot be submitted to a referendum.

The executive power consists of the State Head (Riigivanem, State Elder), and ministers, who form the Government. The Government directs the foreign and home policy of the Republic, appoints officials (except where special laws exist), and introduces legislation. It is chosen by the State Assembly, and is responsible to that body. The Government collectively and individually must possess the confidence of the Assembly, and must resign if a vote of no confidence is passed. The Government is the Commander-in-Chief of the Republican defence forces in peace time.

The members of local organs of self-government are elected on a basis similar to that on which rest the elections to the State Assembly. If the law has not created special offices, the executive power of the Government is exercised through the local government institutions.

The national flag of Estonia is blue, black and white in horizontal stripes.

The elections for the Estonian State Assembly were held on May 11-13, 1929, and resulted in the return of the following parties:—Agrarians, 24; Socialists, 25; Settlers, 14; Radical Party (Töderakond), 10; Populists, 9; Workers' Party, 6; Christian Party, 4; Minority Nationals, 5; House-owners, 3.

The Prime Minister is called the State Head.

State Head (Riigivanem).—M. Teemant, appointed February 21, 1932.

Area and Population.—The boundary line between Estonia and Russia is defined by the Peace Treaty of February 2, 1920. The boundaries between Estonia and Latvia were settled on November 1, 1923. The total area is about 47,548 square kilometres, or 18,353 square miles.

The population of 1,117,000 (January 1, 1931) is composed as to 87·7 per cent. of Estonians, 1·7 per cent. of Germans (Balts), and 10·6 per cent. of Russians and other nationalities.

The Republic is divided into eleven districts, as follows (the capitals are given in brackets, and when two are given the second mentioned is the German name):—Harju (Tallinn-Reval), Viru (Rakvere-Vesenberg), Järva (Paide-Weissenstein), Lääne (Haapsalu), Tartu (Tartu-Dorpat), Võru (Võru), Viljandi (Fellin), Pärnu (Pärnu), Saaremaa-Oesel (Kuresaare-Arensburg), Petseri (Petseri), and Valga (Valk). The capital, Tallinn (Reval), was founded in 1219 at the mouth of the Gulf of Finland, and in 1931 had 181,500 inhabitants. The university town of Tartu (Dorpat) had 70,000 inhabitants. The population of the port of Pärnu, on the Gulf of Riga, was 21,000, and that of the manufacturing town of Narva 25,000.

Religion and Education.—There is no State religion in Estonia. Five-sixths of the population are Lutherans, the rest Greek Orthodox, Catholics, &c.

Elementary education is obligatory and gratuitous. In 1929-30, there were 1,292 elementary schools in the Estonian Republic. Of this number 1,263 were supported by local authorities and 29 were private schools. The number of middle schools for general education, gymnasiums, and so on, was 78, of which number 25 were private schools.

For special or professional education there are 5 teachers' seminaries, 3 navigation schools, commercial schools with three years' course, agricultural schools with a 1-3 years' course, and industrial and art schools with a six years' course.

The minority nationals (Germans, Russians, Swedes, Jews, and Letts) receive education in their mother tongue.

For higher education there are the Tartu (Dorpat) University (founded in 1632), which on December 1, 1919, was re-opened as an Estonian seat of learning maintained by the Government; number of students (1930), 3,474 (2,322 men and 1,152 women); and the Technical Institute at Tallinn (January 1, 1930) with 539 students.

(SUOMEN TASAVALTA.)

Constitution and Government.

CENTRAL GOVERNMENT.

Finland is a Republic according to the Constitutional Law of July 17, 1919.

From 1809 Finland was united to the Russian Empire as an autonomous Grand-Duchy. On December 6, 1917, the House of Representatives unanimously proclaimed Finland an independent and sovereign State, and she has been recognised as such by the Powers. According to the Constitutional Law of 1906, the House of Representatives consists of one Chamber of 200 members chosen by direct and proportional election, in which all who are entitled to vote have an equal vote. The suffrage is possessed, with the usual exceptions, by every Finnish citizen (man or woman) who has reached his or her 24th year.

There are 16 electoral districts with a representation proportioned to the population, a rearrangement being required every 10 years. Each district is divided into voting circuits. The voting system, devised with a view to proportional representation, provides for the formation of voters' associations which prepare lists of candidates, the votes for whom are in a falling scale according to the order in which the voter has placed them on the list voted for. There may, within limits, be compacts between associations, and joint candidates may be entered in competing lists, while any voter may either support an association list or vote for any candidate he pleases. Every citizen entitled to vote is eligible to the House of Representatives, which is elected for 3 years.

The President is elected for 6 years by the votes of the citizens. He receives a salary of 700,000 marks and 200,000 marks for allowances. The Council of State (Ministry), appointed by the President, must enjoy the confidence of the House of Representatives.

At the elections held on October 1 and 2, 1930, the following parties were returned: Social-Democrats, 66; Agrarians, 59; Finnish Coalition Party, 42; Swedish Party, 21; Finnish Progressive Party, 11; Small Farmers' Party, 1.

President of Finland.—Dr. Pehr Evind Svinhufvud (born 1861; elected February 16, 1931).

The Council of State, appointed on March 20, 1931, is composed as follows:—

Prime Minister.—Dr. J. E. Sunila (Agrarian).

Minister for Foreign Affairs.—Baron Yrjö Koskinen (Unionist).

Minister of Finance.—Prof. K. Jaervinen (Unionist).

Minister of the Interior.—Baron Ernst von Born (Swedish People's Party).

Minister of Defence.—J. T. Lahdensuo (Agrarian).

Minister of Justice.—Dr. T. M. Kivimäki (Progress Party).

Minister of Education.—M. A. Kukkonen (Agrarian).

LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

For administrative purposes Finland is divided into nine departments. The provincial administration is entrusted in each of the departments to a prefect, who is appointed by the President. The unit of local government is the commune. Each rural parish and each town forms a commune in which all men and all women of 21 years of age who have paid the local taxes for the preceding two years are voters. In all communes a communal council is elected to decide questions of administration and local economy. The executive power is vested in rural communes in a college formed by the head of the commune and four or more aldermen elected by the council. In towns the executive authority is the magistrates with the burgomaster as president and other members elected by the council. There were, in 1931, 38 towns, 21 boroughs, and 535 rural communes in Finland. As executive officers of the Prefects there are the bailiffs of 54 and sub-bailiffs of 299 districts.

The department of Åland has a county council (landsting) consisting of one chamber which is elected on the basis of the same suffrage as the Parliament. The county council settles the internal affairs of the government. The executive authority is with an executive council, of which the lantråd is president.

Religion and Education.

The National Church is Evangelical Lutheran religion, but entire liberty of conscience is guaranteed to the members of all religions and confessions. Ecclesiastically (the Evangelical Church of) Finland is divided into 5 bishoprics (Turku being the archiepiscopal see), 52 provostships, and 595 parishes.

Of the total population there were at end of 1930: Lutherans, 3,532,618; Greek-Catholics and Raskolnics, 62,091; Roman Catholics, 742; Baptists, etc., 10,422; Jews, 1,772; Mohammedans, 307; belonging to the civil-register, 50,173. The Greek-Catholics are under an archbishop, resident at Viipuri.

Finland has 3 universities: at Helsinki (founded in 1640 at Turku, and removed to Helsinki after having been burned down in 1827), with (1930) 327 teachers and 5,657 students (2,171 women); at Turku (Swedish, opened 1919), with 61 teachers and 242 students (64 women): and at Turku (Finnish, opened 1922), with 28 teachers and 421 students (207 women). In 1930, there were published 493 newspapers and reviews in Finnish, 114 in Swedish, 66 in Finnish and Swedish, and 6 in other languages.

Justice and Crime.

The administration of justice is independent of the Government. The lowest courts of justice in Finland are those of the District. In towns these district courts are held by the burgomaster and his assessors; in the country by a judge and 12 jurors—peasant proprietors, the judge alone deciding, unless the jurors unanimously differ from him, when their decision prevails. From these courts an appeal lies to the Superior Court (Hovioikeus) in Turku, Vaasa and Viipuri. The Supreme Court of Judicature (Korkein oikeus) sits in Helsinki. Judges can be removed only by judicial sentence.

Two functionaries, the Oikeuskansleri or the Chancellor of Justice, and the Oikeusasiamies, or the Attorney-General, exercise control over the administration of justice. The former acts also as counsel and public prosecutor for the Government; while the latter, who is appointed by the Parliament, has to extend a general supervision over all the courts of law.

At the end of 1930, the prison population numbered 7,074 men and 699 women, while the number of sentences pronounced in 1928 was 118,014 for crimes and 28,245 in civil cases.

Defence.

ARMY.

The military forces of Finland consist of: (1) the army, air force and coast defence, recruited on the principle of universal service, (2) the Civic Protective Guards Organisation, recruited from the voluntarily enrolled citizens.

The President of the Republic is Commander-in-Chief of the Finnish military forces, but during war he may invest a general with that authority. In peace time the Minister of Defence appointed by the President is responsible for the military administration. The Chief of the Army, assisted by the General Staff, directs the commanding affairs of the army, air force and coast defence.

Every citizen is liable to serve from the age of 17 to the age of 52. The conscripts are divided into troops of the line and the "landwehr."

The troops of the line consist of the standing army and the reserve. All young men who have reached the age of 21 years are summoned to active service. The period of service is generally 12 months—in the cavalry, air force, technical troops, navy, and field and coast artillery 15 months. The term of service is the same for those who are appointed to be trained to officers of the reserve or non-commissioned officers. In the reserve to which the conscript belongs after service with the colours, the period of service is 7 years.

The "landwehr" is divided into three classes; to the first class belong the conscripts who after their service in the reserve are relegated to the "landwehr" (men of 29–52 years); to the second, the conscripts who are considered as incapable for active service in peace time (men of 21–52 years), and the third, young men who cannot on account of their youth yet be enrolled as conscripts (17–21 years).

The effectives in 1931 amounted to 2,190 officers and officials and 30,095 other ranks.

The Air Force comprises 7 squadrons, 1 air school and 1 seaplane station, with a personnel of 1,910 all ranks.

The Coast Defence consists of the coast artillery and the coast fleet.

The Civic Guards are an essential part of the plan of defence. For the administration the Commander-in-Chief of the Guards appointed by the President is subordinated to the Minister of Defence, and directly responsible to the President with regard to his command. The number of the Protective Guards is about 100,000.

The military ordinary and extraordinary budget for 1931 amounted to 623,468,800 Finnish marks.

NAVY.

The naval forces consist of 4 gun-boats, 2 torpedo-boats, 7 motor-torpedo-boats, 4 minelayers, 4 submarines and a number of small vessels. Two coast 4,000-tons defence ironclads, each armed with 4 10-inch guns, are under construction in Finland.

A retired British naval officer is attached to the Ministry of Defence in an advisory capacity.

Production and Industry.

Agriculture is the chief occupation of the people in Finland, although the cultivated area only covers 6·5 per cent. of the land. The land was divided in 1929 into 285,448 farms, and the landed property was distributed as follows:—Less than 3 hectares cultivated, number of farms, 109,211; 3–10 hectares, farms 108,642; 10–25 hectares, farms 51,685; 25–100 hectares, farms 15,083; over 100 hectares, farms 827 (1 hectare=2·47 acres).

The principal crops of 1929 were as follows:—rye, 503,222 acres, yielding 264,971 tons; barley, 284,066 acres, yielding 140,461 tons; oats, 1,071,507 acres, yielding 513,878 tons; potatoes, 172,098 acres, yielding 720,462 tons; hay, 2,842,909 acres. Total land under cultivation, 1929, 5,531,275 acres. Butter production in 1930 was 26,777 tons.

The total forest land amounts to 62,429,000 acres, of which 24,835,000 acres belong to the State. The productive forest land covers 49,764,000 acres, of which 17,570,000 acres belong to the State.

On the air lines Helsinki-Stockholm, Helsinki-Reval, and Turku-Stockholm, 4,372 passengers and 79,782 kilos goods and mail were transported in 1930.

Internal Communications.

For internal communications Finland has a remarkable system of lakes connected with each other and with the Gulf of Finland by canals, navigable at a length of about 2,500 miles. The number of vessels which passed along the canals in 1929 was 48,339, and the number of timber-rafts 12,428; the receipts from vessels, 10,949,636 marks.

In 1930, there were 29,337 miles of high roads.

Railway history in Finland begins in 1860, when the State built a line 66 miles long between Helsinki and Hämeenlinna. On December 31, 1931, there were 3,354 miles of railways, all but 158 miles belonging to the State. The gauge is 1·524 metres (4·9 feet). The traffic upon the State railways in 1930 was 21,023,000 passengers and 9,574,000 tons of goods. The total cost of the State railways to the end of 1930 was 6,100 million marks. The total revenue in 1930 was 789,747,000 marks, and the total expenditure 724,928,000 marks.

Finland had 3,231 post and telegraph-offices in 1930, and revenue and expenditure of posts and telegraphs combined were respectively 166,293,000 and 126,046,000 marks. The number of letters and postcards was 77,610,000; ordinary and printed packages, 22,376,000; newspapers, 201,380,000; money-orders, 2,160,000; total, 303,526,000.

There were in 1930, 18,301 miles of telegraph and 21,860 miles of telephone wires belonging to the State in Finland. The number of telegraph messages sent in the year 1930 was 1,166,956. The telegraph system and part of the telephone system are State property.

Banking, Money, Weights, &c.

The Bank of Finland (founded in 1811) is the State Bank and the only bank of issue. The Bank is under the guarantee of the House of Representatives; its capital and reserves are fixed by its constitution, and its note circulation is limited by the value of its metallic stock and foreign correspondents, and the additional right of issue 1,200 million marks. Notes in circulation are: 1,000, 500, 100, 50, 20, 10 and 5 markkaa. The paper currency of the Bank of Finland on December 31, 1931, was 1,293 million marks, against which the bank held a stock of gold of 304 million marks, and the foreign correspondents 413 million marks. Finland had in 1930, besides the State bank, 17 joint stock banks with 639 offices. The deposits of all private banks on December 31, 1930, were 6,812·2 million marks.

The number of ordinary savings banks at the end of 1930 was 479; number of depositors 780,000, who had to their credit 4063·7 million marks; in the Post Office savings banks over 129,048 depositors had 242·3 million marks; and on Consumers' Co-operative Societies' Savings Account 440·8 million marks were deposited.

The markka of 100 penni is stabilized at the current rate of exchange for the dollar of 39·70, and is of the value of 1·24d.

According to the new monetary law gold coin is to be struck of the value of 100 and 200 markkaa. The former will contain 4·21053 grammes of gold, 900 fine; the latter 8·42105 grammes, 900 fine. Aluminium bronze coins are 20, 10 and 5 markka, and nickel coins 1,  $\frac{1}{2}$ , and  $\frac{1}{4}$  markka pieces. Copper coins 10 and 5 penni pieces.

Because of the exceptional conditions on the international money market, the gold standard was, however, temporarily suspended on October 12, 1931, whereby bank notes will not have to be redeemed in gold, up to May 1, 1932.

The metric system of weights and measures is officially and universally employed in Finland.

FRANCE.

Constitution and Government.

CENTRAL.

SINCE the overthrow of Napoleon III. on September 4, 1870, France has been under a Republican form of government, confirmed on February 25, and July 16, 1875, by a constitutional law, which has been partially modified in June, 1879, August, 1884, June, 1885, and July, 1889. It vests the legislative power in the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate, and the executive in the President of the Republic and the Ministry.

The President is elected for seven years, by an absolute majority of votes, by the Senate and Chamber of Deputies united in a National Assembly, or Congress. He promulgates the laws voted by both Chambers, and ensures their execution. He selects a Ministry from the two Chambers, but may, and sometimes does, choose ministers who are not members of either Chamber (e.g. a general as Minister for War, an admiral as Minister of Marine, a civilian as Minister for Foreign Affairs); he appoints to all civil and military posts, has the right of individual pardon, and is responsible only in case of high treason. The President concludes treaties with foreign Powers, but treaties which affect the area of France or of French colonies must be approved by the Legislature, and he cannot declare war without the previous assent of both Chambers. Every act of the President has to be countersigned by a Minister. With the consent of the Senate he can dissolve the Chamber of Deputies. In case of vacancy, the two Chambers united immediately elect a new President.

President of the Republic.—Paul Doumer; born March 28, 1847; elected May 13, 1931.

The Ministers or Secretaries of State, the number of whom varies, are usually, but not necessarily, members of the Senate or Chamber of Deputies. The President of the Council (Premier) chooses his colleagues in concert with the President of the Republic. Each Minister has the direction of one of the great administrative departments and each is responsible to the Chambers for his acts, while the Ministry as a whole is responsible for the general policy of the Government.

The Ministry consists of the following members, appointed February 21, 1932.

Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs.—M. André Tardieu.

Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Justice.—M. Paul Reynaud.

Minister of Finance.—M. P. E. Flandin.

Minister of National Defence.—M. Piétri.

Minister of Interior.—M. Albert Mahieu.

Minister of the Colonies.—M. de Chappedelaine.

Minister of Public Instruction and of Fine Arts.—M. Mario Rouston (Senator).

Minister of Public Works, Mercantile Marine and Communications.—M. Guernier.

Minister of Commerce, and Posts and Telegraphs.—M. Louis Rollin.

Minister of Agriculture.—M. Chauveau.

The Chamber of Deputies is elected for four years, by manhood suffrage, and each citizen 21 years old, not actually in military service, who can prove a six months' residence in any one town or commune, and not otherwise disqualified, has the right of vote. Deputies must be citizens and not under 25 years of age. The manner of election of Deputies has been modified several times since 1871. The scrutin de liste, under which each elector votes for as many Deputies as the entire department has to elect, was introduced in 1871. In 1876 it was replaced by the scrutin d'arrondissement, under which each department is divided into a number of arrondissements, each elector voting for one Deputy only; in 1885 there was a return to the scrutin de liste, in 1889 the universal nominal vote was reintroduced; in 1919 the scrutin de liste, with proportional representation, was again adopted; but in 1927 (July 12) the old system of scrutin d'arrondissement was once more introduced,

In each constituency the votes are cast up and the Deputy proclaimed elected by a commission of Councillors-General appointed by the prefect of the department. The Chamber is now composed of 612 Deputies.

Chamber of Deputies, elected 22-29 April 1928:—Communists, 16; Democrats, 22; Independent Radicals, 64; Left Republican Democrats, 34; Socialists, 104; Radicals and Radical Socialists, 110; Republican Socialists and French Socialists, 46; Republicans of the Left, 94; Democratic Republican Union, 110; Conservatives, 12.

The Senate is composed of 814 members, elected for nine years from citizens 40 years old, one-third retiring every three years. The election of the Senators is indirect, and is made by an electoral body composed (1) of delegates chosen by the Municipal Council of each commune in proportion to the population; and (2) of the Deputies, Councillors-General, and District Councillors of the department. Besides the 225 Departmental Senators elected in this way, there were, according to the law of 1875, 75 Senators elected for life by the united two Chambers; but by the Senate Bill of 1884 it was enacted that vacancies arising among the Life Senatorships would be filled by the election of ordinary nine-years Senators, the department which should have the right to the vacant seat to be determined by lot. The Princes of deposed dynasties are precluded from sitting in either House.

Senate, elected on January 11, 1924: Gauche Démocratique, 157; Union Républicaine, 88; Gauche Républicaine, 30; Right, 10; Union Démocratique et Radicale, 23; Independents, 6.

The Senate and Chamber of Deputies assemble every year on the second Tuesday in January, unless a previous summons is made by the President of the Republic, and they must remain in session at least five months out of the twelve. The President is bound to convoke them if the demand is made by one-half of the number of members composing each Chamber. The President can adjourn the Chambers, but the adjournment cannot exceed the term of a month, nor occur more than twice in the same session.

Bills may be presented either in the Chamber or Senate by the Government, or on the initiative of private members. In the first case they are remitted to the bureaux for examination; in the second, they are first submitted to a commission of parliamentary initiative. Financial laws must be first presented to and voted by the Chamber of Deputies.

The Senate, constituted as a High Court of Justice, tries cases of attempt against the safety of the State or of plotting to change the form of government.

Senators and Deputies are paid 62,000 francs a year and the Presidents of the two Chambers receive allowances for the expense of entertainment. Members of both Chambers travel free on all railways by means of a small annual payment. The dotation of the President of the Republic is 1,800,000 francs, with a further allowance of 1,800,000 francs for his expenses. On January 1, 1905, a fund was instituted for pensions to ex-Deputies, or their widows and orphans. It is supported by contributions from Deputies (deducted from their pay) as well as by gifts and legacies.

France has, besides, a special institution under the name of Conseil d'État, which was introduced by Napoleon I., and has been maintained since. It is presided over by the Minister of Justice or (in his absence) by a vice-president, and is composed of Councillors, Masters of Requests (Maîtres des Requêtes), and Auditors, all appointed by the President of the Republic. Its duty is to give opinion upon such questions, chiefly those connected with administration, as may be submitted to it by the Government. It is judge in the last resort in administrative suits, and it prepares the rules for the public administration.

II. LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

For administrative purposes France is divided into 90 departments including the 'territory of Belfort' (remnant of the department of Haut-Rhin). Since 1881, the three departments of Algeria are also treated for most purposes, as part of France proper. The department has representatives of all the Ministries, and is placed under a Prefect, nominated by Government, and having wide and undefined functions. He is assisted by a Prefecture Council, an administrative body, whose advice he may take without being bound to follow it. The Prefect is a representative of the Executive, and, as such, supervises the execution of the laws, issues police regulations, supplies information on matters which concern the department, nominates subordinate officials, and has under his control all officials of the State. There is a Sub-Prefect in every arrondissement, except in those containing the capitals of departments and the department of the Seine.

The unit of local government is the commune, the size and population of which vary very much. There were, in 1931, in the 90 departments into which France was divided, 38,004 communes. Most of them (33,960) had less than 1,500 inhabitants, and 22,491 have even less than 500; while 173 communes only have more than 20,000 inhabitants. The local affairs of the commune are under a Municipal Council, composed of from 10 to 36 members, elected by universal suffrage, and by the scrutin de liste for 6 years by Frenchmen after 21 years and 6 months' residence; but each act of the Council must receive the approval of the Prefect, while many must be submitted to the Council General or even to the President of the Republic, before becoming lawful. Even the commune's quota of direct taxation is settled by persons (répartiteurs) chosen by the Prefect from among the lists of candidates drawn up by the Municipal Council.

Each Municipal Council elects a Mayor, who is both the representative of the commune and the agent of the central government. He is the head of the local police and, with his assistants, acts under the orders of the Prefect.

In Paris the Municipal Council is composed of 80 members; each of the 20 arrondissements into which the city is subdivided has its own Mayor. The place of the Mayor of Paris is taken by the Prefect of the Seine, and, in part, by the Prefect of Police. Lyons has an elected Mayor, but the control of the police is vested in the Prefect of the department of the Rhone.

The next unit is the canton (3,024 in 1931), which is composed of an average of 12 communes, although some of the largest communes are, on the contrary, divided into several cantons. It is a seat of a justice of the peace (juge de paix), but is not an administrative unit.

The district, or arrondissement (279 in 1931), has an elected conseil d'arrondissement, with as many members as there are cantons, its chief function being to allot among the communes their respective parts in the direct taxes assigned to each arrondissement by the Council General. That body stands under the control of the Sub-Prefect. A varying number of arrondissements form a department, which has its conseil général renewed by universal suffrage to the extent of one-half every three years (one Councillor for each canton). These conseils deliberate upon all economical affairs of the department, the repartition of the direct taxes among the arrondissements, the roads, normal schools, and undertakings for the relief of the poor. Their decisions are controlled by the Prefect, and may be annulled by the President of the Republic.

According to the Peace Treaty with Germany (June 28, 1919) Alsace-Lorraine has been transferred to France, to date from the Armistice of November 11, 1918. The districts of Lower Alsace, Upper Alsace and Lorraine have become the departments of Bas-Rhin (1,848 square miles and population 688,242); Haut-Rhin (1,354 square miles, population 516,726), and Moselle (2,403 square miles, population 693,408). Thus the total area added to France is 5,605 square miles, population (1931) 1,898,376.

In 1926 the rural population was 20,759,131 and the urban population 19,984,766.

According to the Treaty of Versailles (article 45), France obtained from Germany as a compensation for the destruction of the coal mines in the North of France, the exclusive rights of exploitation of the coal mines situated in the Saar Basin. The area of this district is about 751 square miles, and the population 657,870. For 15 years the Saar Basin is to be governed by a Commission of Five, chosen by the League of Nations. At the end of 15 years the population will decide by vote one of three alternatives, viz., the maintenance of the rule set up by the Treaty, union with France, or union with Germany.

Between the years 1811 and 1820, the average annual surplus of births over deaths was 5·7 per thousand of population; between 1881 and 1890, it was 1·8; between 1901 and 1910 it was 1·2; and between 1921 and 1924 it was 2·25.

In the following table, the third, fourth, and fifth columns give [in brackets] for the first five censuses the population, its density, and its average annual increase of France, excluding Alsace-Lorraine, and are thus comparable with the data for the censuses posterior to the loss of Alsace and Lorraine (1872-1911).

For fiscal and electoral purposes the population of each commune is divided into agglomerated, scattered, and separated (comptée à part); the first two constitute the municipal population, and the third consists of garrison, college, prison, and hospital population. Different from this is the distinction between urban and rural population, a commune being urban where the agglomerated population is over 2,000, and rural where under 2,000.

Religion.

No religion is recognised by the State.

Under the law promulgated on December 9, 1905, the Churches were separated from the State, the adherents of all creeds were authorised to form associations for public worship (associations cultuelles). As transitory measures, ecclesiastics over 45 years of age and of over 25 years of service remunerated by the State were entitled to a pension, and all other ecclesiastics were to receive a grant during a period of from four to eight years. All buildings actually used for public worship and as dwellings in that connection were to be made over, after an inventory was taken, to the associations for public worship: the places of worship for the total period of the existence of these associations, the ecclesiastical dwellings for a time.

The law of January 2, 1907, provides (among other things) that, failing associations cultuelles, the buildings for public worship, together with their furniture, will continue at the disposition of the ministers of religion and the worshippers for the exercise of their religion; but, in each case, there is required an administrative act drawn up by the prefet as regards buildings belonging to the State or the Departments, and by the maire as regards buildings belonging to the Communes. Forms of the documents necessary under the new law have been supplied by the Government.

There are 17 archbishops and 68 bishops of the Roman Catholic Church in France, not including Alsace and Lorraine, Algeria or the colonies, in addition to 51,000 clergy of various grades. The Protestants of the Augsburg Confession are, in their religious affairs, governed by a General Consistory, while the Reformed Church is under a Council of Administration, the seat of which is at Paris. There are about a million Protestants in France.

The Associations law, passed July 1, 1901, requires religious communities to be authorised by the State, and no monastic association can be authorised without a special law in each particular case. Before the passing of that law there were 910 recognised associations, and 753 not recognised; the establishments, mostly not recognised, numbered 19,514, and their members 159,628 (30,136 men and 129,492 women). After the passing of the law, of the 753 associations not recognised, 305 dissolved themselves and 448 asked for authorisation, which was refused by the Chambers to the majority of them.

Education.

The public schools constitute the University of France and are divided into three classes, primary, secondary, and superior. The Superior Council of 52 members has deliberative, administrative, and judiciary functions, and a Consultative Committee advises respecting the working of the school system, but the inspectors-general are in direct communication with the Minister. For local educational administration France is divided into 17 circumscriptions, called Academies, each of which has an Academic Council whose members comprise a certain number elected by the professors or teachers. The Academic Councils deal with all grades of instruction. Each is under a Rector, and each is provided with academy inspectors, one for each department except Nord which has two (one being for primary instruction), and Seine which has eight (one being director of primary instruction), besides primary inspectors of schools, usually one for each arrondissement, 20 inspectors (male or female) for the department of the Seine. Each department has a council for primary educational matters, the prefect being president, and this body has large powers with respect to the inspection, management and maintenance of schools and the opening of free schools.

The law of August 9, 1879, rendered obligatory for each department the maintenance of two primary normal schools, one for school-masters, the other for school-mistresses; there are two higher normal schools of primary instruction: one at Fontenay-aux-Roses for professors for normal schools for school-mistresses, the other at St. Cloud for professors for normal schools for school-masters. The law of June 16, 1881, made instruction absolutely free in all primary public schools; that of March 28, 1882, rendered it obligatory for all children from 6 completed to 13 years of age. The law of October 30, 1886, is the organic law of primary instruction now in force; it established that teachers should be lay; for infant schools it substituted écoles maternelles instead of salles d'asile; it fixed the programmes of instruction, and established freedom of private schools under the supervision of the school authorities.

On November 15, 1929, there were 308 higher elementary schools for boys and 223 for girls. The number of pupils was on November 15, 1929, 37,712 boys and 38,328 girls, compared with 40,609 boys and 39,158 girls on November 15, 1928.

Courses of instruction for adults are conducted in the evening by teachers in their schools.

The number of primary normal schools (exclusive of Fontenay and St. Cloud) is 90 for school-masters, and 90 for school-mistresses. The number of pupil-teachers in primary normal schools in 1930-31 was 6,433 men and 6,692 women.

Secondary Instruction: Boys.—Secondary instruction is supplied in two types of schools—by the State in the lycées, and by the communes in the colleges, by associations and by private individuals in free establishments (écoles libres). The course of study extends over 7 years.

The number of public secondary schools for boys and the number of pupils for 3 years were as follows :—

Higher Instruction is supplied by the State in the universities and in special schools, and by private individuals in the private faculties and schools. The freedom of higher instruction was established by the law of July 12, 1875, modified by that of March 18, 1880, which reserved to the State faculties the exclusive right to confer degrees. A decree of December 28, 1885, created a general council of the faculties, and the creation of universities, each consisting of several faculties, was accomplished in 1897, in virtue of the law of July 10, 1896.

There are 17 Universities in France. The following table shows the year of foundation and the total number of students on July 31, 1930 :—

There are free faculties: at Paris (the Catholic Institute of Paris comprising theology, law and advanced scientific and literary studies); Angers (theology, law, sciences, letters, agriculture); Lille (theology, law, medicine and pharmacy, sciences, letters, social sciences and politics); Lyon (theology, law, sciences, letters); Marseilles (law); Toulouse (the Catholic Institute with theological, literary, and scientific instruction). There is, besides, in Paris a large institution for free higher instruction in political science, the Ecole libre des Sciences Politiques, and also one for the study of international law, the Institut des Hautes Études Internationales.

The State faculties confer the degrees of bachelor, of licentiate, and of doctor. Yearly competitive examinations in the various branches of teaching (agrégations) are open to holders of the degree of licentiate, or doctor in the case of law and medicine, and lead to the title of professeur agrégé in secondary and higher (law and medicine) instruction.

The other higher institutions dependent on the Ministry of Public Instruction are the Collège de France (founded by Francis I. in 1530), which has courses of study bearing on various subjects, literature and language, archæology, mathematical, natural, mental and social science (political economy, &c.); the Museum of Natural History giving instruction in the sciences and nature; the École Pratique des Hautes Études (history and philology, mathematical and physico-chemical sciences, and the sciences of nature and of religion), having its seat at the Sorbonne; the École Normale Supérieure, which prepares teachers for secondary instruction and, since 1904, follows the curricula of the Sorbonne without special teachers of its own; the École des Chartes, which trains the archivist paleographers; the École des Langues Orientales vivantes; the École du Louvre, devoted to art and archæology; the École des Beaux-Arts, and the Bureau des Longitudes, the Central Meteorological Bureau; the Observatoire of Paris; and the French Schools at Athens, Rome, Cairo and Indo-China, besides a school for Morocco.

Outside Paris there are eight observatories (Meudon, Besançon, Bordeaux, &c.). The observatory at Nice is dependent on the Academy of Sciences.

Professional and Technical Instruction.—The principal institutions of higher or technical instruction dependent on other ministries are: the Conservatoire des Arts et Métiers at Paris (with 20 evening courses on the applied sciences and social economy), the École Centrale des Arts et Manufactures, the École des Hautes Études Commerciales, 18 higher schools of commerce with 3,304 pupils (1930), dependent on the Ministry of Public Instruction; the National Agronomic Institute at Paris, the Veterinary school at Alfort, a school of forestry at Nancy, the higher national school of colonial agriculture, national agricultural schools at Grignon, Rennes, Montpellier, 46 practical schools of Agriculture, &c., dependent on the Ministry of Agriculture; the École Supérieure de Guerre, the École Polytechnique, the military school at St. Cyr, the École d'Artillerie at Fontainebleau, the École de Cavalerie at Saumur, and other schools dependent on the Ministry of War; the Naval School at Brest dependent on the Ministry of Marine; the School of Mines at Paris, the School of Bridges and Roads at Paris, the School of Mines at St. Etienne, and the Schools of Miners at Alais and Douai; with other schools dependent on the Ministry of Public Works; the École Coloniale at Paris, dependent on the Ministry of the Colonies. The École des Beaux Arts, the École Nationale des Arts Décoratifs, and the Conservatoire de Musique et de Déclamation depend on the department of Fine Arts, which is attached to the Ministry of Public Instruction. The municipal school of Industrial Physics and Chemistry is dependent on the City of Paris. In the provinces there are National schools of fine arts, and schools of music, and also several municipal schools as well as free subventioned schools, etc.

Technical schools of a somewhat lower grade (dependent on the Ministry of Public Instruction) are very numerous, comprising (in 1930—the latest available figures) seven national schools of arts and trades (Aix, Angers, Chalons, Cluny, Lille, Paris, Strasbourg), two schools of horology, eight national professional schools, 197 practical schools of commerce and industry (of which 47 are for girls) with 29,254 pupils (8,321 girls). In 1929, there were 487 professional schools with 160,491 pupils.

Justice and Crime.

The Courts of lowest jurisdiction in France are those of the Justices of Peace (juges de paix, one in each canton) who try small civil cases and act also as judges of Police Courts, where all petty offences (contraventions) are disposed of. The Correctional Courts pronounce upon all graver offences (délits), including cases involving imprisonment up to 5 years. They have no jury, and consist of 3 judges belonging to the civil tribunals of first instance. In all cases of a délit or a crime the preliminary inquiry is made in secrecy by an examining magistrate (juge d'instruction), who may either dismiss the case or send it for trial before a court where a public prosecutor (Procureur) endeavours to prove the charge. The Court of Assizes is assisted by 12 jurors, who decide by simple majority on the fact with respect to offences amounting to crimes. The highest courts are the 28 Courts of Appeal, composed each of one President and a variable number of members, for all criminal cases which have been tried without a jury; and one Court of Cassation which sits at Paris, for all criminal cases tried by jury, so far as regards matters of law.

Formerly there was a tribunal of first instance in each arrondissement for civil cases, wherein the amount in dispute is between 200 and 1,500 francs, but since the decree of September 3, 1926, such a tribunal exists only in each department. Where the department is an important one, this tribunal may be divided into several sections which sit in the towns other than the capital of the department. Above these are the Appeal Courts and the Court of Cassation. For commercial cases there are, in 226 towns, Tribunals of Commerce and Councils of experts (prud'hommes). In the towns are police courts.

All Judges are nominated by the President of the Republic. They can be removed only by a decision of the Court of Cassation constituted as the Conseil Supérieur of the magistracy.

The French penal institutions consist, first, of Houses of Arrest (8,604 chambres de sûreté and dépôts de sûreté at the end of 1925). Next come Departmental Prisons (70 in 1925), also styled maisons d'arrêt, de justice and de correction, where both persons awaiting trial and those condemned to less than one year's imprisonment are kept, as also a number of boys and girls transferred from, or going to be transferred to, reformatories. The reformatories are 7 for boys and 5 for girls. The Central Prisons (maisons de force et de correction), where all prisoners condemned to more than one year's imprisonment are kept, provided with large industrial establishments for the work of prisoners, are 9 for men and 3 for women. The average population in 1926 of all penal establishments was 19,884 men and 3,265 women.

All persons condemned to hard labour and many condemned to 'reclusion' are sent to Guiana (military and récidivistes); the dépôt de forçats of St. Martin-de-Ré is a dépôt for transferred hard-labour convicts.

Pauperism, Relief of Old Age and Social Insurance.

In France the poor are assisted partly through public 'bureaux de bienfaisance' and partly by private and ecclesiastical charity. The funds of the 'bureaux de bienfaisance' are partly derived from endowments, partly from communal contributions, and partly from public and private charity. In 1928, the bureaux expended 168,494,200 francs and assisted 749,865 persons. Public assistance is rendered to poor or destitute children. At the end of 1928 the institutions for this purpose contained 173,285 children; the expenditure during the year amounted to 185,167,600 francs. In 1928 the hospitals for the sick, infirm, aged, or infants, numbered 2,057; and at the end of the year had 83,695 patients, besides 87,690 aged and infirm inmates; their expenditure for 1928 amounted to 1,186,407,500 francs. In the same year 804,805 persons received gratuitous medical assistance at home and 304,717 in hospitals, the expenditure for such purposes amounting to 332,089,700 francs. At the end of 1928 the asylums for imbeciles, national, departmental, and private, had 83,563 patients.

An Act was passed in 1905, for the relief of the aged poor, age limit, 70, the infirm, and the permanently incurable. The Act of 1905 provided that the cost of the scheme should be borne by the communes, the departments, and the State. The number of persons registered for relief on December 31, 1928, was 539,691. The cost to the State for 1928, was 393,957,700 francs. The Old-Age Pensions Law of April 5, 1910, as amended on February 27, 1912, provides for all wage-earners old-age pensions towards which both employers and workers contribute. Contributions are to be paid up to the 60th year of the worker's life, and the State will contribute 100 francs. This sum will be increased by one-tenth for every insured worker who has brought up 3 children of the age of 16. On December 31, 1928, 6,990,000 persons were registered under the scheme.

A law of March 24, 1873, provides protection for new-born infants. In 1924, 53,849 infants were placed in 86 departments. In 1913, two further laws were introduced: that of June 17 to give relief, varying from 0.50 to 1.50 francs or more per day, to women in confinement, and that of July 14 amended in 1925 and 1926, to give relief to families with numerous children. The rate is a minimum of 22.5 francs per month for every child beyond the third. In 1928, the number of women so aided was 836,011, and the amount of relief 21,964,600 francs. Supplementary relief to nursing mothers, under the law of October 24, 1914, amounted in 1928 to 38,070,300 francs. In 1928, the number of families assisted was 51,417, at an expense of 9,174,200 francs, of which 4,032,500 francs were contributed by the State. Since 1922 it has been customary, in accordance with the law of June 29, 1918, to award prizes for large families. In 1928, in 180 departments, 46,000 prizes were awarded to the value of 18,200,000 francs. By law of April 29, 1926, 360 francs per annum is granted to every French family which has more than 3 children living for every child beyond the third under 13.

The law providing for compulsory social insurance which was passed on April 5, 1928, came into force on July 1, 1930.

The law provides for the compulsory insurance of all wage earners whose wages do not exceed 15,000 francs per annum (18,000 francs in the larger cities), against sickness, incapacity, old age and death, and also extends maternity and unemployment benefits. The cost of the insurance is borne by the employer, worker and the state, the amount of contribution from the worker varying in accordance with the remuneration. The assessment amounts to about 8 per cent. for industrial workers and about 2 per cent. for agricultural workers, half to be paid by the worker and half by the employer.

The accounts of revenue and expenditure of the Government officials are examined by a special administrative tribunal (Cour des Comptes), instituted in 1807. As from 1930, the financial year commenced on April 1, but on October 17, 1931, it was decided to revert to the calendar year. The latest budget estimates relate, therefore, to the period April 1 to December 31, 1932.

Defence.

I. LAND DEFENCES.

France has a coastline of 1,760 miles, 1,304 on the Atlantic and 456 on the Mediterranean. Its land frontier extends over 1,665 miles, of which 1,246 miles are along the Belgian, German, Swiss, and Italian frontiers, and 419 along the Spanish frontier.

In consequence of the projected reduction of the term of service in the regular army to one year, France is in process of constructing a trench system of defence, based on the experiences of the Great War, along her Eastern Frontier between the Rhine and Luxembourg. Behind this system are the former German fortresses of Strassburg, Metz, and Thionville and the first-class fortresses of Verdun, Toul, Epinal, and Belfort. On the coast

Toulon, Rochefort, Lorient, Brest, and Cherbourg are naval harbours surrounded by forts.

II. ARMY.

The French Army is divided into the Metropolitan and the Colonial Armies; both are under the War Minister, but the estimates for Colonial troops other than those maintained in Algeria, Tunis, and Morocco are included in the budget of the Minister for the Colonies. The Metropolitan Army is divided into the Active Army, the Reserve Troops and the Territorial Army. The Army is localised and territorialised in the military government of Paris and 20 Army Corps areas. The normal composition of a French Army Corps is 2 infantry divisions, 1 regiment of cavalry, 1 artillery brigade of three regiments, 1 battalion of engineers, 1 group and 1 company of observation balloons, and administrative services.

The infantry division consists of 3 regiments of infantry each of 3 battalions, and 1 regiment of artillery of 3 groups each of 3 batteries. The cavalry division consists of 3 cavalry brigades each of 2 regiments, 1 group of horse artillery, and 1 group of cyclist chasseurs.

The peace establishment of the French Army provides for 5 Cavalry divisions and 26 divisions of the Active Metropolitan Army. The establishment of the Active Metropolitan Army by units for 1930-31 is as follows:—

	Regiments	Independent Battalions	Independent Companies	Independent Groups	Independent Sections	Independent Squadrons
Infantry . . . . .	78	30	—	—	—	—
Tanks . . . . .	10	1	—	—	—	—
Cavalry . . . . .	20	5 <sup>a</sup>	—	—	—	12 <sup>b</sup>
Artillery . . . . .	67	13	10	2	—	—
Engineers . . . . .	11	—	—	—	2	—

The peace establishment of the Active Metropolitan Army for 1931-32 is 340,637, of whom 270,812 are allocated for Home Defence, and 69,825 form a mobile reserve for the overseas garrisons. Enlistment for the Metropolitan Army is regulated by the law of March 28, 1928, and is on a compulsory basis, but liberal exemptions are allowed. Service in the active army is for 1 year, and begins at the age of 21, the first half of the annual contingent joining in November, the second half in the following May. The total duration of service in active army and reserve is 28 years. Provision is made for the enlistment of 106,000 long service professional soldiers, 76,000 for the Metropolitan and 30,000 in the Colonial Army. After serving for 1 year, the soldier remains immediately available for military service for 3 years. In his fourth year of service he joins the first line of reserve for 16 years, and in his twentieth year the Territorial Army in which he remains for 8 years.

The Reserve Troops form divisions corresponding to those in the Active Army on mobilisation, in the same districts as those to which the Active divisions belong. The Territorial Army forms a second line and is similarly organised in divisions on mobilisation. The Customs Corps is organised in battalions as are the Chasseurs Forestiers, these are both recruited from men who have passed into the Territorial Army.

The Gendarmerie is a police force recruited from the Army but performing civil duties in time of peace. There is a legion in each military district. The strength of the Gendarmerie is 33,380, of whom about one-third are mounted.

The Garde Républicaine is also a police force and performs duties in Paris similar to those performed by the Gendarmerie in the districts. Its strength is 2,988.

The Colonial Army is distinct from the Metropolitan, and consists partly of white troops and partly of native troops. The Colonial establishment for 1931-32 was 237,363, exclusive of Colonial troops in France and of certain native troops administered by the Ministry of the Colonies. The total peace establishment of the French Army, exclusive of Gendarmerie, is  $340,637 + 237,363 = 578,900$ . The Colonial white troops are recruited either by voluntary enlistment, or by voluntary transfer from the Metropolitan Army.

The organisation of the extra-European troops by units is as follows:—

	Regiments	Independent Battalions	Independent Companies	Independent Groups	Independent Sections	Independent Squadrons
Infantry . . . . .	52	18	11	—	—	—
Tanks . . . . .	—	3	—	—	4	—
Cavalry . . . . .	14	—	7	—	—	8
Artillery . . . . .	10	1	—	2	12	—
Engineers . . . . .	—	8	4	—	—	—
Air Force . . . . .	2	—	—	4	—	—

The administration of the French Army consists of a General Staff and of a number of departments, all under the War Minister. In questions of strategy and of higher military policy the War Minister is assisted by a Council called the Conseil Supérieur de la Guerre, consisting of himself as President, the Marshals of France and twelve selected generals, of whom one must be Chief of the General Staff.

In September, 1919, it was decided that the uniform of the Army should be the horizon-blue dress with kepi. The Chasseurs or Light Infantry battalions were, however, permitted to keep their distinctive dark blue uniform. Khaki was adopted for Colonial and North African troops, and navy blue for the Air Force.

The French infantry is armed with the Lebel magazine rifle: calibre .315. The French field gun is the 7.5 cm. (2.95 in.) Q.F., shielded gun. The French howitzer is the 10.5 cm. (3.35 in.) howitzer, and as the result of the war the French Army possesses a large variety of heavy guns of all calibres.

Army estimates for 1932, 5,260,877,870 francs.

III. NAVY.

Under the Washington Treaty, whose provisions affected her very slightly, France was allowed to retain ten capital ships, but the France was lost in Quiberon Bay on August 25, 1922, and the nine remaining displace 185,925 metric tons. By the provisions of the London Treaty, she retains the right to lay down additional capital ships up to a total of 105,000 tons during 1931-36. So far, the building of a battle cruiser of 25,000 tons is all that has been discussed, and the design of this has not been finally settled.

The current shipbuilding programme (1931-32) comprises 4 cruisers of 7,500 tons, 2 flotilla leaders, and 4 convoy sloops. In hand from previous programmes are 1 10,000 ton cruiser (Algerie), 2 of 7,500 tons (La Galissonnière and Jean de Vienne), and 1 cruiser-minelayer (Emile Bertin); 6 flotilla leaders of 2,500 tons; 45 submarines; 3 sloops; 1 netlayer; and 2 oil tankers. The air service, which works in close touch with the Navy, is also being developed. The coast defences are now under the control of the Navy, and have been reorganized in four coast 'naval frontier' districts, in relation to 4 divisions of aircraft (40 flotillas), while a fifth division (10 flotillas) is attached to the active fleet. The naval frontier districts include considerable forces of destroyers, submarines, and minelayers. The chief stations are Dunkirk, Cherbourg, Brest, Rochefort, Toulon, Corsica, Bizerta, Oran, Algiers, and Bona.

The total naval expenditure for 1932 (nine months) was 2,417,000,000 francs.

The Navy is under the supreme direction of the Minister of Marine, assisted by a Chief of the Staff. The latter has charge of all that concerns preparation for war, and is commander-in-chief designate. There are two sub-chiefs of the staff, of whom one is in charge of various sections, and the other of the work of the Military Cabinet. The central administration embraces the directorates of personnel, matériel, and artillery, the works section, the finance department, the services of submarine defences, hydrography, and a central flying service. In addition to these are the Superior Council of the Navy, which advises the Minister on high policy, and several special committees. For purposes of administration the French coasts are divided into five maritime arrondissements, having their headquarters at the naval ports of Cherbourg, Brest, Lorient, Rochefort, and Toulon, each under a vice-admiral, but Lorient and Rochefort are being reduced. Two flag-officers are inspectors-general and commanders-in-chief designate in the Channel and Mediterranean.

The French navy is manned partly by conscription and partly by voluntary enlistment. By the channel of the 'Inscription Maritime,' which was introduced by Colbert, and on the lists of which are the names of all male individuals of the 'maritime population,' France was formerly provided with a reserve of 114,000 men, of whom about 25,500 were usually serving with the fleet; now large numbers are taken from the shore for engine-room and other duties. The active personnel in 1931 numbered 3,880 officers and 53,750 men.

The following is a summary of the strength of the fleet at the periods shown:—

Internal Communications.

I. RIVERS, RAILWAYS, ETC.

In 1930, there were in France 41,365 miles of national roads, 5,615 miles of departmental roads, 346,865 miles of local roads, making a total of 393,845 miles.

In 1928, there were 6,204 miles of navigable waterways with a total traffic of 48,404,000 tons.

By a law of July 11, 1842, the construction of railways was left mainly to companies, superintended, and if necessary assisted, by the State; which now constructs lines which the companies work, and works on its own account one important State system. There are lines of local interest subventioned by the State or by the departments. The concessions granted to the six great companies expire at various dates from 1950 to 1960, till when (by a Convention made on June 28, 1921), the State guarantees to them working expenses and the interest and redemption of capital and loans.

The length of principal lines open for traffic on January 1, 1930 was 26,177 miles, made up as follows: State, 5,665 miles; Nord, 2,394 miles; Est 3,142 miles; Paris-Orléans, 4,681 miles; Paris-Lyons-Mediterranean, 6,169 miles; Midi, 2,694 miles; Alsace-Lorraine, 1,432 miles. The total receipts for 1931 of all the seven companies was 14,050,166,000 francs; for 1930, 15,470,836,000 francs. Working expenses in 1929 amounted to 12,736,451,000 francs and financial charges, 2,729,982,000 francs.

The electrification of the French railways is now a settled policy. On September 1, 1931, there was a total length of 1,043 miles electrified. The State railway has 60 miles (Paris suburbs); the Orléans railway 147 miles (Paris-Vierzon 127 miles); the P.L.M. 62 miles (Chambéry to the Modana section of the Culoz-Modana line), and the Midi about 754 miles.

The following table gives particulars of air traffic for 4 years:—

Years	Miles of airway	Mileage flown (in thousands of miles)	Passengers carried	Freight (1,000 lbs.)	Mall (1,000 lbs.)
1927	7,586	3,753	15,857	1,644	276
1928	—	—	19,549	2,545	272
1929	—	5,692	25,249	3,532	314
1930	—	5,849	28,935	3,678	478

1914-1927 . . . . .	165,002,990	585,580,361	1,078,467,592	—	1,829,050,943

The ordinary savings-banks numbered 560 (with about 1,800 branch offices) on December 31, 1930; the number of depositors was 9,563,221, with deposits to the value of 23,556,325,290 francs, representing an average of francs 2,463.22 to each depositor. The maximum deposit allowed in the ordinary savings banks was increased from 12,000 to 20,000 francs for individuals and from 50,000 to 100,000 francs for mutual-aid societies and specially authorised institutions. The National savings-banks, on December 31, 1929, held deposits and interest amounting to 11,658,664,000 francs due to 8,507,284 depositors, representing an average of 1,370 francs per account.

The Bank of France, founded in 1800, and placed under State control in 1806, has the monopoly (since 1848) of issuing bank notes. The present privileges of the Bank were last renewed on December 20, 1918, for a further 25 years, i.e., until December 31, 1945. The capital of the Bank is fixed at 182,500,000 francs.

The situation of the Bank on February 12, 1932, was :—

	February 12, 1932
	1000 francs
Gold . . . . .	73,034,075
Sight deposits abroad . . . . .	7,829,552
Advances to the Public . . . . .	2,785,588
Advances to the State . . . . .	3,200,000
Notes in circulation . . . . .	83,238,819
Public and private deposits . . . . .	27,278,402

At the outbreak of war the maximum note issue of the Bank of France was 6,800 million francs; on August 5, 1914, it was raised to 12,000 million francs ; the amount was increased on successive occasions. By the Monetary Law of June 24, 1928, the maximum limit on note issue was cancelled.

The following are the principal banks :—The Crédit Foncier de France, founded in 1852, which lends money on mortgage ; the Crédit Lyonnais, founded in 1863 ; the Société Générale, founded in 1864 ; the Comptoir National d'Escompte de Paris ; Banque de Paris et des Pays Bas ; and the Banque Nationale de Crédit.

Money, Weights, and Measures.

The Franc of 100 centimes was in normal pre-war conditions of the value of 9½*d.* or 25·225 francs to the pound sterling.

A new Monetary Law was introduced on June 24, 1928, stabilising the franc on a gold basis. According to this law, the franc, the French monetary unit, consists of 65½ milligrammes of gold, 900/1,000 fine. The Bank of France is bound to convert its notes into gold on demand, and to keep a reserve of gold bullion and coin equal to at least 35 per cent. of the combined total of the notes in circulation and of the credit current accounts. The Mint will strike gold coins of 100 francs, 900/1,000 fine, and these coins shall be unlimited legal tender. To replace the 5, 10 and 20 franc notes of the Bank of France, which will be withdrawn from circulation before December 31, 1932 (from which date they will cease to be legal tender), the Mint, on behalf of the State, will issue silver coins 680/1,000 fine, of a nominal value of 10 and 20 francs. The total issue of such coins must not exceed 3 milliard francs.

The weight of the 10-franc silver coins is fixed at 10 grammes and of the 20-franc piece at 20 grammes, with a margin of five-thousandths both as regards weight and fineness.

The metric system of weights and measures is in general use in France.

ANDORRA.

The independence of the valleys of Andorra was of Carolingian origin. Their political status was regulated by the Paréage of 1278, according to which they were placed under the joint suzerainty of the head of the French state and of the Spanish Bishop of Urgel. The country consists of gorges, narrow valleys and defiles, surrounded by high mountain peaks of the Eastern Pyrenees. Its maximum length is 17 miles, and its width 18 miles; it has an area of 191 square miles and a population of 5,231, scattered in 6 villages. The surface of the country is rough and irregular, with an altitude varying between 6,562 and 10,171 feet. It is governed by a council of twenty-four members elected for four years by the heads of families in each of the six parishes. Half of the council is re-elected every two years. The council nominates a First Syndic (Syndic général des Vallées) to preside over its deliberations; in the First Syndic is vested the executive power. A Second Syndic is also nominated as deputy of the First Syndic. The judicial power is exercised in civil matters in the first instance by 2 civil judges (Bayles) appointed by the Bishop and by France respectively. There is a Court of Appeal and also a Supreme Court of Andorra at Perpignan. This, and the Ecclesiastical Court of the Bishop, are the highest appeal courts. For criminal suits two magistrates (le Viguiér de France and le Viguiér Episcopal) preside over a criminal court at Andorra-la-Vieille. The valleys of Andorra pay an annual due of 960 francs to France and 460 pesetas to the Bishop. A permanent delegate, the Prefect of the Pyrénées Orientales, moreover, has charge of the interests of France and his department controls the public services established by France, such as education, posts and telegraphs. A good road runs from Urgel to Andorra, and from there to Encamp. Catalan is the language spoken. Education is in a backward state. French and Spanish currency are both in use.

Colonies and Dependencies.

The colonies and dependencies of France (including Algeria and Tunis) have an area which is given officially as about 10,255,510 sq. kilometres, or 3,958,626 square miles, with a population of 59,474,000. Algeria, however, is under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of the Interior, and Tunis and Morocco are attached to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. For Syria and Cameroon France holds mandates under the League of Nations. The administration of the colonies is directed or controlled by the Ministry of the Colonies, which was organised as a separate department in 1894. Most of them enjoy some measure of self-government and have elective councils to assist the governor. The older colonies have also direct representation in the French legislature, Réunion, Martinique and Guadeloupe sending each a senator and two deputies, French India a senator and a deputy, Senegal, Guiana, and Cochín-China each a deputy, while most of the others are represented on the 'Conseil Supérieur des Colonies.' This council consists of the senators and deputies of colonies, delegates from other colonies, and officials and other persons appointed on account of their special knowledge or qualifications. Some only of the colonies have a revenue sufficient for the cost of administration. In 1931-32, France is to spend on the colonial service 714,362,472 francs.

ASIA.

FRENCH INDIA.

The chief French possession in India is Pondicherry. It was founded by the French in 1674, taken by the Dutch in 1693, and restored in 1699. The English took it in 1761, restored it in 1765, re-took it in 1778, restored it a second time in 1785; re-took it a third time in 1793, and restored it in 1814.

As established by the treaties of 1814, and 1815, the French possessions in India consist of five separate colonies, which cover an aggregate of 50,803 hectares (about 196 square miles), and had on February 26, 1931, the following estimated populations:—

*Pondichéry . . . 43,499	Modéliarpeth . . . 14,846	Nédoukadou . . . 5,617
Oulgaret . . . 28,899	Ariancoupom . . . 20,636	Cotchéry . . . 6,605
Villenour . . . 23,489	*Karikal . . . 17,558	*Chandernagor . . . 27,262
Tiroubouvané . . . 20,963	Tirnoular . . . 12,553	*Mahé . . . 12,430
Bahour . . . 18,352	Grande Aldée . . . 8,317	*Yanaon . . . 5,249
Nettapacom . . . 12,871	Neravy . . . 7,259	Total . . . 286,410

In 1931, the population of the Provinces was as follows:—Pondichéry, 183,555; Karikal, 57,914; Chandernagor, 27,262; Mahé, 12,430; Yanaon, 5,249.

The colonies are divided into five dépendances (the chief towns of which are marked with an asterisk in the above table) and seventeen communes, having municipal institutions. There is also an elective general council. The Governor of the colonies resides at Pondichéry. The colonies are represented in the Parliament at Paris by one senator and one deputy. At Pondichéry the birth-rate in 1930, was 2·33 per cent. for Europeans and mixed, and 7·73 per cent. for Indians; and the death-rate 1·53 per cent. for Europeans and mixed, and 3·85 per cent. for Indians. There were in 1930, 59 primary schools and 3 colleges, all maintained by the Government, with 316 teachers and 10,922 pupils. Local revenue and expenditure (budget, 1931) 2,890,320 rupees. The principal crops are paddy, rice, manioc, ground-nuts. On December 31, 1930, there were 57,109 cattle, 27,806 sheep, and 33,227 goats. There are at Pondichéry 3 cotton mills, and at Chandernagor 1 jute mill; the cotton mills have, in all, 1,335 looms and 72,067 spindles, employing 8,245 persons. There are also at work a few oil presses for ground-nuts, and one ice factory. At the ports of Pondichéry, Karikal, Mahé, and Yanaon in 1930, the imports amounted to 184,042,407 francs, and the exports to 219,985,488 francs. At these four ports in 1930, 305 vessels entered and cleared. Railway open, 43 miles, Pondichéry to Villapuram, and Peralam to Karikal. The Banque de l'Indochine has a branch in Pondichéry.

FRENCH INDO-CHINA.

CENTRAL GOVERNMENT.

Governor-General.—Pierre Pasquier (August 22, 1928).

Secretary General.—M. Graffeuil (November 4, 1928).

French Indo-China, with an area of about 285,000 square miles and a population, in 1926, of 20,500,000, of whom 35,000 were European (including military forces), consists of 5 States: the Colony of Cochin-China, the Protectorates of Annam, Cambodia (including the territory around Battambang ceded by Siam in 1907), Tonking and Laos; and Kwang-Chau-Wan, leased from China. The whole country is under a Governor-General, assisted by a Secretary-General, and each of the States has at its head an official bearing the title of Resident-Superior, except in the case of Cochin-China, which, being a direct French Colony while the others are only Protectorates, has a Governor at its head. There is a Grand Council for Economic Affairs and a Government Council for the whole of Indo-China and a Grand Council for Economic Affairs for each of the States.

In Cochin-China justice is administered by French magistrates for both Europeans and natives, but in the Protectorates there are native tribunals for matters affecting natives, and French courts for matters affecting Europeans. From the native tribunals there is an appeal to courts at Saigon and Hanoi. In these appeal courts European judges, in matters affecting natives, are assisted by Annamite mandarins.

There is a common budget for the whole of Indo-China, and also a separate budget for each of the States. The Provinces have also their budget, as have the municipalities. The general budget is supported by receipts from customs, Government monopolies, indirect contributions, posts, telegraphs, and railways in all the countries of the union, and besides maintaining these, provides for military and judicial services, public works, and other matters relating to the whole of the union. For 1931 the revenue and expenditure of the general budget balanced at 108,000,000 piastres. The outstanding debt of Indo-China on January 1, 1930, amounted to 353,000,000 francs and 6,600,000 piastres.

The military force consists of two divisions and an independent brigade. The naval force comprises 3 sloops, 2 gun-boats, and 3 surveying vessels.

Indo-China is divided into three main economic areas:—(1) The territory tributary to Saigon (Cochin-China, Cambodia, Southern Laos, and Annam South of Cape Varella), which, apart from the fisheries on the Coast and the interior lakes, is almost entirely agricultural, being one of the great rice regions of the world. (2) The region tributary to Haifong (Tonking and the three northern districts of Annam), which is devoted to agriculture, mining and manufacture. (3) Central Annam (the region between Poite d'Annam and Cape Varella), with Tourane as the principal port, which is mainly agricultural, but is not a great rice-growing district; its main exports are cinnamon, sugar and tea. The minerals of Indo-China are coal, phosphates, zinc, tin, wolfram, chrome, graphite and lead.

In 1887, the French possessions in Indo-China, including Annam, Tonking, Cochin-China and Cambodia, were united into a Customs Union. In 1931, the total imports amounted to 1,292,000,000 francs, and exports to 1,148,000,000 francs. The chief export is rice, 1,472,000 tons in 1929, and 1,121,000 tons in 1930. Other exports are rubber, fish, coal, pepper, cattle and hides, corn, zinc and tin ore. The principal imports are cotton and silk tissues, metal goods, kerosene and motor cars.

In 1931, the imports into Great Britain from Indo-China amounted to 167,357*l.*, and the exports from Great Britain, 199,240*l.*; re-exports to Indo-China from U.K. were 3,218*l.*

There are 5,152 miles of colonial routes and 10,222 miles of local roads (December 31, 1930).

The principal railways are from Saigon to Mytho (43½ miles); from Hanoi to Nacham (111 miles); from Hanoi to Tourane (497 miles); from Saigon to Khanh-Hoa (264 miles); from Haiphong to Yunanfou (534 miles); and from Tourcham to Dalat (38½ miles). Total length of line, two-thirds Government, at end of 1928, 1,488 miles. There were 419 principal post offices and more than 700 rural post offices (1930).

In 1929 there were 5,136 kilometres of telephone lines in Indo-China, and 31,774 kilometres of wire. The number of calls made was 9,550,000, the number of subscribers 6,939. There is a radio-telephonic service to Europe from Saigon and from Phnom Penh.

According to a decree of May 31, 1930, the piastre was legally established on a gold basis, the rate of stabilisation being 10 francs = 1 piastre. The piastre will have a gold content of 655 milligrams (10·0308 grains) of fine gold and will be 900 fine.

The silver piastres still in circulation continue, provisionally, to be of legal tender. A decree of August 12, 1930, authorised a new silver currency, weighing 20 grammes, 900 fine. The Governor-General will fix the conditions under which the old piastre coins will be withdrawn from circulation, and also, when the occasion arises, the details of the issue of the new token coins.

The Bank of Indo-China has the monopoly of note issue in Indo-China. This privilege was renewed for a period of 25 years by the law of March 1931. Its capital is 120,000,000 francs. Notes in circulation, December 31, 1931, 102,000,000 piastres.

The chief culture is rice, to which 5,382,964 acres were devoted in 1929. The production of rice in 1929 was 2,164,249 metric tons, or about 36 per cent. of the total crop of the whole of Indo-China. Other crops are maize, beans, sweet potatoes, earth-nuts, cotton, rubber, sugar-cane, tobacco, coffee, coco-nuts, betel-nuts, pepper, oranges, bananas, etc. The farm animals in 1929, comprised 10,701 horses, 422,921 buffaloes, 576,546 pigs, 3,197 sheep and goats.

River and coast fishing is actively carried on; the fishery products are valued at 3,000,000 francs yearly. There are 19 rice mills in Saigon and Cholon, turning out 3,780 tons of rice a day. In these towns are also 4 saw-mills, 6 soap factories, and a varnish factory. Commerce is mostly in the hands of Europeans and Chinese, but about 22,000 Annamites are small traders. The chief exports in 1929 were rice (1,242,532 metric tons), fish (29,928 metric tons), fat and fish oil (2,936 metric tons), pepper (4,096 metric tons), cotton (1,078 metric tons), copra (12,514 metric tons), silk (32,191 kilograms), shrimps (1,234 metric tons), isinglass (32 metric tons), hides (1,936 metric tons), cardamoms (122 metric tons). The cultivation of rubber is increasing. In 1928, exports amounted to 9,698 metric tons, and in 1929, 10,166 metric tons. During 1930, 364 steamers of 1,551,000 tons entered at the port of Saigon. The vessels of the Messageries-Maritimes and of the Chargeurs-Réunis Companies visit Saigon regularly. There is also constant communication with Hong Kong and Singapore by British vessels. (For railways see Indo-China.) At Saigon there are 7 banks or bank-agencies. The total exports in 1929 amounted to 2,426,842,000 francs, and imports to 2,301,020,000 francs.

In 1929, the local budget balanced at 22,513,626 piastres.

Annam.

French intervention in the affairs of Annam, which began as early as 1787 was terminated by a treaty, signed on June 6, 1884, and ratified at Hué on February 23, 1886, by which a French protectorate has been established over Annam. The King Bao-Dai succeeded to the throne on November 6, 1925. During his minority, the Government is in the hands of a Regency Council. The King governs the country, assisted by a Council of Ministers, in accordance with the wishes of the French Government, represented by a Resident Supérieur. A Chamber of representatives of the people was established in 1926. The ports of Tourane and Qui-Nhon are opened to European commerce, and the customs revenue conceded to France; French troops occupy part of the citadel (called Mang-Ca) of Hué, the capital (population in 1931, 31,885). Province of Binh-Dinh had 557,126 inhabitants in 1931. Annamite functionaries, under the control of the French Government, administer all the internal affairs of Annam. The area of the protectorate is about 39,758 square miles, with a population in 1930, of 4,820,000. There were 3,569 Europeans, 526,138 Moïs, 9,800 Chinese, and 256 Japanese and Indians. The population is Annamite in the towns and along the coast, and consists of various tribes of Moïs in the hilly tracts. At the end of 1920 the official schools of Annam were reorganised and placed under the direct control of the French Protectorate. There were in 1931, 766 preparatory schools with 32,102 pupils; 128 elementary schools with 10,814 pupils; 57 secondary schools with 14,383 pupils; one higher secondary school for boys at Hué, with 623 pupils, one at Vinh with 147 pupils and one at Quinhon with 399 pupils; one higher secondary school for native girls at Đông-Khanh with 502 pupils; one professional school with 273 pupils; one normal school for boys, and one for girls, both at Hué. Local budget, 1931, balanced at 18,417,000 piastres. The Phanrang river has been utilised to irrigate about 10,000 acres, and similar works, on a smaller scale, have been carried out in Central Annam. Rice is the most important product. Others are cotton, maize, and other cereals, the areca nut, mulberry, cinnamon, tobacco, sugar, betel, manioc, bamboo; excellent timber abounds, also caoutchouc, cardamoms, coffee, dye, and medicinal plants. Raw silk is produced. There are about 804,000 head of cattle in Annam, and cattle rearing is of some importance. There are copper, zinc, and gold in the province of Quang-nam; the mines are worked by natives. An important seam of haematite iron is worked about 9 kilometres from Thanhhoa. At Nongson, near Tourane, coal mines are worked. In North, Central, and Southern Annam there are salt works. Imports in 1930, 53,924,599 francs; exports, 36,971,184 francs. The chief imports are cotton-yarn, cottons, tea, petroleum, paper goods, and tobacco; chief exports, sugar, rice, cotton and silk tissues, cinnamon, tea, and paper. In 1930, 229 French ships of 920,762 tons, 27 Chinese of 23,235 tons, and 13 ships (29,206 tons) of other nationalities cleared the port of Tourane, the total tonnage being 973,303 tons. The number of native junks entering the port were 3,703, of a tonnage of 24,540.

Cambodia.

Cambodia is bounded on the south by Cochin-China, on the east by Annam, on the north by Laos and Siam, on the west by Siam, and on the south-west by the Gulf of Siam.

Area, 67,550 square miles; population according to the census of 1929: 2,602,914, of whom 2,201 were Europeans (excluding the military forces), 157,668 Annamites, 144,550 Chinese, 2,291,741 Cambodians, Sino-Cambodians, Malaysians, and Laotians, and 6,645 of various races. The present King, Sisowathmonivong, succeeded his late father, Sisowath, on August 9, 1927, and was crowned on July 22, 1928. The country is divided into 14 provinces. The four chief towns are Phnôm-Penh (population 80,712), the capital of the territory, located at the crossing of Tonlé-Sap and Mékong rivers, Battambang, 180 miles further north-west, Kampot (92 miles from the capital), a seaport on the Gulf of Siam, but not accessible for sea-going vessels, and Kompong-Oham. The budget for 1931 balanced at 11,484,020 piastres, including a sum of 728,000 piastres allowed for the civil list of the king and princes. There are (1931) 808 French schools, besides one college and one professional school, and a school of Applied Arts. Total number of pupils in attendance was (1931) 15,368 Cambodian, Annamite and Chinese.

The soil is fertile, but only a part of it is under cultivation (2,150,000 acres) owing to shortage of labour. The chief product of Cambodia is rice which is exported by way of Cholon where the rice is milled, and Saigon where it is shipped. Amongst the other products are tobacco, kapok, cotton, pepper, indigo, coffee, palm sugar and rubber and silk. Pepper is especially grown in the country of Kampot, the production in 1928 was 3,500 metric tons. Cotton growing is extending; the production of ginned cotton is estimated at 1,500 tons, the whole of which is exported. Cattle breeding is a flourishing native industry, especially between Phnôm-Penh and Manila. Other native industries are: weaving of silk and cotton, pottery and making of rush mats. There is a cotton-ginning mill at Ksach-Kandal, and another at Chhak-Augré, both near Phnôm-Penh, a silk factory, several iron foundries, rice-mills, and saw-mills at Phnôm-Penh, but not very important. Valuable forests cover an area of about 10,000,000 acres. Iron ore, limestone, phosphate and sapphire are the principal minerals, but not worked very extensively. The overflow of the Mekong river fills up the Great Lake, which occupies the middle of Western Cambodia. With the low-water season the lake slowly empties and leaves innumerable ponds on the ground it covered during the high-water season. These ponds are filled with an enormous quantity of fish suitable for salting and smoking. This is the principal native industry. The external trade is carried on mostly through Saigon in Cochin-China. Imports in 1930: 37,413,831 francs; exports, 13,952,142 francs. The imports comprise salt, wine, textiles, chemicals; the exports comprise rice, salted fish, pepper, maize, cotton, tobacco, fish-oil, palm-sugar, sticklac, kapok, wood, resin, hides, and cattle. This last trade is carried between Phnôm-Penh and Manila.

Cambodia possesses two little sea-harbours, Kep and Réam, both on the Gulf of Siam and connected to Bangkok and Saigon by the steamers of the 'Siam Steam Navigation Company,' and the 'Sté. des Affréteurs Indochinois.' Total tonnage of the different little steamers and junks that enter and clear out the different ports of Cambodia is about 1,000,000 metric tons per year. The Mékong and the Great Lake, with their affluents, give a total of 875 miles of waterways, of which about 370 are not navigable to launches during the low-water season. River-steamers easily reach Phnôm-Penh, which has good quays and embankments.

Cambodia possessed in 1930, 1,430 miles of good metalled roads and nearly 188 miles of unmetalled roads and 50 miles of roads in course of construction. The chief roads are from Saigon to the Siamese frontier, via Phnôm-Penh and Battambang, from Phnôm-Penh to the Gulf of Siam, and Mount Bokor (hill-station), from Saigon to Kratié, and from Phnôm-Penh to Angkor via Kompong-Thom. A railway is in course of construction between Phnôm-Penh and Battambang.

Of all the countries of the Far East, Cambodia is among the richest in ancient monuments. The ruins of Angkor are specially famous.

Tonking.

This territory, brought under France's protectorate in 1884, has an area of 40,530 square miles, and is divided into 23 provinces, and 4 military territories, with 10,885 villages and a population in 1930 of 8,182,962, of whom 10,155 were Europeans (exclusive of military forces). The King of Annam was formerly represented in Tonking by a viceroy, but, in July, 1897, he consented to the suppression of the vicerealty and the creation of a French residency in its place. Chief town Hanoi, a fine and large modern town, with a population of about 135,000 in 1930. This town on January 1, 1902, became the capital of Indo-China, instead of Saigon. In 1931, there were 13 native primary schools (6,000 pupils), 2 native normal colleges (439 students), 1 native college (720 students), 1 school of applied arts (208 students), 1 French primary school for girls (209 pupils), 2 French High Schools (588 pupils), and 1 French Lycée (600 pupils). The University of Indo-China was organised in 1917, and contains 10 faculties. There were in 1930, 515 students. The local budget for 1931 balanced at 12,833,810 piastres. The chief crop is rice (total exports 1930, 63,764 tons), exported mostly to Hong Kong. Other products are maize, arrow-root, sugar-cane, coffee, tea, various fruit trees, and tobacco. A large quantity of raw silk is produced annually, most of which is used in native weaving and the remainder exported. There are rich limestone quarries, calamine and tin mines, and also rich hard coal beds.

Imports in 1930, 595,260,204 piastres; exports, 299,120,596 piastres.

Chief imports are metal tools and machinery, yarn and tissues, beverages; chief exports, rice, maize, and animal products. The principal port is Haiphong, which is visited regularly by the steamers of three French lines.

---

The Laos territory, under French protectorate since 1893, is estimated to contain 103,000 square miles; there are now nearly one million inhabitants. The capital is Vientiane. In the country there is a protected state, Luang Prabang, which has a capital of the same name, the residence of the King, who is assisted in his government by a French Administrator. The soil is fertile, producing rice (average output about 500,000 tons annually), cotton, indigo, tobacco and fruits, and bearing teak forests, from which the logs are now floated down the Mekong to Saigon. Gold, tin, lead and precious stones are found, and concessions have been granted to several French mining companies. It can be entered by the Mekong, which is barred at Khone by rapids, and by two new roads from Vinh to Thakhek and from Quang Tri to Savannakhet. A new road following the Mekong connects Thakek to Paksé, and thence to Saigon. A railway, four miles in length, has been constructed across Khone island, and by means of it several steam launches have been transported to the upper waters, where they now ply. Motor launches ply between Vientiane, Luang Prabang and Homi Sai. A telegraph line connects Hué in Annam with the towns on the Mekong, and these with Saigon and Hanoi. The local budget for 1931 balanced at 4,416,800 piastres.

---

In 1900, the territory of Kwang Chau Wan on the coast of China, leased from China in 1898, and increased in 1899, by the addition of 2 islands in the bay, was placed under the authority of the Governor-General of Indo-China. The territory has been divided into 3 administrative circumscriptions, including 1 Municipality, Tchekham, a commercial centre, but the Chinese organisation is maintained. Fort-Bayard is the seat of the local Administration. Its area is about 190 square miles and its population 250,000. The imports are chiefly cotton yarns, petroleum, matches, refined sugar, cunao (for tinctorial purposes); the exports are straw sacks, swine, cattle, brown sugar, and ground-nuts. Imports in 1930, 9,068,484 piastres; exports, 7,257,060 piastres. The port is free. The territory is regularly visited by the vessels of French, Portuguese, Chinese and English companies; in 1929, 253 vessels of 221,000 tons entered. The local budget for 1930 balanced at 717,000 piastres.

MANDATED TERRITORY IN ASIA: SYRIA AND LEBANON.

Syria, formerly a province of Turkey-in-Asia, has been recognised as an independent State to be placed under a Mandatory Power. By decision of the Supreme Council of the Allied Powers at San Remo (April 25, 1920), France has been assigned the Mandate for Syria, which was confirmed by the League of Nations on July 24, 1922 (Declaration of London).

High Commissioner.—M. Henri Ponsot (October 12, 1926).

Area and Population.—The territory under the French Mandate is bounded by the Mediterranean on the west, by Palestine on the south, by Iraq on the east, and by Turkey on the north.

For details of the frontier between Syria and Iraq and Palestine, see the STATESMAN'S YEAR BOOK, 1928, p. 893. The frontier between Syria and Turkey (Nisibin-Jeziret ibn Omar), was settled by the Franco-Turkish agreement of June 22, 1929.

The country was originally organised into 5 territories (états), but since January 1, 1925, two of these, viz. Damascus and Aleppo, were united to form the single State, now the Republic of Syria (Sanjaks of Hama, Homs, Damascus, Hauran, Aleppo, Alexandretta and Deir ez Zor). The remaining territories are those of Latakia, formerly the Alawiyya (Sanjaks of Latakia and Tartus); of Lebanon (Sanjaks of North Lebanon, Mount Lebanon, South Lebanon and Bekaa); of Jebel Druze (south of Hauran). The autonomous Sanjak of Alexandretta, set up January 1, 1925, is part of the Syrian Republic.

THE SYRIAN REPUBLIC.—The Constitution of May 14, 1930, provides for a President, elected by the Legislature for 5 years; the Legislature itself, which consists of 69 members, is elected for 4 years. The first general election, which is in two degrees, was held in December, 1931, and January, 1932. The capital is Damascus. The present Head of the Syrian State is Jemil Beg Ulchi, and the Prime Minister is Sheikh Taj-ed-Din Effendi.

THE LEBANESE REPUBLIC, or Greater Lebanon, was proclaimed a State on September 1, 1920. It has the following frontiers :—North, the Nahr-el-Kebir; south, the frontier of Palestine; west, the coast; and east, the heights of Anti-Lebanon. Beirut is the seat of the Government. M. Charles Debbas is President of the Republic, and Adib Pasha is the Prime Minister.

THE GOVERNMENT OF LATAKIA was established under that name on May 14, 1930. Capital, Latakia.

THE GOVERNMENT OF JEBEL DRUZE has its seat at El Suweideh.

The total area subject to the French Mandate may be estimated at 60,000 square miles. The total population of this area in 1929 was 2,831,622. The population of the 4 territories was as follows :—Syria, 1,696,638; Lebanon, 862,618 (of whom 342,388 were Christians and 292,247 Moslems); Latakia, 286,920; and Jebel Druze, 51,780. The bulk of the population of the area subject to the French mandate is of Arab origin, and Arabic is the prevailing language, with many dialectical varieties. But there is a large influx of foreign elements, including Turks, Turkomans, Kurds, Circassians, Armenians, Persians, Jews, and a certain number of Europeans. The principal towns are Damascus, population 193,912; Aleppo, 177,313; Beirut, 134,655; Homs, 52,792; Hama, 39,960; Tripolis, 37,260; Antioch, 28,000; Latakia, 21,404; Alexandretta, 13,997; and Zahlah in Lebanon, 20,985. There are no statistics of births and deaths.

Religion and Education.—The population is composed mainly of Moslems, of whom there are 1,514,755. The majority are Sunni Moslems (1,075,816). The Druses number about 86,125, the Alawiyya 227,930, and Ismailians 14,882. There have been Christians in Syria since the earliest times. They number at present 505,419, of whom 186,676 are Maronites, 66,762 Greek Catholics (Uniat), 7,805 Armenian Catholics (Uniat), 32,859 Armenians, 8,887 Protestants, 28,885 Melkites, and 151,326 belong to the Orthodox Church. There are also 16,526 Jews. There are now one Orthodox, one Gregorian Armenian, one Latin, and three Uniat Patriarchs (Melkite, Syrian, and Maronite) of Antioch, none of whom reside in that city. Apart from this there are in French Mandated territory 9 Orthodox Dioceses, one Armenian Uniat Archbishop, six Melkite (Uniat) Archbishops and six Bishops, three Syrian (Uniat) Archbishops, five Maronite (Uniat) Archbishops and four Bishops, one Latin Apostolic Delegate, a Grand Mufti and a Grand Rabbi.

There were in the whole of the mandated territory in 1930, 649 public schools with 59,773 pupils, 1,042 private schools with 74,220 pupils, and 584 foreign schools with 54,452 pupils.

At Damascus there is a Syrian university (founded June 15, 1923), with (in 1930) a faculty of medicine (134 students), a faculty of law (189 students), pharmacy (12 students), dentistry (30 students), and arts (106 students). There is also an Arab High School, founded and maintained by the High Commissioner, and also agricultural colleges at Sélémié and Bekaa. There is a school of arts and crafts at Beirut (95 pupils).

There are also two universities in Beirut, one French and one American. The American university contains a faculty of medicine and several schools, with 1,178 students, of whom 468 were Moslems, 24 Druses, 25 Bahairtes, 584 Christians, and 77 Jews. The French university has a faculty of medicine with 450 students, and several schools.

Finance.—The revenue and expenditure for four years were as follows in Syrian pounds (Syrian pound = Francs 20):—

	1928	1929	1930	1931 <sup>1</sup>
	Syrian Pounds	Syrian Pounds	Syrian Pounds	Syrian Pounds

The Budget for 1930 was distributed as follows in Syrian pounds, paper:—

	Receipts	Expenditure	Surplus
	Syrian Pounds	Syrian Pounds	Syrian Pounds
Syrian Republic . . .	10,545,952	8,957,632	1,588,320

Defence.—A French army is in occupation of the whole country. On January 1, 1931, the effective strength was 299 officers (141 French) and 13,411 other ranks (293 French).

Production and Industry.—Syria is essentially an agricultural country, the bulk of the population being engaged in the cultivation of the soil and in cattle breeding; the total area under crops in 1931 was 2,569,000 hectares. The principal products in 1930 were: wheat, 527,300 metric tons; barley, 480,500 metric tons; maize, 43,200 metric tons; olives, 39,286 metric tons; silk cocoons, 3,575 metric tons (3,460 in 1929); and cotton, 2,230 metric tons. Sesamé, from which oil is produced, is one of the most valued crops, but is very uncertain. Chickpeas, lentils, beans, vetches, and lupins are largely cultivated, the annual crop of chickpeas being estimated at 50,000 tons. About 10,000 acres in Latakia, Aleppo, Beirut, and Damascus produced 3,180 metric tons of tobacco in 1930. The cultivation of cotton has been considerably extended during the last two years. The chief cotton-growing centre is the Aleppo district. In 1930 the total area under cotton was 76,000 acres. Hemp and sugar-cane are also cultivated. The most important fruit trees are the olive, vine, mulberry, lemon, banana, and orange. In 1930, there were about 188,000 acres under olive trees, against 187,500 in 1929. The yield of olive oil in 1930 was 160,000 metric quintals. There were also produced 36,300 tons of apricots and 150,000 tons of grapes. The white mulberry is largely cultivated in Northern Syria for feeding silk-worms. Sheep-raising is also of importance.

Syria is poorer in minerals than in other resources, but this may be due to insufficient exploration. Northern Lebanon has been worked for iron in ancient and modern times. At Majerba the ore is rich, and the iron good. There is a comparatively rich mine of lignite in South Lebanon. There are indications of petroleum in various places, but the attempts to work it so far have not been successful. There are indications of phosphates, lead, copper, antimony, nickel, chrome; gypsum is widely distributed. There is abundance of marble and good building stone.

The industries of Syria are on a very small scale. Flour, oil, soap, and silk thread are the most important. In 1929, 3,460 metric tons of cocoons were produced. The chief centres of the silk industry are Beirut, Aleppo, Tripoli, and Latakia. There were 90 spinning factories in 1927. Wine and tobacco are also produced.

Commerce.—The imports and exports for four years (in thousands of Syrian pounds, paper) were as follows:—

	1927	1928	1929	1930
	1,000 Syrian pounds	1,000 Syrian pounds	1,000 Syrian pounds	1,000 Syrian pounds
Imports .	64,559	66,002	72,998	63,526
Exports .	27,387	26,741	25,506	22,664

The principal imports in 1930 were (in thousands of Syrian pounds paper):—cotton goods, 10,553; woollen goods, 6,481; iron and steel, 3,763; animal produce, 2,962; colonial produce, 3,570; chemicals and allied products, 2,090. Principal exports were:—animal produce, 5,037; fruit, vegetables, etc., 2,739; cotton goods, 2,261.

The distribution of trade in 1930 was as follows (in thousands Syrian paper pounds):—Imports from France, 9,721; Great Britain, 7,147; United States, 4,601; Italy, 5,308; Turkey, 4,963. Exports to Egypt, 4,618; France, 4,382; Palestine, 4,099; Italy, 1,421.

According to Board of Trade Returns the imports from Syria into Great Britain amounted to 249,830*l.* in 1930, and 225,675*l.* in 1931, while the exports to Syria amounted to 1,086,068*l.* in 1930, and 1,019,239*l.* in 1931. Re-exports to Syria from U.K. were 26,837*l.* in 1930, and 26,452*l.* in 1931.

Communications.—Most of the ports of Syria are visited regularly by the steamers of various shipping companies. In 1930, 1,812 vessels of 3,684,056 tons entered the ports of Lebanon and Syria. Beirut was the principal port of call.

In 1927, there were 2,240 miles of macadam roads and 2,754 miles of dirt and gravel roads. Syria is comparatively well provided with railways, and new lines and branches are proposed. The following railways were open in 1930:—standard gauge from Rayak to Aleppo and Rajn (Turkish frontier) 260 miles; Homs to Tripolis, 64 miles; narrow gauge Beirut to Damascus, 93 miles; Beirut to Mameltein, 11 miles; Damascus to El Hammé, 120 miles. Three companies operate passenger routes across the Syrian Desert between Beirut and Baghdad. An air mail service between Beirut and Marseilles has been in operation since June, 1929.

Currency.—The official currency as from May 1, 1920, is the Syrian Bank Note, issued by the Bank of Syria, under French Treasury control. The monetary unit is the Syrian pound, divided into 100 piastres (1 piastre = 20 centimes), which are exchangeable in Paris at the fixed rate of 20 francs to the pound. On December 31, 1930, the notes in circulation amounted to 11,700,000*l.* (Syrian). In some parts of the country the Turkish pre-war mejidihs are still current.

There is a Consul-General at Beirut, and Consuls at Aleppo and Damascus.

ALGERIA.

(L'ALGÉRIE.)

Government.

The government and administration of Algeria are centralised at Algiers under the authority of the Governor-General, who represents the Government of the Republic throughout Algerian territory. With the exception of the non-Mussulman services of Justice, Public Instruction, Worship, and the Treasury, which are under the appropriate ministries in Paris, all the services are under his direction. He has to prepare a special budget for Algeria, he grants concessions for works, and he contracts loans in the name of the Colony.

The budget of Algeria which, since 1901, has been entirely distinct from that of France, comprises under revenue the imposts of every sort which are collected within the Colony and under expenditure the whole of the civil disbursements. The expenditure on War and Marine is still at the cost of the mother country. The budget, prepared by the Governor under the control of the Minister of the Interior, is discussed and voted by the Financial Delegations and the Superior Council. These Delegations were instituted in 1898 to enable the body of tax-payers to state their views on questions of imposts by means of elected delegates. There are three Delegations representing respectively the French colonists, the French tax-payers other than colonists, and the Mussulman natives. The Superior Council is composed of elected members and of high officials. Lastly, the Governor is assisted in the exercise of his functions by a purely consultative council of government.

The territories of the South, forming a separate colony, are each under a military command which directs all the administrative and civil services under the authority of the Governor. They have a budget distinct from that of Algeria. The natives are represented on the communal administration. By the law of February 4, 1919, the position of French citizens is accorded to natives, above the age of 25 and monogamous, who served in the war, who are proprietors or farmers, who can read or write or hold a French decoration.

The French Chambers alone have the right of legislating for Algeria, while such matters as do not come within the legislative power are regulated by decree of the President of the Republic. Each department sends one senator and, since 1923, three deputies to the National Assembly.

Governor-General.—M. Jules Carde, appointed October 3, 1930.

Area and Population.

The census of March 8, 1931, which is the last taken, showed a population (including the military forces) amounting to 6,553,451 (of whom 920,788 were Europeans, 5,632,663 natives), on an area of 847,500 sq. miles. The colony has been organised in 2 great divisions called respectively Northern (80,117 sq. miles) and Southern Algeria (767,435 sq. miles). Northern Algeria consists as formerly of Civil Territory and Territoire de Commandement, but the Civil Territory has been extended, while the Territoire de Commandement has been diminished and will before long be completely merged in the Civil Territory. Northern Algeria contains 17 arrondissements, 304 communes, and 78 mixed communes, in the Civil Territory. Southern Algeria consists of the 4 Territories of Ain-Sefra, Ghardaïa, Touggourt, and the Saharan Oases, organised under decree of August 14, 1905. These territories contain 13 communes, of which 7 are mixed and 6 native.

Religion and Education.

The native population is entirely Mussulman, the Jews being now regarded as French citizens. The Roman Catholic Church has an archbishop and 2 bishops, with some 400 officiating clergymen. There are 13 Protestant pastors and 6 Jewish rabbis sharing in Government grants.

At Algiers (city) there is a University, attended (July 31, 1930) by 2,010 students (858 for Law, 549 Medicine and Pharmacy, 272 Science, 335 Arts). There are also special schools for commerce, the fine arts, hydrography, and agriculture. In 1930 there were also 570 Mussulman schools with 52,498 pupils (544 for boys, 48,715 pupils; and 26 for girls, 3,783 pupils). There are higher Mussulman schools (medersas) at Algiers, Tlemçen, and Constantine, with 143 students (1930) (120 Arabs, 23 Kabyles). There were, on May 1, 1930, 11 establishments for secondary education for boys with 6,752 pupils (5,882 French, 783 natives and 87 foreigners) and 6 establishments for girls with 2,614 pupils (2,467 French, 68 natives and 79 foreigners). In 1930 there were 1,283 primary and infant schools, public and private, with 124,816 pupils (64,396 boys and 60,420 girls). There were (1930) two normal schools for men teachers with 30 professors and 257 students, and three normal schools for women teachers with 25 professors and 242 students.

Justice and Crime.

There is an Appeal Court at Algiers, and in the arrondissements are 17 courts of first instance. There are also commercial courts and justices of the peace with extensive powers. Criminal justice is organised as in France for Europeans. Since 1902, there have been criminal courts and special repressive tribunals for trying natives accused of crime.

Mussulman justice is administered to natives by Justices of the Peace and Cadis in the first instance with an appeal to French courts.

Finance.

Europeans and natives pay the same direct and indirect taxes. The departments of War and Marine are excluded from the estimates, but the proceeds of the Military tax, the Government monopolies, and some other revenues are paid to France. The total expenditure (including military and extraordinary disbursements) exceeds the Algerian revenue by about 75,000,000 francs.

The budget estimates for five years were as follows (in francs) :—

Defence.

The military force in Algeria and Tunis comprises the XIXth Army Corps, which includes 3 divisions. French residents are under the same obligation to serve as in France; natives are under the obligation to serve 3 years with the colours and can be called up as reservists in case of mobilisation. The troops may be stationed in North Africa or employed on Colonial expeditions, but they belong to the 'Metropolitan,' not to the Colonial Army. There are 6 regiments of zouaves, each of 3 battalions, of 5 companies; 6 regiments of cavalry (Chasseurs d'Afrique), of several squadrons; 3 groups of field and 1 of heavy artillery; 1 battalion of engineers; and 1 regiment of the Flying Corps. These are all European troops, and in the case of the artillery and engineers their recruiting depôts are in France. The Foreign Legion of 4 regiments of a varying number of battalions is recruited from foreigners of any nationality, but officered chiefly by Frenchmen; the headquarters of the regiments is in Sidi-Bel-Abbes, in Oran, but battalions are sent to any colony where they may be required. The Natives are 12 regiments of Algerian Tirailleurs each of 3 battalions, and 6 regiments of Spahis (Arab cavalry) each of several squadrons. The officers and a proportion of the non-commissioned officers of the native regiments are French. In 1931, the strength of the garrison of Algeria and of Tunis was 2,935 officers and 68,541 men.

Agriculture and Industry.

There exists in Algeria a small area of highly fertile plains and valleys in the neighbourhood of the coast, mainly owned by Europeans, which is cultivated scientifically, and where profitable returns are obtained from vineyards, cereals, &c., but the greater part of Algeria is of limited value for agricultural purposes. The northern portion is mountainous and generally better adapted to grazing and forestry than agriculture, and a large portion of the native population is quite poor. In spite of the many excellent roads built by the Government, a considerable area of the mountainous region is without adequate means of communication and is accessible only with difficulty.

The soil is, under various systems, held by proprietors, by farmers, and by métayers or khammés. Most of the State lands have been appropriated to colonists. The chief crops in 1930 were wheat, 3,990,766 acres with a yield of 877,987 metric tons; barley 3,587,568 acres with a yield of 819,308 metric tons; and oats, 634,093 acres with a yield of 240,383 metric tons; maize, potatoes, artichokes, beans, peas and tomatoes. Flax, silk, and tobacco (the cultivation of the latter being most remunerative) are also produced. In 1930 there were 17,450 tobacco planters, the area under cultivation was 57,348 acres, and the yield 19,821 metric tons. Sericulture is in an experimental stage and subsidised by the government. There were 326 growers in 1926, 186 in 1927, and 104 in 1929. In 1929, 6,142 pounds of cocoons were produced as against 16,160 in 1928.

In 1930, the yield of wine was 299,201,914 gallons from an area of 670,298 acres. Date, banana, pomegranate, almond, fig, and many other fruits grow abundantly. The production of olive oil amounted to 5,071,484 gallons. The area under cotton in 1930 was 11,332 acres. Yield in 1930 was 38,572 quintals. State forests (1930), 5,391,165 acres, and, for the most part, belong to the State and communes. The greater part is mere brushwood, but on 1,099,150 acres are cork-oak trees, 1,691,950 acres Aleppo pine, 1,627,730 acres evergreen oak, and 97,812 acres cedar. The dwarf-palm and alfa are worked on the plains. Timber is cut for firewood, also for industrial purposes, for railway sleepers, telegraph poles, &c., and for bark for tanning. Considerable portions of the forest area are also leased for tillage, or for pasture for cattle, sheep, or pigs. The forest revenue in 1929 was 40,894,757 francs.

On December 31, 1928, there were in Algeria 164,000 horses, 164,000 mules, 279,000 asses, 887,000 cattle, 5,614,000 sheep, 2,920,000 goats, 89,000 pigs, and 173,000 camels. The wool-clip in 1928 was 166,800,000 metric quintals.

There are extensive fisheries for sardines, allaches, anchovies, sprats, tunny-fish, &c., and also shell-fish. In 1930, 1,043 boats of 4,765 metric tons, and 4,176 persons were employed in fishing, and the quantity of fish taken amounted to 20,228,738 kilos. The yield of coral and sponges, 242 kilos.

Algeria possesses deposits of iron, zinc, lead, mercury, copper and antimony. The mineral output in 1930 was as follows: iron ore, 2,240,000 metric tons; lead, 12,790 metric tons; zinc, 16,940 metric tons; phosphate rock, 846,686 metric tons. Kaolin, marble and onyx, salt, coal, and antimony are also found.

TUNIS.

(AFRIKIYA; TUNISIE.)

Government.—Sidi Ahmed Bey, born 1862, succeeded his cousin, Sidi Mohamed el Habib Bey, July 10, 1929.

The reigning family of Tunis, occupants of the throne since 1705, descend from Hussein ben Ali, commonly believed to be a native of the Isle of Crete, who made himself master of the country, acknowledging, however, the suzerainty of the Sultan of Turkey.

After the French invasion of the country in the spring of 1881, the treaty of Kasr-es-Said (May 12, 1881), confirmed by convention signed June 8, 1883, placed Tunis under the protectorate of France. The government is carried on under the direction of the French Foreign Office, which has a special department for Tunisian affairs, under the control of a French Minister Resident-General, who is also Minister of Foreign Affairs, and a ministry of 11 heads of departments, 8 of the ministers being French and 3 Tunisian. The country is divided into 19 districts (contrôles civils), and 6 military circles; the district governors (contrôleurs) are French; the subordinate officials (Caida, Kahias and Sheiks) are Native. French tribunals administer justice between subjects of European powers, and also between them and natives; there are Native courts for cases between natives (tribunaux at Ouzara and Charaâ). In 1914, the Tunisian penal law was codified. French administration in Tunis has been confirmed by conventions with all the European Powers regulating the status and the conditions of trade of their respective citizens within the Regency.

French Resident-General.—M. Manceron (appointed January 2, 1929).

Area and Population.—The present boundaries are: on the north and east the Mediterranean Sea, on the west the Algerian province of Constantine, and on the south the great desert of the Sahara and Libya. The area is about 48,300 English square miles, including that portion of the Sahara which is to the east of the Djerid, extending towards Gadamés.

According to the census held on March 22, 1931, the total European population was 195,293, composed of 91,427 French (exclusive of the army of occupation and of the navy), 91,178 Italians, 8,643 Maltese, 449 Spaniards, 463 Greeks, and 3,133 other foreigners. The total native population, according to the census held on March 22, 1931, was 2,215,399, of whom 2,159,151 were Arabs and Bedouins, and 56,242 Jews. Grand total was 2,410,692.

The capital, the city of Tunis, had, in 1931, a population of 202,405, of whom 89,801 were Moslems, and 25,399 Jews, besides 33,649 French, 46,457 Italians, 5,529 Maltese, and 1,570 other Europeans. By means of the channel, which was opened in 1893, Tunis is directly accessible to ocean-going vessels. Other towns are Bizerta with 23,206 inhabitants (7,971 Europeans); Sousse with 25,324; Sfax with 39,969; Kaisouan, the Holy City of the Moslems, with 21,532 natives exclusively; Ferryville with 6,123 (5,227 Europeans), and Tindja, 1,655 inhabitants.

The bulk of the population is Mohammedan under the Sheik-ul-Islam, and the revenue from the 'Habus' lands, like that from the 'Wakf' lands in Egypt, is applied to religious, educational, and charitable purposes. There are about 195,000 Roman Catholics, under the ministration of the Archbishop of Carthage, and about 125 other clergymen. The Greek Church (400), the French Protestants, and the English Church are also represented, and there are 30 English Protestant missionaries at work.

Education.—Within the Regency there are (1930) some 474 public schools, including 8 lycées and colleges, and 32 private schools (of which 6 Jewish schools are provided for by the Government). In the schools there are 76,752 pupils, of whom 51,545 are boys. Of the total number of pupils, 15,798 are French; 34,946 Mussulman; 8,827 Jews; 8,439 Italian; 1,060 Maltese and 348 others. In the Great Mosque at Tunis there is a Mohammedan university. In the city are 78 and in the interior 1,254 Mussulman primary schools, some of them assisted by Government funds. 24 Moslem apprenticeship-schools have been created during the last few years numbering 490 native pupils. Many private schools have recently sprung up at Tunis and Sfax. The abolition of congregational teaching decreed in France has been extended to the Regency as regards French children. The Italian Government and certain Italian societies still maintain Italian schools at Tunis and other large towns.

Defence.—The army of occupation consists of 25,000 men, including 1,145 officers, supported by native regiments (tirailleurs and spahis), and the Foreign Legion.

Production and Industry.—Tunis may be divided into five districts—the north, characterised by its mountainous formation, having large and fertile valleys (e.g., the valley of the Medjerdah, and the plains of Mornag, Mateur, and Beja); the north-east, with the peninsula of Cap Bon, the soil being specially suited for the cultivation of oranges, lemons, and citrus fruits; the Sahel, where olive trees abound; the centre, the region of high table lands and pastures; and the south, famous for its oases and gardens, where dates grow in profusion. The chief industry is agriculture, and large estates predominate. The area of the country is divided as follows:—7,335,000 acres of tillage land; 2,500,000 acres of cork and pine forest, 99,625 acres of vineyards (the production in 1930 was 22,026,400 gallons); and 11,375,000 acres of stockland. The area of wheat in 1930 was 1,751,897 acres; the production was 283,000 tons; of barley 1,216,250 acres, and the production 120,000 tons; of oats 125,550 acres, and the production 30,000 tons. There were 16,369,690 olive trees; and the production was 65,000 tons of oil. In the south of Tunis date palms abound; there were 2,598,131 date palms, of which 1,327,922 produced 54,746,048 pounds of dates (1930). Other products are almonds, oranges, lemons, shaddocks, pistachios, alfalfa, henna, and cork. Considerable areas of agricultural land have been acquired either on lease or by purchase by immigrants.

In 1930, the farm animals were:—horses, 95,083; asses, 180,153; mules, 43,683; cattle, 502,419; sheep, 2,975,514; goats, 2,004,692; camels, 164,038; pigs, 16,661.

In 1930, 46 mines were worked; value of ore exported (including phosphate) in 1930, 12,160,000*l*. By far the greatest development has been in phosphates, the output of which is increasing yearly. Mineral output in 1931 (in metric tons):—lead, 19,112 (19,400 in 1930); zinc, 800 (1,800); iron, 447,000 (828,000); phosphate rock, 2,148,000 (3,326,000).

Native industries are the spinning and weaving of wool for garments, carpet weaving, leather embroidery, saddle making, the manufacture of slippers, pottery (in ancient style), and matting; tanning and silk weaving are declining.

The fisheries are principally in the hands of Italians and Tunisians. In 1930, 4,042 boats (9,234 tons) were engaged in this industry, with a total of 14,315 men. Sardines, anchovies, allaches, tunny (7,437 tons of fish) were caught.

The Kaffis (of 16 whibas, each of 12 sahs) = 16 bushels.

The principal measure of length is the pik: the pik Arbi for linen = '5392 yd.; the pik Turki for silk = '7058 yd.; the pik Andoulsi for cloth = '7094 yd.

French weights and measures have almost entirely taken the place of those of Tunis, but corn is still sold in kaffis and whibas.

FRENCH EQUATORIAL AFRICA (FRENCH CONGO).

The French Congo extends along the Atlantic coast between Cameroon and the territories of the Belgian Congo, with the exception of the Spanish territory on the coast from the Muni river on 1° N. lat. to Cameroon, and inland to the meridian of 11° 20' E. of Greenwich, and the Kabinda region, which is Portuguese. Inland it is bounded by the Congo and Ubanghi rivers and stretches northwards to the Bahr-el-Ghazal and Lake Chad. French acquisition began on the Gabun river in 1841; Libreville was founded in 1849; Cape Lopez was gained in 1862, and the French possessions extended along the coast for about 200 miles. Since then the territories have been increased by exploration and military occupation and their limits have been defined in a series of international conventions. The boundary between French Equatorial Africa and the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan was fixed by a protocol signed on February 28, 1924.

By decree of January 15, 1910, the French Congo was divided into three circumscriptions which form three colonies, viz. :—the Gabun Colony (capital Libreville), the Middle Congo Colony (capital Brazzaville), and the Ubangi-Shari Colony (capital Bangui). The Chad Territory, which was formerly a dependency of the Ubangi-Shari Colony, was, by decree issued on March 17, 1920, made a separate colony. It extends from Lake Chad across the Eastern Sudan and includes Wadai. Capital, Fort Lamy.

By decrees issued on January 15, 1910, the name of the French Congo was changed into French Equatorial Africa, which extends over the Gabun, the Middle Congo, the Ubangi-Shari and Chad Colonies.

The area is about 912,049 square miles, containing a population which at the 1926 census numbered 3,127,707; the Europeans numbered 3,300. The area and population of the separate colonies are shown as follows for 1926 :—

Colony.	Area in square miles.	Men	Women	Boys	Girls	Total
Gabun . . . . .	104,320	126,840	161,888	51,524	49,147	888,899

The Colonies have each a Lieutenant-Governor; they all have financial and administrative autonomy, and each has an administrative council; the Lieutenant-Governors are under the Governor-General of French Equatorial Africa, having his headquarters at Brazzaville, who is assisted by a Secretary-General and a Council of Government. There are a general budget for the whole of French Equatorial Africa, and also separate budgets for the colonies. Local revenues accrue chiefly from customs duties; there are native poll taxes. The sale of alcohol to natives is restricted. The budgets showed the following figures :—

—	1930	1931	1932
General Budget—	Francs	Francs	Francs
French Equatorial Africa . . . . .	54,500,000	73,160,000	86,875,000

Chad . . . . .	11,000,000	16,350,000	17,048,200

In the colony there were in 1930, 65 native schools with 4,608 pupils, and 42 European teachers with 13 native assistants. There was also 1 school for European children with 25 pupils and 2 teachers. Private schools in 1930 numbered 81 with 5,325 pupils. These schools are run by the religious missions.

The resources of French Equatorial Africa are quite undeveloped. There are about 800,000 square miles of tropical forest extending to the Gabun coast, containing many species of trees of industrial value. Wild rubber is the most important. Palm oil is produced to some extent. Coffee, cacao and cotton are also cultivated. In the Chad Colony large numbers of cattle, sheep, asses, camels, horses, and ostriches are raised, but there are no facilities for export. Ivory is an important article of export. At the beginning of 1927 there were calculated to be 880,576 head of cattle in Chad. Copper, zinc, and lead are found.

Imports and exports for 1929 and 1930 were as follows:—

Colony	Imports		Exports
	1929	1930	1929	1930
	Francs	Francs	Francs	Francs

There is considerable shipping at Port Gentil, Libreville and Pointe-Noire, the chief ports at which in 1929, 574 vessels of 1,821,739 tons entered and 572 vessels of 1,803,596 tons cleared. At Loango steamers must anchor about three miles off the coast. Whale fishing commenced in 1922.

On February 6, 1921, a new railway was commenced to connect Brazzaville with the Atlantic at Pointe-Noire, and was completed in 1930.

The Central African telegraph line connects Brazzaville with Pointe-Noire, the terminus of the French cable from Brest via Dakar and Libreville, and is in communication with the English Atlantic cable. Wireless telegraphy connects Brazzaville and the head of the Southern Railway in the Loango Region, a distance of 300 miles, and also Brazzaville and Leopoldville, and a radio service with France was inaugurated in 1927. In the Chad region there are several stations connecting Fort Lamy, Ati, Faya, and Maô. A line has been laid to connect Brazzaville with Bangui, and another to connect Bangui with Fort Lamy. The total length of telegraph line in operation is about 3,253 miles.

On the north-east of Lake Chad is the state of Kanem, which was completely subjected to France in 1903, and is now only a district of the Shari territory with Maô for its capital. Wadai, to the east of Kanem, with an area of about 170,000 square miles, and a semi-civilised population of about 1,000,000, accepted the French Protectorate in the summer of 1903. In 1911 a French force occupied Arada, some miles to the north of the capital, Abeshr, which is in communication with Benghazi, on the coast of Tripoli, by caravans, and in 1913 Ain-Galakka.

The principal banks are Banque Française de l'Afrique, Banque de l'Afrique Occidentale and Banque Commerciale Africaine.

MADAGASCAR.*Government.

The last native sovereign of Madagascar, Rānavàlona III. (born 1861, died 1916), succeeded in 1883. The French having claimed a portion of the north-west coast as having been transferred to them by local chiefs, hostilities were carried on in 1882-84 against the Hovas, who refused to recognise the cession. In 1885 peace was made, Diégo Suarez having been surrendered to France. A French Resident-General was received at the capital, and the foreign relations of the country were claimed to be regulated by France. By the Anglo-French agreement of August 5, 1890, the protectorate of France over Madagascar was recognised by Great Britain; but the Native Government having refused to carry out the clauses of the treaty of 1885, a French expedition was despatched in May 1895 to enforce the claims of France, and on October 1, the capital having been occupied, a treaty was signed whereby the Queen recognised and accepted the protectorate. By a unilateral convention made in January, 1896, Madagascar became a French possession, and by law promulgated August 6, 1896, the island and its dependencies were declared a French colony.

Governor-General.—Leon Cayla (appointed February 10, 1930).

A Consultative Council of Administration has been established at Antananarivo. The Colony is not represented in the French Parliament, but there is an Economic and Financial Delegation, composed of 24 French citizens and 24 natives. The former are elected by the Chambers of Commerce, Industry and Agriculture and the Municipal Councils. The native members are chosen by the votes of a body of representatives itself elected by the chiefs of the villages. This delegation meets once a year for examination of the budget proposals. Four Europeans and two native members of the Council of Administration also take part in the meetings of this assembly. Madagascar is divided into 22 provinces and 76 districts. Natives are employed to a large extent in subordinate positions both in the civil and military administration. In all parts of the island the natives are allowed to choose chiefs who represent them in their relations with the Government.

Area and Population.

Madagascar is situated to the south-east coast of Africa, from which it is separated by the Mozambique Channel, the least distance between island and continent being 240 miles; its length is 980 miles; greatest breadth, 360 miles, and it has a coast line of over 3,000 miles. The area is estimated at 241,094 square miles. According to the last census (1926) the population (including that of the Mayotte and Comoro islands) was 3,621,342 (15·0 per sq. mile), of whom 3,591,943 were Malagasy, 18,040 were French and 11,359 foreigners, including Europeans and others. Of the native population in 1925, 1,024,109 were males, 1,177,726 females, and 1,374,266 were children under fifteen years of age. In 1925, there were 74,244 births among the native population (38,517 boys and 35,727 girls). In the same year there were 74,850 deaths.

The Malagasy races or tribes are very numerous, the more important being the Hova (906,938), the Betsiléo (479,686), the Betsimisaraka (403,475), the Tanala (151,071), the Sakalava (141,726), and the Bara (157,096). Hindus, Chinese, Arabs, and other Asiatics carry on small retail trade. The most intelligent and enterprising tribe is the Hova or Merina, whose language, allied to the Malayan and Oceanic tongues, is understood over a large part of the island. The people are divided into a great many clans, who seldom inter-marry.

The slave trade was nominally abolished in 1877; slavery in Imerina and in all parts under French authority was abolished by proclamation on September 27, 1896. The system of forced labour in the public service was abolished on January 1, 1901, but the personal tax due from 16 to 60 years of age, formerly 5 francs, has been increased to 10, 15, in some provinces 20, and in Antananarivo to 30 francs. The populations of the chief towns were, in 1926, the capital, Antananarivo, in the centre of the island, 70,847 (3,648 French and 601 foreigners); Tamatave, 15,022; Fianarantsoa, 11,156; Antsirabe, 19,130; Majunga, 16,570; Diégo Suarez, 8,604; Tulcar, 7,780; Mananjary, 12,013; Saint-Marie, 8,127; Nosy-Be, 14,022. The principal ports are Tamatave, on the east coast, Majunga on the north-west coast, Diégo-Suarez in the north, and Tulcar in the south-west.

In 1896, Diégo-Suarez (a French colony from 1885), the island of Noss Bé (area 130 sq. miles) on the west coast, and the island of Ste. Marie on the east coast (area 64 sq. miles), and in 1914 the Comoro Islands, were placed under the authority of the Governor-General of Madagascar.

Religion, Education, Justice.

Up to 1895, a large portion of the Hova and of the other tribes in the central districts had been Christianised. The Christian population was estimated at 450,000 Protestants, and 150,000 Roman Catholics. There are many missionary societies at work, French (Catholic and Protestant), British (the London Missionary Society, the Friends' Mission, and the Anglican Mission); there is also a Norwegian Lutheran Mission and an American Mission. French Catholic missions had 258 European workers (67 female); Protestant and Anglican missions had 173 (54 female). The outlying tribes are still mostly heathen.

Education is compulsory from 8 to 14 years of age. On September 15, 1925, there were 991 official schools for European and native children, with 90,833 pupils (56,865 boys and 33,968 girls), and 1,739 teachers, and 517 private schools, with 49,750 pupils and 1,144 teachers. Children are required to learn the French language. At Antananarivo there are a school of native medicine, an administrative and commercial school, a normal school, and a school of agriculture.

For the administration of French justice there are a Parquet consisting of a Procureur-Général and other officials, a court of appeal, 4 courts of first instance in the principal towns, and justice of peace courts at 17 centres. For native justice there are tribunals in the districts and provinces, and the natives have the right of appeal from lower to higher tribunals. There were also arbitration courts for settling labour disputes.

Finance.

The local revenue of Madagascar is derived chiefly from direct taxation (including a poll tax and taxes on land, cattle, and houses), from customs and other indirect taxes, from colonial lands, from posts and telegraphs, markets, and miscellaneous sources. The chief branches of expenditure are general administration, public works, the post office, and the public debt. The budget estimates for the calendar year 1930 balanced at 253,000,000 francs; budget estimates for 1931 balanced at 267,600,000 francs, and those for 1932 at 255,600,000 francs.

The colony has since 1897 contracted debt to the amount of 4,200,000*l.* (principally for public works) at the average yearly rate of interest of 3.02 per cent. The 1931 budget makes provision for debt revenue, 7,600,000 francs, and the 1932 budget for 12,700,000 francs.

Defence.

In peace time the troops in Madagascar (including the forces at Diégo-Suarez) consist of 1,542 Europeans, and 5,736 natives. The police and militia, consisting of 3,300 natives, are maintained on the local budget.

Production and Industry.

In 1896, on the completion of the French occupation of the Island, the Malagasy system of land tenure was modified; foreigners were permitted to acquire land, and registration of land was begun. Government lands, urban or non-urban, are let or sold to private persons, or to companies for agriculture, pasturage, or mining. On December 31, 1926, there were 3,048,367 acres of land under cultivation by natives and 285,607 acres by Europeans. The principal crops are rice, sugar, coffee, manioc, cotton, cacao, vanilla, tobacco, butter beans, lima beans, cloves, mulberry trees, and rubber trees. The areas under cultivation in 1927 were:—rice, 1,392,425 acres; manioc, 682,925 acres; maize, 213,540 acres; sweet potatoes, 244,825 acres; haricot beans, 91,097 acres; potatoes, 77,207 acres; coffee, 113,537 acres; vanilla, 53,260 acres. Sericulture is encouraged. The forests contain many valuable woods, while caoutchouc, gum, resins, and plants for textile, tanning, dyeing, and medicinal purposes abound.

Cattle breeding and agriculture are the chief occupations of the natives. There were on December 31, 1925, 7,139,900 cattle in the island; 2,884 horses; 116,114 sheep; 62,833 goats; 1,057 ostriches, and 386,305 pigs.

Silk and cotton weaving are carried on, and the working of metal and the making of panama and other straw hats. The preparation of sugar, rice, soap, tapioca, &c., is being undertaken by Europeans, as well as the canning of meat. There are large meat-preserving factories at Bo-anamary (Majunga), Diégo-Suarez, Tamatave, Antananarivo and Antsirabe.

The value of the total output of minerals in 1926 was 59,231,042 francs, graphite accounting for 44,368,343 francs, gold for 6,934,068 francs, and mica for 4,121,528 francs. The production of phosphates was valued at 1,840,500 francs, that of precious stones at 1,680,679 francs, of industrial stones at 126,055 francs, of corundum at 94,209 francs, radio-active minerals (betafite and euxenite) at 65,292 francs, and zircon at 258 francs.

The following was the output of the principal minerals in 1925, 1926 and 1928:—

France supplies the bulk of the imports (642,628,147 francs in 1929 and 541,101,228 francs in 1928), and that country also receives the bulk of the exports (386,489,678 francs in 1928 and 348,626,977 francs in 1929).

According to Board of Trade returns, the imports from Madagascar into Great Britain in 1931 amounted to 336,226*l.*, and in 1930 to 795,084*l.*, and the exports from Great Britain amounted to 58,894*l.* in 1931 and 77,502*l.* in 1930. Re-exports to Madagascar from U.K. were 965*l.* in 1931, and 1,529*l.* in 1930.

Shipping and Communications.

Tamatave, the principal seaport of the island, is visited by the steamers of two French shipping companies, and the principal ports are connected with each other by coasting steamers plying regularly. In 1929, 5,732 vessels of 3,279,427 tons entered and 5,756 vessels of 3,253,380 tons cleared at the ports of Madagascar. Of the total vessels entering, 4,096 were French and 1,394 were British; and of those clearing, 4,137 were French and 1,381 British.

At the end of 1926, there were 1,800 miles of roads. Three railways are at present worked in Madagascar. The first is the through railway line between Antananarivo and Tamatave (229 miles) which was opened for traffic on March 9, 1913, and soon to be electrified. The second is the railway between Antananarivo and Antsirabe (noted for its thermal springs), 98 miles south of Antananarivo, opened for traffic on October 15, 1923. The third is the branch line of the Tamatave railway, from Moramanga to the Antsihanaka provinces, towards the north of the island, which was opened for traffic in October, 1917, a distance of 103 miles. Total railway mileage (including narrow-gauge local lines) on December 31, 1927, 430 miles. A new line from Fianarantsoa to the east coast of the island (105 miles) is projected. This will be electrified. There is also a motor-car service with a network of routes covering 612 miles.

There is postal communication throughout the island. There were in 1926, 185 ordinary post offices and 500 rural offices. The telegraph line has (1925) a length of 4,787 miles, and 7,452 miles of wire. There is cable communication to Mozambique, Mauritius, Réunion, and Aden. In 1925 there were 745 miles of urban telephone line, 1,490 miles of inter-urban circuits, and seven Government wireless telegraph stations. The important wireless station at Antananarivo, forming part of the French inter-colonial network of wireless stations, was opened towards the end of 1924.

Money and Banks.

By the decree of 22 December, 1925, a Bank of Issue was established—the Bank of Madagascar, with a capital of 20 million francs. The Comptoir National d'Escompte de Paris has agencies at Antananarivo, Tamatave, Diégo-Suarez, Mananjary, Majunga and Tuléar. The Crédit Foncier de Madagascar and La Banque de l'Océan Indien are also established in the island. On January 1, 1920, a Savings Bank was established.

The monetary system is the same as that of France, and all coins and notes which are legal tender in France are also legal tender in the Colony. Since the war, postage stamps affixed to cardboards, for smaller values, viz., 5, 10, 25 and 50 centimes, and 1 and 2 francs, are current.

MAYOTTE AND THE COMORO ISLANDS.

The archipelago of the Comoro Islands is formed by the islands of Mayotte, Anjouan, Grande Comore and Mohéli. Before 1912, Anjouan, Mohéli and Grande Comore were only under French protection; Mayotte alone being a colony. But by a law of July 25, 1912, and a decree of February 23, 1914, the whole archipelago has become a colony, attached to the general government of Madagascar, of which it forms a twenty-first province, the Province de 'Mayotte et Dépendances.'

In 1925, the combined population was 119,305, including 804 Europeans.

The island of Mayotte (140 square miles) had a population (1925) of 12,674. There is an increasing emigration to Zanzibar and Madagascar. The chief product was formerly sugar, but the cultivation of vanilla has now superseded that of the sugar-cane. There are now only two sugar works and two distilleries for rum. Besides vanilla and sugar, cacao, aloes and perfume plants (citronella, ylang-ylang, patchouli, &c.) are cultivated.

Grande Comore, Mohéli, Anjouan, and a number of smaller islands, have an area of about 650 square miles and population in 1925 of 106,625. Grande Comore itself is about 40 miles long and 18 miles at its broadest points. Vanilla, cacao and perfume plants are successfully cultivated. Grande Comore has a fine forest and exports timber for building and for railway sleepers.

The principal imports are cotton fabrics, metals, and rice; the principal exports, hides, sugar, copra, sisal, and vanilla.

St. Paul and Amsterdam, small islands in the Indian Ocean, belong to France.

Kerguelén, a desolate island, about 50 S. lat. and 70 E. long., was annexed by France in 1893.

By a decree dated November 11, 1924, these islands were made dependencies of Madagascar.

Consular and other Representatives.

OF GREAT BRITAIN IN MADAGASCAR.

Consul at Antananarivo.—J. Helm Smith.

There is also a Vice-Consul at Majunga and at Tamatave.

RÉUNION.

Réunion (or Bourbon), about 420 miles east of Madagascar, has belonged to France since 1643. It is administered by a Governor assisted by a Privy Council, and an elective Council-General, and is represented in the French Parliament by a Senator and two Deputies. It has an area of 970 square miles and population (1926) of 186,637, of whom 180,694 were French;

there were also 628 British Indians, 1,968 natives of Madagascar, 411 Africans, 1,626 Chinese. The chief towns are: St. Denis, with 23,890 inhabitants in 1926; St. Pierre, 20,479; St. Paul, 21,643; St. Louis, 15,867. The towns are under the French municipal law. Réunion has a lycée with (1931) 25 teachers and 547 pupils. Primary education is given in two schools, one for boys with 657 pupils and 14 teachers, and one for girls with 727 pupils and 17 teachers. There are besides three infant schools under State supervision, and three private establishments. In the rest of the island, primary education is given in 176 schools by 423 teachers, and in 30 private schools. The number of pupils attending school in the island is (1931) 23,010. There is a teachers' training course at the lycée attended by 45 pupils with 3 teachers. The chief port, Pointe-des-Galets, is connected by a coast railway of 80 miles with St. Benoît on the one hand, and St. Pierre on the other. In 1888 this railway was taken over by the State. The chief productions are sugar (62,000 acres), rum, manioc (12,000 acres), tapioca, vanilla, essences. The forests occupy about 150,000 acres. The production of spirits (expressed as 100 per cent. alcohol) in 1930 amounted to 1,146,340 litres (252,194 gallons) in industrial distilleries and 5,165,998 litres (1,136,619 gallons) in other works. The sugar production in 1930-31 was 51,020 metric tons. The chief imports are rice (valued at 24,468,604 francs in 1930), grain, cotton goods (16,166,069 francs in 1930), &c.; the chief exports are sugar (42,677 metric tons valued at 63,759,857 francs in 1930), and spirits (8,738,980 litres valued at 50,538,264 francs in 1930). Total value of imports in 1930, 178,813,679 francs, of exports, 133,741,150 francs. In 1930, 147 vessels entered and cleared at the ports of the island. There are about 80 miles of railway. The Tamatave-Réunion-Mauritius Telegraph Cable is open for traffic. The wireless station is also open for public traffic. During the year 1930, there were 155,483 telephone conversations and 80,805 telegraph communications. There are 57 post offices and 721 central telephone offices. The budget for 1930 showed 57,375,928 francs for receipts and expenditure. The currency of Réunion consists of local bank notes and token nickel coinage. It has nominally the same value as that of France. The Bank of Réunion has a capital of 6 million francs.

FRENCH SOMALILAND.

The colony of the Somali Coast lies between the Italian Colony of Eritrea and British Somaliland. On the north it is bounded by Cape Doumeirah, which separates it from the Italian possessions; on the south by a line drawn from the wells of Hadou to Gueldessa, which separates it from the British possessions; the inland boundary towards Abyssinia being, by convention of March 20, 1897, at a distance of 90 kilometres (about 56 miles) from the coast. The territory has an area of about 5,790 square miles, and the population was estimated in 1928 at 85,778, including Europeans. It is administered by a Governor, assisted by an Administrative Council. The port of Obock was acquired for France in 1862, but it was not till 1884 that its active occupation began. In 1884, Sagallo and Tajurah were ceded to France; in 1885, Ambado; in 1888 the territory was delimited by agreement with Great Britain; in 1888, a port was created at Djibouti, now the seat of government.

Djibouti has (1928) 9,414 inhabitants, of whom 540 are European (317 French). The native population is made up as follows (1928): Somali, 4,170; Arabs, 4,063; Danakils, 351; Jews, 141; Sudanese, 132; Annamites, 15; total 8,872. In 1902 a French mission school for boys and one for girls were opened at Djibouti. In October 1922, these were replaced by a public elementary school. The local budget for 1928 balanced at 13,002,000 francs. The country has scarcely any industries, but with the coast fisheries and inland trade there is considerable traffic. The salt mines, opened in 1912, exported in 1928 34,218 metric tons of salt. The chief imports are cotton goods, butter, coal, sugar; the chief exports were coffee, ivory, hides and skins. The total imports in 1928 amounted to 457,751,424 francs, and the total exports to 401,543,750 francs. Much of the traffic with Abyssinia which formerly passed by Zailah now goes by railway from Djibouti to Addi

Ababa (485 miles). The vessels of 3 French, 2 English, and 2 Italian shipping companies visit Djibouti, which is also in communication with Aden by means of French and English steamboats for local traffic. In 1926 there entered at Djibouti 1,423 steam merchant vessels of 1,145,271 tons. Of these vessels, 245 were French, 81 English, 30 Italian, 7 Dutch, 15 Norwegian, 13 German; a total of 2,960 vessels cleared, with a tonnage of 2,280,861.

FRENCH WEST AFRICA AND THE SAHARA.

French West Africa comprises the following colonies:—(1) Senegal, (2) French Guinea, (3) the Ivory Coast, (4) Dahomey, (5) French Sudan, (6) Upper Volta, (7) Mauritania, (8) Niger, and (9) Circle of Dakar and Dependencies.

The approximate area and population of French West Africa in 1926 are shown as follows:—

Of the French population, 7,207 were men, 2,578 women, and 1,314 children; while of the foreign population, 2,466 were men, 939 women, and 895 children.

The principal tribes are the Oulofs in Senegal (about 500,000, mostly Moslems); Bambaras and Mandingos in the Sudan (about 1,200,000); Peuhls Faulés in the Sudan, Upper Volta, Niger and Guinea (about 1,800,000); the Mossi in the Upper Volta (about 1,280,000), and the Kroumen on the Ivory Coast.

A treaty of October 19, 1906, determines the course of the Anglo-French boundary from the Gulf of Guinea to the Niger. The delineation of the boundary was completed in 1912, and approved by the two governments in 1914. The British government has leased to France for purposes of commerce two pieces of land, one on the right bank of the Niger between Lealaba and the confluence of the rivers Mousa and Niger, and the other on one of the mouths of the Niger, each to form one block of from 25 to 120 acres with a river frontage not exceeding 436 yards; the lease, at first, to be for 30 years. It is further stipulated that, within the boundaries indicated in the convention, British and French as regards persons and merchandise shall enjoy for 30 years the same treatment in all matters of river navigation, of commerce, and of tariff and fiscal treatment and taxes of all kinds.

Under the Anglo-French Convention of April 8, 1904, the river port of Yarbata on the Gambia (belonging to the British colony of Gambia), with all its landing places, was ceded to France, and, if this port should prove inaccessible to sea-going merchantmen, access to the river will be granted to France at an accessible point lower down. At the same time the Los Islands were ceded to France.

By an agreement dated July 6, 1911, between England and France, the boundary line between French Guinea and Sierra Leone was readjusted.

By a Convention between Great Britain and France the former recognised the right of France to all territory west of the Nile basin, which practically includes the whole of the Sahara (exclusive of the Libyan Desert), and the State of Wadai. The French Sahara may be roughly estimated at about 1½ million square miles.

Over the whole of French West Africa there is a Governor-General, who is assisted by a Council, the seat of the general government being at Dakar. The Colonies are each under a Lieutenant-Governor, the Circle of Dakar and Dependencies under a Governor of Colonies, all subject to the direction of the Governor-General, who has been relieved of the direct administration of any portion of his Government, and is free to devote the whole of his attention to directing and controlling the common interests of all the Colonies. To facilitate this object a General Budget has been created, drawn up by the Governor-General, which provides for all the services which are common to all the Colonies, particularly public works and social services, and the funds for which are provided by the customs and shipping dues of each of the Colonies, which have now only their internal revenues to depend upon for their local budgets, which have, however, been relieved of the cost of all the general services.

There were in 1928-29, 300 preparatory schools with 25,976 pupils (2,089 girls); 164 elementary schools with 8,505 pupils (935 girls); 83 urban schools with 3,275 pupils (514 girls); 8 higher primary schools with 974 pupils (1931); 10 technical schools with 710 pupils (1931). There were besides 152 evening schools for adults with 6,620 pupils, 9 orphan schools with 340 pupils, and 2 'medersas' or Mussulman schools with 155 pupils; also 3 higher technical schools with 310 students, and 2 Lycées with 391 pupils. There were 66 private schools with 7,609 pupils in 1931. The expenditure on education was 20,394,675 francs.

The following are the financial estimates for 1930 :—

	General Budget	Local Budgets	Supplementary Budgets	Total
	francs	francs	francs	francs
Revenue . . .	313,362,000	519,222,000	150,947,000	983,531,000
Expenditure . .	282,497,000	472,395,000	150,896,000	905,788,000

The military forces in 1931 consisted of 17,400 men, of whom 2,720 were Europeans. In 1930-31 there were 12,000 recruits. The police force numbers 7,620.

The principal agricultural products are ground-nuts, cocoa (16,347 tons in 1929), and cotton (4,120 tons in 1929).

The imports into French West Africa are mostly food substances, textiles, mechanical implements, and beverages; the exports from these colonies are chiefly fruits, oils and oil seeds, as well as rubber, cotton, cocoa and timber.

The following is a comparative table of values of the imports and exports during 1929 and 1930 for each of the colonies :—

In 1930, 22,075 vessels of 20,605,312 tons entered and cleared the ports of French West Africa.

There were (January 1, 1931) 2,090 miles of railway in operation and 631 miles under construction; 20,580 miles of telegraph. In 1931 there were 248 post offices, divided as follows:—Senegal, 57; French Sudan, 42; Guinea, 34; Ivory Coast, 33; Dahomey, 27; Mauritania, 15; Upper Volta, 20; and Niger, 20.

A savings bank was established by a decree of July 22, 1920, and began to function on October 1, 1922, with a single office at Dakar. There are now 4 branch offices at Saint-Louis, Conakry, Porto-Novo, and Niamey. On December 31, 1928, there were 5,451 depositors with 5,371,535 francs to their credit. The Banque de l'Afrique Occidentale Française has the exclusive right to issue notes. It has branches at Dakar, St. Louis, Rufisque, Bamako, Grand-Bassam, Porto Novo, Lome and Kaolack. Its capital is 35,000,000 francs. The Banque Française de l'Afrique and the Banque Commerciale Africaine are important banking institutions in French West Africa. The use of French weights and measures, and money, is compulsory throughout French West Africa.

Governor-General of French West Africa.—M. J. Brévié. Appointed 1930.

The colony of Senegal was reorganised by the law of December 4, 1920, and March 30, 1925. The capital is St. Louis, an old town founded in 1658 (population, 1931, 29,608, Europeans, 901). The other important towns are Dakar, a fortified naval station, and the seat of the Government General of French West Africa (population, 1931, 53,982, European, 6,559), Rufisque (population, 1931, 14,623, European, 512), Kaolack (14,141), Diourbee (15,402), Thies (11,016). By a decree of December 1924, Dakar and its suburbs were formed into a special territory called circumscription de Dakar et Dependances. Goree, a small island situated in front of Dakar (population, 998), was amalgamated with Dakar in April 1929. There are three municipal communes governed by a mayor and corporation, St. Louis, Dakar and Rufisque.

The total area is 74,112 square miles, and the total population in 1931 was put at 1,584,273. The natives of the four towns and their descendants are French citizens, and other natives are French subjects.

The Colony is represented in the French Parliament by a deputy.

The Colony is administered by a Lieutenant-Governor, assisted by a Colonial Council of 44 members, 26 elected by French citizens and 18 by representatives of native chiefs of cantons and provinces. The Colony is divided into 15 'circles,' each under the rule of an administrator. The local budget for 1930 was 162,508,000 francs.

For primary education there were in 1931, 56 preparatory schools, 24 elementary schools and 13 regional schools. There were also 4 urban schools at St. Louis and 2 at Rufisque, which give the same instruction as the French primary schools, modified to suit local requirements. At Dakar there are grouped superior technical schools common to all the colonies, a normal school for teachers, a professional school, a commercial and administrative school, a school of medicine. At St. Louis a superior primary school has 225 pupils. Secondary education is provided at Dakar and at St. Louis (320 pupils in 1931). In 1931, 2,200,000 francs were provided for secondary education. There is a large hospital for natives at Dakar, and for Europeans and natives at St. Louis.

The soil is generally sandy. In 1929, there were 640,000 sheep and goats; 423,000 cattle; 62,000 asses; and 41,000 horses. The natives cultivate ground-nuts (production, 1931, 500,000 tons), millet, maize, and some rice; other products are castor beans, some coco-nuts, gum from Mauritania, and rubber from the Casamance river. Ground-nuts form the bulk of the exports. A salt industry is being developed. Native industries comprise weaving, pottery, brick-making and jewellery.

Imports in 1929, 880,000,000 francs; exports, 854,000,000 francs. The chief imports are cottons, foodstuffs, metal-work, and coal. The chief exports in 1930 were ground-nuts (503,661 tons), turtles (10,358 tons), hides and skins, groundnut oil (2,809 tons), gums (3,469 tons).

In 1930 the colony possessed 1,653 miles of telegraph and 1,625 miles of telephone lines. There are 2 French submarine cables, Brest-Dakar and Brest-Casablanca-Dakar. There are three other cables, one Spanish, one French West African, and the third belonging to a South American company.

One railway connects Dakar, Rufisque and St. Louis (165 miles); another one Thiès, Kayes and Bamako (French Sudan), 450 miles.

There is a river service on the Senegal from St. Louis to Podos (140 miles) open throughout the year. During the rainy season there is a service from Dakar to Kayes (484 miles). The Senegal river is closed to foreign flags. Dakar, the principal port, is in regular communication with French ports by the steamers of 6 French lines, and with Liverpool by a British line. La Banque de l'Afrique Occidentale (established June 23, 1901), with a capital of 6,000,000 francs, and reserve funds 3,920,000 francs, was founded for the purpose of carrying on financial, industrial, or commercial operations; it has a branch at Dakar, and agencies at St. Louis, Rufisque, and Kaolack. La Banque Française de l'Afrique has branches at Dakar, St. Louis, and Kaolack. The Banque Commerciale Africaine has agencies at Dakar, Rufisque and Kaolack.

H. B. M.'s Consul-General at Dakar (for French Western Africa, including the Sudan).—R. C. F. Maugham.

French Guinea lies on the coast between Portuguese Guinea and the British colony of Sierra Leone, and extends inland so as to include the territories of Koumbia, Dinguiraye, Siguiri, Kouroussa, Kankan, Kissidougou, Dabola, Beyla, Macenta, Boffa, Boké, Conakry, Faranah, Forécariah, Kindia, Labé, Mamou, Pita, Gueckédou, and N'zérékoré. The area is about 89,436 square miles, and the population (1929) was 2,220,464, including 1,496 Europeans (1,389 French). A regular system of Government lay schools has recently been introduced all over French West Africa. The principal products are palm oil and nuts, rubber, millet, earth-nuts, rice, gum, bananas, pineapples, and coffee, which is grown in the Rio Nunez Fouta and military regions. There is an experimental garden at Camayenne near Conakry (the capital), where the culture of bananas, pineapples, rubber trees, and other plants is being tried. Fouta Djallon contains cattle in abundance. In 1930 there were 615,000 cattle, 157,000 sheep, 235,000 goats, 2,628 horses, and 153 asses. Gold is found in the river Tinkisso and in the Bouré and Siecké districts. Imports in 1930, 97,905,232 francs; exports, 58,165,632 francs. The principal exports in 1930 were rubber, 1,300,265 francs; cattle, 3,690,455 francs; ground-nuts, 2,071,948 francs; hides, 7,771,705 francs; bananas, 8,766,107 francs; and palm kernels, 14,155,102 francs; animal wax, 3,627,075 francs; palm oil, 663,936 francs. A network of roads is being made to connect with the railway station from Conakry to the Niger. The French Guinea railway which runs from Conakry on the coast to the Milo at Kankan (664 kilometres long) was opened in January, 1911 and in August, 1914, was continued to Kankan (412 miles from Conakry). The jetty 1,066 feet long, at Conakry has been completed. In the colony there were (1930) 2,836 miles of telegraph line. The Colony is connected by cable with France and Pernambuco; also with Freetown, Monrovia, and Grand Bassam. There is a wireless station at Conakry affording communication with Dakar (Senegal), Bamako (French Sudan) and Grand Bassam (Ivory Coast). Conakry is visited regularly by the steamers of four French companies and one English company. The budget of the colony provided for 1931 the sum of 55,840,530 francs.

The Ivory Coast lies between Liberia and the British Gold Coast Colony. It has common frontiers with French Guinea, French Sudan, and the Upper Volta Colony. France asserted and obtained rights on the coast about 1842, but did not actively and continuously occupy the territory till 1882. Area about 121,590 square miles; population (1930 census), 1,886,166; Europeans, 3,362. The seat of administration, shortly to be transferred to Abidjan, is Bingerville, the capital, formerly called Adjamé (population 1,358, European 111). There is a central school group at Bingerville, and a number of Government schools in the districts. The chief ports, in respect of population and commerce, are Grand-Bassam (population 7,276), Assinie, Grand Lahou (4,187), Sassandra, and Tabou. The chief centres in the interior are Abidjan (9,773 inhabitants, including 1,045 Europeans), Dimbokro, Bouaké, Aboisso, Bondoukou, Agboville, Man, and Korhogo. The natives cultivate maize, rice, plantains, pineapples, and many other fruits. They have also been taught to grow cocoa, the export of which increased from an average of 4 tons in 1904-1908 to 9,808 tons in 1927, 16,813 tons in 1929, and 23,239 tons in 1930. The cultivation of cotton is being developed. Coco-nuts and rubber are collected. The mahogany forests inland are worked. Gold is found near Grand-Bassam in Baoulé, on the Comoé and Bia Rivers, and in Indenié. Manganese deposits have also been located. The imports in 1930 amounted to 251,480,602 francs, and the exports to 253,217,724 francs. The ports of the Colony are visited by liners of several French, English, Dutch, German, American, and Italian shipping companies. Number of vessels entered in 1929, 1,167 of 3,358,403 tons, and cleared 1,169 vessels, of 3,353,196 tons. A new wharf at Port-Bouet was opened in 1930. From Abidjan, on the north side of the lagoon, a railway has been constructed, running between Abidjan and Ferkessédougou (346 miles). Contracts have now been made to lengthen this to the north, to the Niger and Upper Volta. There is a large network of roads suitable for motor traffic, total length about 3,442 miles. At the end of 1930, there were 2,658 miles of telegraphic and 395 miles of telephonic lines. The telegraph connects the principal towns and extends to adjoining colonies. Telephonic communication exists between Bassam, Bingerville, Abidjan, Aboisso, Assinie, and Dabou. There are five wireless stations in the colony. The budget of the colony for 1931 has been fixed at 111,643,600 francs.

Dahomey stretches from the coast between Togoland on the west and the British possessions of Lagos and Nigeria on the east, and is bounded on the north-east by the river Niger and on the north and north-west by the colony of the Upper Volta, northwards to the French Military Territories. France obtained a footing on the coast in 1851, and gradually extended her power until in 1894 the whole kingdom of Dahomey was annexed. The colony has only about 70 miles of coast, but opens out northwards into a wide hinterland. The area is about 41,302 square miles, and the population, according to the latest census of 1929, 1,080,447, including 1,093 Europeans. The seat of government is Porto Novo (the chief business centre), which has about 23,614 inhabitants. Village, regional, and urban schools are instituted under the new West African educational system. In 1931, 2,709,572 francs were spent on education. The natives are of pure Negro stock, and belong to the Fon branch of the Ewe family. They are industrious agriculturists in the coast region, and grow maize, manioc, yams, and potatoes. In 1929, there were 2,314 horses; 500 asses; 92,095 cattle; 211,950 sheep; 249,798 goats; and 131,569 pigs. The forests contain oil palms, which have been profitably utilised. These furnish the chief exports—kernels and oil. Cotton cultivation has recently been successfully introduced in the central provinces. Imports in 1930, 151,178,054 francs; exports, 123,873,859 francs. The principal exports (1929), were palm kernels, 60,002,009 francs; palm oil, 37,527,709 francs, and cotton 7,877,185 francs.

A new metalled road, called the East Road (297 miles in length), for motor traffic runs from Savé to the Niger. There is also a road from Darsa-Zoume to Porga (281 miles). Other roads are: Kotonu to Malonville (485 miles), Kotonu to Anecho (68 miles), Abomey to Keton (75 miles). There are now altogether more than 2,711 miles of carriage road, of which 495 miles are first-class roads. At Kotonu an iron pier has been erected, and from that port a railway runs into the interior to Savé (162 miles) with a branch line to Whydah and Segborué on Lake Aheme (36 miles). The line is intended to run to Chaoru (400 miles). The gauge is a metre. A metre gauge railway has also been constructed from Porto Novo to Pobé (50 miles) along the Lagos frontier. A new railway linking the Capital with the port of Kotonu was opened to traffic on June 1, 1930 (22 miles). A telegraph line connects Kotonu with Abomey, Togoland, the Niger, and Senegal. In the colony there were (in 1929) 1,725 miles of telegraph line, and 560 miles of telephone line. In 1930, 528 vessels entered and 539 cleared the ports of Dahomey. French coins only are in circulation. The local budget for 1931 was 57,430,000 francs.

914 FRANCE:—FRENCH WEST AFRICA AND THE SAHARA

The Colony of French Sudan was formed in 1904, from the Territories of Senegambia and the Niger, less the Senegal Protectorate, which was restored to Senegal. Its old name of Upper Senegal-Niger was changed to French Sudan by decree of December 4, 1920.

The Colony is bounded on the north by the Algerian sphere; on the west by Mauritania, the Falmé river, and the frontier of French Guinea; on the south by the frontiers of the Ivory Coast, and the Upper Volta, and on the east by the Colony of the Niger. It therefore includes the valley of the Upper Senegal, about two-thirds of the course of the Niger, much of the country enclosed in the great Bend, and a large part of the Sahara to the Algerian sphere of influence. The area is 360,331 square miles, with a population of about 2,855,658 in 1931.

At the same time that this Colony was formed the Military Territories, which now form an integral part of it, were broken up. The Second Military Territory, which included nearly all the country within the Bend, was handed over to the Military administration, and the First (Timbuktu) incorporated in Upper Senegal-Niger, was administered by a colonel under the authority of the Lieutenant-Governor. The Third (Zinder-Chad) Territory has been constituted an autonomous unit (Colony of Niger, see below). In 1919 the greater part of the southern portion in the bend of the Niger was created a separate Colony in the name of the Upper Volta (Haute Volta, see below).

The whole of the French Sudan is under civil administration, with the same judicial and educational systems as the other Colonies comprised in the Government General. The budget of the Colony for 1930 provided for 74,263,000 francs.

The following are the most important towns in the French Sudan with population in 1931 shown in parentheses: Bamako, the capital (19,952), Segou (8,284), Kayes (12,333), Djeuné (5,994), Timbuktu (5,677), Goundam (5,945), Nioro (3,481), Sikasso (9,151), San (3,481), Mofiti (4,642), Kita (3,700), Gao (3,653). All the principal towns have regional or urban schools; Bamako has a professional school, a junior high school and a veterinary school; there is a Mussulman superior school at Timbuktu with 110 pupils, called a médersa (official).

The natives cultivate ground-nuts, millet, maize, rice, cotton, sesame; other products are rubber and kariti. Large stocks of cattle abound in the colony. Three European concerns cultivate sisal.

Native industries comprise pottery, brick-making, jewellery, weaving, leather-making. Chief imports are cottons, food-stuffs, automobiles, petrol, building material, sugar, salt, beer; total in 1930, 58,810,546 francs.

Chief exports are ground-nuts, cattle, gum, kopak, skins, cotton, wool, sisal, kariti and wax; total in 1930, 59,887,558 francs.

There is a very complete system of telegraphs throughout the Colony from Kayes to Niamey, Zinder, and Lake Tchad.

Since the completion of the section from Thiès to Kayes (January 1924), French Sudan is connected with the coast by a railway 760 miles in length, stretching from Dakar to Koulikoro by way of Thiès, Kayes and Bamako. For about seven months in the year small steamboats perform the service from Koulikoro to Timbuktu, and from Bamako to Kouroussa.

Wireless telegraph connects Kabara, Kidal and Bamako with the Eiffel Tower in Paris, and with Dakar, Rufisque, Conakry, Abidjan, Kotonu, Brazzaville.

The Colony of the Upper Volta was formed by a decree of March 1, 1919, from the southern section of the Upper Senegal Niger. It lies within the bend of the Niger. By a decree of December 28, 1926, the circle of Say and the eastern part of the circle of Dori were detached from the colony and added to the colony of the Niger.

The eastern boundary, therefore, follows an irregular line through the villages Yatakala, Bossé, Tangou and Botou; its southern boundary is formed by the river Mekrou and the northern boundary of Dahomey, Togoland, the Gold Coast, and the Ivory Coast: thence the boundary runs in a north-easterly direction from the river Bagoë to the Niger, about 16° N., below Ansongo. It includes the districts of Gaoua, Bobo-Dioulasso, Dédougou, Ouagadougou, Ouahigouya, Teukodogo, Kaya, Koudougou, Fada, and Batiá. The area is 142,820 square miles, and native population 2,999,580 (census 1931), with 663 Europeans. The administrative centre is Ouagadougou (population 10,767); other towns, with their population on July 1, 1931, are Bobo-Dioulasso (10,912), Kondongon (9,370), Dédougou (2,633), and Ouahigouya (5,675). Administratively, it is on the same footing as the other Colonies of French West Africa. Economically, industrially and commercially it possesses the same characteristics as the French Sudan. Imports in 1930, 5,480,604 francs; exports, 15,867,802 francs. The budget for 1931 balanced at 36,481,000 francs. An automobile service between Ferkessedougou and Ouagadougou and Ouagadougou and Bamako connects this colony with the Ivory Coast Railway and the terminus of the Niger-Dakar Railway. There are 5,500 miles of good roads, with steel bridges over the Black Volta.

Mauritania, formed into a Protectorate in May, 1903, converted into a special 'Civilian Territory' in October, 1904, became a Colony on January 1, 1921, with a Lieutenant-Governor at its head. It consists of the districts of Trarza, Brakna, Gorgol, Assaba, Guidimaka, Adrar, Levrier Bay, and Tagant, with a total area of 347,400 square miles. The native population (census, July, 1931) numbers 322,409, mostly Moorish Mussulmans; European population, 328. The northern limit of the Colony is approximate, and the foregoing area is obtained by taking the latitude 23° 3' N. as the northern boundary.

The budget of the Colony for 1931 was 18,500,000 francs.

The Colony of the Niger was formed by a decree of October 18, 1922. Estimated area, 463,200 square miles; population (1931), 1,490,153 (376 Europeans). It was originally a Military Territory (1912); in 1920, it was placed under civil administration. The country is composed of a zone in the north, which is largely desolate country; a central strip which is wooded; and the southern zone, richly wooded and abounding in cattle. By a decree dated December 28, 1926, the circle of Say and part of the circle of Dori were transferred from the Colony of Upper-Volta to the Colony of the Niger. On January 1, 1931, there were, including the new territories, 76,485 horses, 972,503 oxen, 2,937,452 sheep and goats, 175,506 asses, 62,245 camels. In the southern zone rice, cotton, wheat, tobacco, maize, barley and indigo can be produced. In 1931 the chief agricultural products were, millet (670,000 tons), earth-nuts (21,000 tons), manioc (9,750 tons), dates (5,000 tons), cotton, (1,500 tons), and beans (73,000 tons). The whole colony lacks water, with the exception of (1) the western districts which are watered by the Niger and its tributaries, (2) part of the southern zone where there are a number of wells, (3) the extreme south-east touching Lake Tchad. Local budget in 1931, 24,250,000 francs. Niamey is the capital.

MANDATED TERRITORIES IN AFRICA: TOGO AND CAMEROON.

Togo.—Togo, the former German Colony, lies between the Gold Coast Colony on the west and French Dahomey on the east. It was surrendered unconditionally by the Germans to British and French forces in August, 1914, and is now divided between the French and British. The Mandate was approved by the League of Nations on July 20, 1922. Of the total area of 33,700 square miles, the French have obtained about two-thirds, 21,893 square miles, the boundary running from the north-east in a generally south-east and south direction to Lomé, in such a manner that no part of the coast is included in the British sphere. Lomé (population about 8,000 natives) is the seat of the administration. The total population of the whole of Togo is estimated at 730,027 natives, with a European population of 477.

The southern half of Togoland is peopled by natives using 30 different languages, of which the principal is Ewe—these may be regarded as an offshoot of the Bantu peoples. The northern half contains, ethnologically, a totally different population descended largely from Hamitic tribes and speaking in all 16 languages, of which Dagomba and Tim are the most important. The majority of the natives are pagans, but many profess Mohammedanism, while Christianity has, latterly, been making some progress in the coast districts. At the end of 1929 more than 45,300 natives had adopted the Roman Catholic, and 12,000 the Protestant faith.

There are 6 district schools, with 6 European masters and 1,559 pupils, besides higher schools at Lomé, Aného and Mango. There are also 29 village schools with 2,204 native pupils, 18 courses for adults, with 600 pupils, a female domestic science school, and private classes arranged by the two missions. In 1930, 2,325,300 francs were voted towards public education.

Inland the country is hilly, rising to 3,600 feet, with streams and waterfalls. There are long stretches of forest and brushwood, while dry plains alternate with cultivable land. Maize, yams, cassada, plantains, ground-nuts, etc., are cultivated by the natives; oil palms, caoutchouc, and dye-woods grow in the forests; but the main commerce is the barter trade for palm oil, palm kernels, coco, rubber and copra carried on with the European factories. There are considerable plantations of oil and coco palms, coffee, coco, kola, and cassada. During recent years the natives have been increasingly engaged in the cultivation of cocoa and cotton. Production of cotton amounted to 1,651 metric tons in 1927, 1,536 tons in 1928, and 2,044 tons in 1929. Production of cocoa amounted to 6,314 tons in 1927, 6,317 tons in 1928, and 5,448 tons in 1929. Other products in 1929 were, palm oil, 1,590 tons; palm kernels, 6,215 tons; maize, 4,141 tons. In the Sokodé and Sansane-Mangu districts in the French sphere there are about 65,000 head of cattle; in some districts horses of small size are bred. Native industries are: weaving, pottery, smith-work, straw-plaiting, wood-cutting, etc. There is no mining by Europeans, but the natives in the Sokodé and Klouto districts smelt iron, in which this Colony is very rich. For 1929, imports amounted to 29,902,687 kilograms, valued at 102,415,761 francs, and exports to 28,579,130 kilograms, valued at 83,741,174 francs. The principal exports were, palm kernels, 9,948,000 francs; cocoa, 30,598,000 francs; ginned cotton, 15,382,000 francs; copra, 2,550,000 francs; dried fish, 4,288,000 francs. The local budget for 1930 balanced at 45,456,000 francs. There was also a railway budget, 22,615,000 francs; and a budget for public health and native medical services, 6,598,000 francs.

There are good roads, connecting the more important centres of the Colony. There are three railways connecting Lomé with Anecho (Little Popo) (27 miles), with Palime (74 miles), and with Atakpame (103 miles). Total, 204 miles, with 5 stations and sub-stations. There are 13 post and telegraph stations and 4 sub-stations, connected by telegraph and telephone with the Gold Coast Colony, French Dahomey, and with Europe.

AUSTRALASIA AND OCEANIA.

NEW CALEDONIA AND DEPENDENCIES.

Governor.—M. Guyon (M. Thaly acting 1930).

New Caledonia is administered by a Governor assisted by a Privy Council consisting of the Secretary-General, the Procureur-Général (the head of the Judicial administration), the Superior Commandant of the Troops, the head of the Department of Domains and Colonisation, and two notables of the colony appointed by the President of the Republic. The colony has also an elective Council-General of 15 members. Nouméa, the capital, has a municipality; other centres of population are locally administered by municipal commissions.

The island is situated between the 20° 1' and 22° 26' parallels south latitude, and 161° 30' and 144° 40' east longitude. It has a total length exceeding 248 miles and an average breadth of 31 miles. Area, 8,548 square miles. According to the census of July 1, 1926, the population was 51,816, of whom 14,893 were free, 1,281 of convict origin, and 27,490 Melanesians and Polynesians. On July 1, 1930, the native population was 27,777. Nouméa had (1926) 10,226 inhabitants, of whom 6,430 were free. The immigrants from France are not numerous. Other immigrants (July 1, 1930) were 6,000 Javanese, 7,000 Tonkinese, 64 Indians, and 244 islanders from the New Hebrides. Primary instruction is provided in public and also in private elementary schools, the former being assisted by the local budget. In 1930, there were 48 public and private primary schools with 2,403 pupils (1,161 being girls), and 67 native schools with 3,147 pupils. In Nouméa the 'Collège La Pérouse' gives classical tuition to 203 pupils and professional instruction (iron and wood) to 60 pupils. Local budget for 1930, receipts and expenses, 36,495,900 francs, of which 33,400,000 francs were for the ordinary budget, and 3,095,900 extraordinary budget. In 1925 the military force consisted of 95 Europeans and 69 native troops. Of the total area more than half is mountainous or not cultivable; about 1,600 square miles are pasture land; about the same area is cultivated or cultivable; and about 500 square miles contain forest which is being worked. The land is divided into 3 domains: that of the state (in which gratuitous concessions may be made); that of the penal establishment (about 400 square miles); and that of the native reserve. The chief agricultural products are coffee, copra, cotton, manioc (cassava), maize, tobacco, bananas, pine-apples. There are 200,000 cattle and about 25,000 sheep. The mineral resources are very great; chrome, cobalt, nickel, iron, and manganese abound; antimony, mercury, cinnabar, silver, gold, lead, and copper have all been obtained. The nickel deposits are of special value, being without arsenic. Local industries are developing; there are a grain storage and cleaning dépôt, meat preserving works, barking mills for coffee and cotton, and two blast furnaces melting nickel ore. A hydro-electric factory was established in 1926. About 128,000 hectares of mining land are owned, and 137,000 hectares have been granted for prospecting. In 1930, mineral export comprised chrome ore, 53,522 tons; nickel, 6,743 tons; guano. The value of the mineral export was 16,141,307 francs. The blast furnaces produced 6,743 tons matte of nickel valued at 32,171,976 francs. The imports in 1930 were valued at 144,721,403 francs, and the exports at 80,898,413 francs. The imports comprise wine, coal, flour, rice; the exports, minerals, coffee, copra, cotton, guano, and preserved meats. In 1930, 112 vessels of 237,111 tons entered and 109 of 233,791 tons cleared at the ports of New Caledonia. Of those which entered, 74 (128,339 tons) were French. Nouméa is connected once monthly with Sydney in New South Wales by regular steamers sailing monthly, and by other vessels sailing irregularly. There is a mail service by steamer along the coast. There is a narrow-gauge railway (single line) from Nouméa to Paita, about 20 miles long. The proposed extension to Bourail, 105 miles from Nouméa, has, however, been postponed. There is a daily motor road service for passengers from Nouméa to Muéo, but most of the roads are only suitable for horseback transport. There are 970 miles of telegraph line and 707 of telephone line.

Dependencies of New Caledonia are:

1. The Isle of Pines, 30 miles to the south-east, with an area of 58 square miles and a population of about 600.
2. The Wallis Archipelago, north-east of Fiji, with an area of 40 square miles and about 4,500 inhabitants. The islands were placed under the French protectorate in 1842. There is a French Resident, and the archipelago is in regular communication with Nouméa. Budget for 1931, 335,896 francs.
3. Futuna and Alofi, south of the Wallis Islands, with about 1,500 inhabitants, were annexed by France in 1888.
4. The Loyalty Islands, 60 miles east of New Caledonia, consisting of 3 large islands, Maré, Lifou, and Uvéa, and many small islands with a total area of about 800 square miles. The chief culture in the islands is that of coconuts; the chief export, copra and rubber.
5. The Huon Islands, 170 miles north-west of New Caledonia, a most barren group.

The New Hebrides, in accordance with the Anglo-French convention of February (ratified in October), 1906, are jointly administered by the High Commissioners of His Britannic Majesty and the French Republic,

In 1914 an Anglo-French conference was appointed to devise means of remedying the defects of the condominium. Population (census of May 1, 1924), 2,161. In 1925 there were 746 French and 322 English. There are French and English courts, and a mixed court with a judge foreign to both nations. Local budget for 1930, 3,810,000 francs. Exports in 1930 amounted to 31,064,079 francs, of which 24,278,850 were French trade, and 6,785,629 francs British trade; imports were 19,535,138 francs, of which 14,596,280 francs were in French trade, and 4,938,858 in British trade. Maize, coffee, cotton, cocoa, vanilla, coconut trees are grown, and are the chief articles of export. In some places sulphur is abundant. In 1930, 64 vessels of 139,228 tons entered, and 66 vessels of 140,024 tons cleared the ports. Of those entering 18 were British (12,299 tons), and 35 French (103,897 tons). Of those clearing 18 were British (12,933 tons), and 37 French (104,159 tons).

GERMANY.

(DEUTSCHES REICH.)

ON November 9, 1918, the abdication of the German Emperor was announced, and from that date Germany became a Republic.

(For the constitution of the Empire and its rulers see THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK for 1918, pp. 881-884.)

Constitution and Government.

The Council of People's Commissioners in Berlin took over the Government of the country; the reigning princes of the Federal States were either deposed or abdicated, the existing Imperial Parliament was declared dissolved, and arrangements were made for summoning a National Assembly. The elections for the body (for which all Germans, men and women, over 20 years of age voted) were held in January, 1919, and resulted, on the basis of proportional representation, in the return of the following parties:—Majority Socialists, 165; Centre (Catholic) Party, 90; Democrats, 75; Conservatives, 42; Independent Socialists, 22; German People's Party, 22; and minor parties, 7; total, 423. The National Assembly was summoned to meet at Weimar on February 6 and on February 11, 1919, it elected the first President of the Republic, Friedrich Ebert, who held office from February 11, 1919, until his death on February 28, 1925.

President of the Republic.—Paul von Hindenburg. Elected the second President on April 26, 1925; assumed office on May 12, 1925. Re-elected on April 10, 1932.

The President is elected by the direct vote of all citizens, male and female, over 20 years of age. The election must be held either on Sunday or on a day of public rest. The President holds office for 7 years.

On October 9, 1931, the following Cabinet was appointed :—

Chancellor.—Dr. Heinrich Brüning (Centre).

Minister for Foreign Affairs.—The Chancellor (ad interim).

Minister of Finance and Vice-Chancellor.—Hermann Robert Dietrich (German Democratic Party).

Minister of Justice.—Dr. K. Joël.

Minister of Defence.—Lieut.-General Wilhelm Groener.

Minister for Home Affairs.—The Minister of Defence (ad interim).

Minister of Economic Affairs.—Dr. Hermann Warmbold

Minister of Transport.—Gottfried Reinhold Treviranus (People's Conservative Party).

Minister of Labour.—Dr. Adam Stegerwald (Centre).

Minister of Food and of Agriculture.—Dr. Martin Schiels (Nationalist).

Minister of Posts.—Dr. G. Schaetzel (Bavarian People's Party).

Minister without Portfolio.—Dr. Hans Schlange-Schoeningen (German Farmer's Party), (November 6, 1931).

The Constitution of the Republic was adopted on July 31, 1919, by the National Assembly at Weimar, and promulgated on August 11, 1919. It declares that the new Commonwealth is a Republic and that the power of the State is derived from the people. The colours of the Republic are black, red and gold. The trade flag is black, white, and red with the colours of the Reich in the upper inside corner. The Constitution provides for Central and State Legislative organs ; makes foreign relations, defence, customs duties taxation and railway services matters for the central authority ; lays it down that every component State in the Federation must have a Republican Constitution, with a universal, equal, direct, and secret franchise of male and female voters on the proportional system. A State Council (Reichsrat) is to be formed for the representation of the component States (Länder). All Bills (Gesetzesvorlagen) before they are introduced into the Reichstag require the assent of the Reichsrat, but the Reichstag can pass a Bill into law with a two-thirds majority over the head of the Reichsrat. The principle of the Referendum is provided for in the Constitution. The Constitution further declares all Germans equal before the law, and abolishes all privileges or disadvantages of birth, class, or creed. Freedom of speech and of the Press is guaranteed ; so is the right of meeting. Members of the Legislature of the Republic (Reichstag) are to be elected by universal, equal, direct and secret votes of male and female voters, on the proportional system. The Reichstag is to be elected for 4 years, one representative for every 60,000 voters. The Cabinet appointed by the President must enjoy the confidence of the Reichstag. Declarations of war and conclusions of peace are made by a law of the Republic.

The Reichsrat consists of 66 members (Prussia 26, Bavaria 11, Saxony 7, Württemberg 4, Baden 3, Thuringia, Hesse and Hamburg 2 each, and the other States 1 each).

The Reichstag, elected on September 14, 1930, is composed as follows : Socialists, 143 ; National Socialists (Hitler Party), 107 ; Communists, 77 ; Centre Party, 68 ; German National People's Party, 41 ; German People's Party, 30 ; German Agricultural Party, 26 ; Middle Class Party, 23 ; German State Party, 20 ; Bavarian People's Party, 19 ; Minor Parties, 23 ; total, 577.

According to the Treaty of Versailles (June 28, 1919) Germany has agreed to the following territorial arrangements:—(1) Alsace-Lorraine ceded to France, (2) the greater part of the Provinces of West Prussia and Posen ceded to Poland, (3) a part of Upper Silesia and of East Prussia likewise to Poland, (4) a portion of Upper Silesia to Czechoslovakia, (5) Memel to Lithuania, (6) Danzig, a Free State under the protection of the League of Nations, (7) Eupen and Malmédy to Belgium, (8) a part of Schleswig to Denmark.

Provision was made in the Treaty to settle the ultimate fate of the following areas by plébiscite:—(1) The Saar Basin (after 15 years), (2) Schleswig (in two zones), (3) districts in Southern East Prussia, in West Prussia and in Upper Silesia. Results of the plébiscites:—Schleswig (March, 1920), northern zone for Denmark, southern zone for Germany; East and West Prussia (July, 1920) for Germany; Upper Silesia (March, 1921) for Germany. Despite the decision in Upper Silesia, 1,241 square miles, with a population of 892,537, were transferred to Poland.

An estimate of the actual areas and populations (according to the Census of 1910) lost to pre-war Germany has been made as follows: Alsace-Lorraine, 5,607 square miles, population 1,874,014; ceded to Belgium, 400 square miles, population 60,003; ceded to Poland, 17,816 square miles, population 3,854,961; Memel, 1,026 square miles, population 141,238; Danzig, 739 square miles, population 330,630; ceded to Denmark, 1,542 square miles, population 166,348; ceded to Czechoslovakia, 122 square miles, population 48,446; total 27,252 square miles, population 6,475,640.

The Saar Basin, which has been placed under the government of the League of Nations for 15 years, has an area of 737 square miles and a population (1927) of 770,030.

The population of the German Empire (without Heligoland) was 24,831,396 in 1816, and 31,589,547 in 1837, showing an average annual increase of nearly 1·3 per cent. The following table shows the actual increase in population at various periods, with the annual rate of increase per cent. The small increase in 1867-71 is explained by the intervention of the war with France.

Year	Increase	Annual Rate per cent.	Year	Increase	Annual Rate per cent.

The number of foreigners in Germany, according to the census of June 16, 1925, was 957,096, or 15·3 per 1,000 of the total population of the country. Poles numbered 259,804, Austrians 128,859, Czechoslovaks 222,521, British 6,376, and French 7,290.

III. PRINCIPAL TOWNS.

German towns are distinguished as large towns (with 100,000 inhabitants and upwards); medium towns (20,000–100,000 inhabitants); small towns (5,000–20,000 inhabitants), and country towns (2,000–5,000 inhabitants). In 1925, 2 towns had over 1,000,000 inhabitants; 22 others over 250,000; 24 others over 100,000; 44 between 50,000 and 100,000; and 151 between 20,000 and 50,000. According to the results of the census of June 16, 1925, the population of the principal towns at that date was:—

Religion.

According to the census of June 16, 1925, there were in Germany 40,014,677 Protestants (64.1 per cent. of the total population), 20,193,334 Catholics (32.4 per cent.), 87,580 other Christians (0.1 per cent.), 564,379 Jews (0.9 per cent.), and 1,550,649 adherents of other professions of religion (2.5 per cent.).

The Constitution provides for entire liberty of conscience. There is no State Church. Every religious community manages its own affairs, and makes appointments to its offices without interference from the State.

The Evangelical Churches are now united in the German Evangelical Church Union.

There are 6 Roman Catholic archbishoprics, 15 suffragan bishoprics, 1 bishopric immediately subject to Rome, 2 parts of bishoprics attached to non-German bishoprics, and 1 apostolic administration. The 'Old Catholics' have a bishop at Bonn.

The Jewish congregations are federated in the 'Deutsch-Israelitischer Gemeinde-Bund.'

Education.

Education is general throughout Germany, all children between the ages of 6 and 14 being bound to attend some recognized school. The teachers in German schools are required to hold a Government certificate, and to have undergone a period of training and probation.

According to a school census taken in 1926-27 there were in that year 52,825 public elementary schools in Germany with 186,853 teachers (140,198 males and 46,655 females), and 6,681,794 pupils (3,357,717 boys and 3,304,077 girls). There were in 1926-27, 572 private schools with 36,991 pupils (15,211 boys and 21,780 girls).

According to the law of April 28, 1920, German children are all bound to receive a four years' course of instruction in the 'Foundation School' (Grundschule). The next highest school for elementary education is the 'People's School' (Volksschule), which, like the Grundschule, is supported partly by the State (mostly for personnel), and partly by the municipalities (mostly for school buildings, etc.). Besides the Volksschule there is found the 'Middle School' (Mittelschule), which differs from the former in that instruction is provided in English and French. In 1926-27 there were 1,550 Mittelschulen with 12,195 teachers and 259,300 pupils (120,153 boys and 139,147 girls). Apprentices and young people at work must attend Continuation Schools for 6 to 8 hours weekly during working hours.

To prepare for the Universities and for admission into certain professions, there are several kinds of secondary schools with a course of study extending in the main over 9 years. Of these the oldest is the Gymnasium, which specializes in classical studies; side by side with this is the Realgymnasium, which specializes in mathematics, natural science and modern languages, but also teaches classical subjects. The Gymnasien are the most fully developed classical schools; the Progymnasien differ from these only in not having the highest classes. The Oberrealschulen give instruction in mathematics, natural science and modern languages, but not in classics. Experimentally two other kinds of schools have been established—the German High School (Deutsche Oberschule) and the Aufbauschule, the former to stress German subjects (besides modern languages), and the latter to provide an intensive and curtailed high school education for the bright scholars of elementary schools.

For girls there are Lyceen, Oberlyceen and certain other educational institutions which prepare for the universities.

In 1926-27 the number of secondary schools was as follows:—For boys, Gymnasien and Progymnasien, 495, with 9,392 teachers and 166,667 pupils; Realgymnasien and Realprogymnasien, 355, with 7,024 teachers and 139,441 pupils; Oberrealschulen and Realschulen, 561, with 10,723 teachers and 206,712 pupils. For girls, High Schools, 866; with 15,354 teachers and 269,591 pupils; in addition to pupils in 'Preparatory Schools' (Vorschule) connected with higher educational establishments (3,090 boys and 19,442 girls).

There are 10 fully-equipped Technical High Schools, with the right of granting degrees. They are all aided by the States to which they respectively belong. The statistics for the session 1930 were as follows:—

<sup>3</sup> In addition to 1,376 on leave or excused attendance at lectures, of whom 923 were inscribed at the Berlin Technical High School, besides 611 special students.

There are, besides, the following (number of students in 1930 shown in brackets): 2 Veterinary Colleges (806), 3 Agricultural Colleges (1,185), 2 Afforestation Academies (184), 2 Mining Academies (445), 5 Commercial High Schools (3,695), 1 Academy for Practical Medicine (242), 14 Schools of Art (2,071), and 11 Colleges of Music (3,875). ### Justice and Crime.

A uniform system of law courts exists throughout Germany, though, with the exception of the Reichsgericht, all courts are directly subject to the Government of the special State in which they exercise jurisdiction, and not to the Central Government. The appointment of the judges other than those of the Reichsgericht is also a State function, and not that of the Central Government.

The lowest courts of first instance are the Amtsgerichte (1,737 on January 1, 1931), competent to try petty civil and criminal cases, with the exception of capital cases which fall within the jurisdiction of the Court of Assizes, or the Reichsgericht. Cases relating to property in which the amount involved does not exceed 1,000 marks are usually tried by a single judge. In the trial of more serious criminal cases the judge is assisted by two assessors (laymen), to whom on the request of the public prosecutor a professional magistrate may further be added (Schöffengericht). The Amtsgerichte deal also with guardianships, estates and official records. The Landgerichte (159 on January 1, 1931) contain both civil and criminal chambers. The former, consisting of three judges, are competent to deal in first instance with all civil cases in as far as they have not been referred to the Amtsgerichte, especially with divorces, and also exercise a revisory jurisdiction over the Amtsgerichte. For trying commercial cases there are further commercial chambers, consisting of one judge and two laymen. The criminal chamber hears appeals from the Amtsgerichte in criminal cases; if the appeal is from the decision of a single magistrate it is heard by one judge with two lay assessors (small chamber); if from a decision of the Schöffengericht, by three judges and two laymen (large chamber). For the trial of capital cases, the Landgerichte are transformed into Schwurgerichte, consisting of three judges and six laymen. The Amtsgerichte and Landgerichte have as superior court the Oberlandesgerichte. There are twenty-seven such courts in Germany. The Oberlandesgerichte contain criminal and civil senates consisting of three judges. They exercise appellate jurisdiction over the Landgerichte in civil cases, and over the 'small chambers' (and in some cases over the 'large chambers') in criminal cases. The total number of judges on the bench in all the courts above mentioned was 10,095 (Jan. 1, 1931). The supreme court is the Reichsgericht, which sits at Leipzig, and has 96 judges. This court exercises an appellate jurisdiction over all inferior courts, and also an original and final jurisdiction in cases of treason. It has 4 criminal and 9 civil senates, consisting of 5 judges each.

Number of persons condemned after trial, 1927, 612,315 ; 1928, 588,492 ; 1929, 595,656.

Special courts exist for all civil disputes arising from the relationship between employers and employed (Arbeitsgerichte, Landesarbeitsgerichte, and the Reichsarbeitsgericht). Qualified judges are appointed to these judicial bodies and they are attended by representatives of employers and employed. In 1930 there were 462 Arbeitsgerichte, 64 Landesarbeitsgerichte and the Reichsarbeitsgericht. The Arbeitsgerichte gave decisions in 438,449 (in 1929, 427,604) cases, and settled by arbitration 3,968 (in 1929, 3,247) cases. The Landesarbeitsgerichte dealt with 20,042 (1929, 16,738) appeals. The Reichsarbeitsgericht received 953 (1929, 959) cases for revision.

Public Assistance (including Poor Relief and Welfare for Children and Juveniles).

The public assistance for the needy was regulated before the war by the law of June 6, 1870, relating to poor relief. This law, however, was already found inadequate at the beginning of this century to meet the conditions brought about as a result of the economic development (industrialisation, development of towns, etc.). When, as a result of the war and inflation period, whole classes of the population became poverty-stricken, gradually new methods of assistance were devised to meet the conditions that had arisen. The various regulations laid down in this connection could, however, only be uniformly codified for the whole Reich after the stabilisation of the German currency under the 'Government regulation regarding public assistance' of February 13, 1924.

The public assistance (within the meaning of this regulation) comprises the social care of those wounded in the war, dependents of those killed and persons who, according to the welfare laws, are regarded in a similar way ; assistance for persons in receipt of pension from sick and employment insurances, those badly wounded and those who find it difficult to obtain employment, minors in need of help and actual poor law relief is granted by the authorities for public assistance, the District and State Welfare Associations.

The public assistance for juveniles includes all official means for the promotion of youth welfare. This was first legally regulated in the 'Government Law relating to Juvenile Welfare' (Reichsjugendwohlfahrtsgesetz) of July 9, 1922. This law contains, inter alia, regulations relating to the rearing of children (mother and infant care, care of small children), co-operation of the authorities in regard to trusteeships, guardianship, assistance in education and Juvenile Courts ; the care of the youthful offenders was amended in the law relating to Juvenile Courts of February 16, 1923.

The importance of the State Juvenile Welfare Law lies in the fact that it alone grants to all juveniles, who require to be educated, the legal right to education, to physical, spiritual and social fitness ; in cases where the parents (or others who are bringing up the child) fail in their duties the existing public bodies (Juvenile Boards—Jugendämter) have to ensure their education in another manner.

Particulars regarding the extent of public welfare and public care of juveniles in Germany were published for the first time for the year 1927 in State Welfare Statistics (Reichsfürsorgestatistik), and the State Statistics of Public Care of Juveniles (Reichsstatistik der öffentlichen Jugendhilfe). The total of 1,072 District Welfare Associations publicly assisted 2,757,515 persons during the year 1929–30. In addition, 993,834 persons were helped temporarily, and 362,436 were provided for permanently by institutions (institutional or indoor relief). Assistance in cash and kind by the District Welfare Associations for Public Welfare, inclusive of maternity relief, amounted to 1,162,988,900 RM. (gross costs).

The State Welfare Associations (Landesfürsorgeverbände) assisted 465,546 persons during the year 1929–30. The costs of these amounted to 127,418,100 RM.

Besides these direct grants, the Welfare Associations had to meet various other costs (for example, contributions for own installations, free welfare work, costs of administration, etc.). After deducting the corresponding receipts for public welfare and public juvenile care by the District and State Welfare Associations 1,578,070,200 RM. were spent during the year 1929–30.

The 1,238 Juvenile Boards were caring for 698,467 children on March 31, 1930 ; 633,629 minors were under 'guardianships' of the Boards, and 73,014 under their protection.

The costs for public juvenile care are included in the above-mentioned welfare costs ; the data supplied by the District Welfare Associations include, inter alia, expenses in connection with education and bringing-up of minors (22,553,200 RM.), juvenile care and physical training (16,424,000 RM.), contributions to orphanages, homes, etc. (10,989,800 RM.), cripple, kindergarten and similar institutions (21,305,500 RM.), and other expenses in connection with public juvenile assistance (8,210,400 RM.). According to the data supplied by the State Welfare Associations, the costs amount to 29,229,100 RM. for assistance to juveniles, and 7,973,800 RM. for other contributions in connection with public juvenile assistance.

Compulsory Insurance.

Social insurance has existed in Germany since 1883. It comprises compulsory insurance of workmen and employees against sickness (including maternity), accidents, unemployment, old age and infirmity.

Under a law of 1883 and amending Acts, workmen and employees with an annual income up to 3,600 marks must be insured against sickness, and must themselves pay two-thirds of the contributions, their employers paying one-third. For accident insurance, under an Act of 1884 and amending Acts, the contributions are paid entirely by the employers, and they, for mutual protection, have been obliged to unite into associations according to the nature of the industries in which they are engaged. The working of these insurance associations is controlled by Government. For invalidity and old age insurances, under an Act of 1889 and amending Acts, the contributions are paid half by the workmen and half by their employers, while towards each pension the Government grants an annual subsidy. The employers are responsible both for their own and the workmen's contributions. The latter must be deducted from wages and paid subsequently. Insurance for old age pensions for employees was introduced by law of December 20, 1911, and amending Acts, 65 being the pensionable age. Unemployment Insurance was introduced by the law of July 16, 1927, to take the place of the Unemployment Welfare which had been in existence since the end of the war.

The State makes a grant for invalidity and old age insurance, also provides for maternity benefit.

For the year 1929 the average of those insured against sickness was 21,995,000. Of this total, 22,418,000 (20,173,000 men and 12,535,000 women) were insured in ordinary societies, and 788,000 in Knappschaften or societies for miners, and 1,462,000 in supplementary offices. In 1929, about 24,000,000 persons were insured against accident in 66 industrial and 40 agricultural societies.

The total receipts in 1929 of the ordinary societies were 1,961,758,000 RM., of the Knappschaften 147,458,000 RM., and of the supplementary offices 186,098,000 RM. The total expenditure of the ordinary societies was 1,888,961,000 RM., of the Knappschaften 119,538,000 RM., and of the supplementary offices 183,698,000 RM. The number of cases and days of sickness amounted with the ordinary societies to 11,798,000, and 278,171,000, and with the Knappschaften to 611,000, and 15,723,000 respectively. For accident insurance the receipts (1930) were 442,000,000 RM., and the expenditure 425,200,000 RM. For invalidity and old age insurance the receipts in 1929 were 1,629 million RM., and the expenditure was 1,324 million RM.; including state subsidy of 393 million RM., appropriations for pensions 770 million RM., other appropriations 98 million marks. The excess of receipts over expenditure was in 1929, 305 million RM., total resources 1,582 million RM. On January 1, 1931, the current benefits for old age, invalidity and sickness amounted to 2,227,000, and pensions to widows and orphans to 642,000 and 649,000, respectively; for the insurance of employees the receipts in 1930 were 548 million RM. and the expenditure 225 million RM.; for the miners' societies the receipts in 1930 were 191 million RM., and the expenditure 240 million RM.; for unemployment insurance the receipts in 1930 were 1,660 million RM. and the expenditure 1,062 million RM.

There is in addition compulsory insurance for clerical workers. The number insured is not known exactly; on the basis of the monthly contributions paid it can be estimated at 3.5 million persons at the beginning of 1930. As insurance for clerical workers is comparatively new, the number of beneficiaries is increasing considerably from year to year. At the end of 1930 there were 125,566 persons receiving old-age pensions (27.3 per cent. increase over 1929), 63,512 widows' pensions (15.5 per cent. increase), and 37,207 orphans' pensions (8.8 per cent. increase). Contributions in 1930 totalled 385,174,000 RM., total receipts 547,821,000 RM.; pensions accounted for an expenditure of 175,821,000 RM., health insurance benefits 27,153,000 RM.; other benefits 7,797,000 RM., and administration expenses 12,867,000 RM. The excess of receipts over expenditure was, in 1930, 323,045 million RM.

Defence.

I. ARMY.

Under the terms of the Treaty of Versailles, and in accordance with the law of March 23, 1921, enlistment is voluntary and for 12 years. Officers have to engage to serve for 25 consecutive years on appointment. The Reichswehr is organized in 7 divisions of infantry and 3 divisions of cavalry, with two army corps headquarter staffs. The strength of an army corps staff is 30 officers and 150 N.C.O.'s and men; of an infantry division, 410 officers and 10,830 men; of a cavalry division, 275 officers and 5,250 men. The total strength of the army in 1931 was 4,500 officers and 100,500 other ranks. The President is the supreme head of all land and sea forces. Under his orders the Minister of National Defence exercises actual command through the medium of a General Officer appointed chief of the army command, organized as follows :—

By June, 1921, the fortresses specified in the Treaty of Versailles, and also the coast defences of Kiel and Heligoland had been razed. The fortifications on the southern and eastern frontiers may remain in the condition in which they were when the Treaty of Versailles became operative, but according to the request of London (May 5, 1921), all German fortresses had to surrender their equipment, with the exception of Königsberg, which was permitted to retain 38 guns. The maximum armaments authorised are 84,000 rifles, 18,000 carbines, 792 heavy machine guns, 1,134 light machine guns, 63 trench mortars, 189 light trench mortars, 204 7·7 cm. field guns, and 84 10·5 cm. howitzers. No military aircraft is permitted.

The army estimates for 1929-30 amounted to 484,983,000 gold marks, and the actual expenditure 545,185,000 marks.

II. NAVY.

The German Navy is now mainly a coast-defence force and is directed and administered by the Chief of the Naval Department, under the Ministry of National Defence. In addition to the central administrative division are the Office of Naval Command (staff), the General Naval Office (supply and research), the Constructional Division, also the Naval Administrative Office, and some departments dealing with the relations of the Navy to the Defence Ministry, which also controls the Army.

The Treaty allows to the German Government the right of maintaining a navy, recruited and maintained on a volunteer basis. The fleet consists of four pre-Dreadnoughts completed between 1906 and 1908, each displacing approximately 13,000 tons and mounting four 11-inch and from ten to fourteen 6·7 or 6-inch guns. They are the Hannover, Hessen, Schlesien, and Schleswig-Holstein. They possess little fighting value, though a certain amount of money has been spent in modernising them. The 26-knot battleship Deutschland, of 10,000 tons, to be driven by Diesel engines, is to be completed by the autumn of 1932. A second ship of this type was laid down in June, 1931. It is proposed to lay down two similar units during 1932-34. These vessels are officially rated as 'armoured ships'; each will mount 6 11-inch and 8 6-inch guns. The cruisers include the Berlin, completed 1904, and mounting 10 4·1-inch guns; the Emden, completed at the end of 1925, armed with 8 6-inch guns; the Königsberg, Karlsruhe, Köln, and Leipzig completed 1929-31, armed with 9 6-inch guns. By treaty the cruisers built since the war are limited to a standard displacement of 6,000 tons. There are also 26 destroyers and torpedo-boats, 14 of which date from 1907-13; the remainder were built in 1926-29 to replace worn-out vessels. All these ships are maintained in an efficient state. No submarines or naval aircraft are permitted.

The battleships, cruisers and torpedo-boats are divided equally to constitute squadrons severally in the North Sea and the Baltic. The cruisers Karlsruhe and Emden are training ships, and have recently made extensive cruises with naval cadets and men.

The total personnel may not exceed 15,000, including a maximum of 1,500 officers and warrant officers. The officers and warrant officers engage for a minimum of twenty-five consecutive years, and the petty officers and men for twelve years. The vessels of war are to have a fixed allowance of arms, munitions, and material.

Naval Estimates: 1928-29, 212,029,000 marks; 1929-30, 180,000,000 marks; 1930-31, 191,855,000 marks.

Production and Industry.

I. AGRICULTURE.

Generally speaking, small estates and peasant proprietorship prevail in the West and South German States, while large estates prevail in the north-east.

The subdivision of the soil, according to the latest official returns for Germany, without the Saar, at the beginning of June, 1931, was as follows (in acres):—Arable land, 51,212,687; grass, meadows, pasture, 20,408,475; vineyards, 206,362; orchards, market gardens, etc., 1,591,795; total area under cultivation, 73,419,825 acres.

The areas under the principal crops, in acres, and the yields, in metric tons (1 metric ton = 2,204 lbs. or '984 an English ton), were for three years as follows:—

Of the whole forest area 9,110,040 acres are under deciduous trees, oak, birch, ash, beech, etc., and 22,525,403 acres bear pine, larch, red and white fir, etc. The forest area in 1931 was 31,939,772 acres, or 27 per cent. of the total area of Germany.

III. MINING.

The great bulk of the minerals raised in Germany is produced in Prussia, where the chief mining districts are Westphalia, Rhenish Prussia, and Silesia, for coal, iron and metal smelting works, Central Germany for brown coal, the Harz for iron and copper ore, and the Westerwald for iron ore. Saxony has coal mines.

In 1925 there were 2,942 mines in Germany employing 808,593 persons (797,350 men, and 11,243 women). Number of blast furnaces in 1930, 165; in 1929, 182; in 1928, 184.

IV. FISHERIES.

In 1930 the yield of the North Sea fisheries was 281,770,900 kilos of fish; and of the Baltic fisheries, 32,007,500 kilos of fish.

V. MANUFACTURES.

The chief seat of the German iron production is the Ruhr; to a less extent also in Sieg, Lahn, and Dill districts. Steel is chiefly made in the Ruhr. The manufacture of both iron and steel is carried on in the vicinity of the coal mines in the district of the Lower Rhine, and in Westphalia. The electrical industry is found principally in Berlin. The chemical industry is centred on the Rhine, near Mannheim, the Main and Cologne, and in Prussian Saxony. Saxony (Free State) is the leading State in the production of textiles, but Silesia and Westphalia also produce linen; Saxony (Free State), Rhenish Prussia, Westphalia, Württemberg, and Bavaria produce cotton goods. Woollens are manufactured in several Prussian provinces, also in Saxony, Bavaria, and Thuringia; silk in Rhenish Prussia and Baden. Beetroot sugar is an important manufacture in Prussia, chiefly in the provinces of Saxony, Silesia, Hanover, and Pomerania. Potash is produced mainly in Prussian Saxony, Thuringia, and Hanover. Glass, porcelain, and earthenware in Silesia, Thuringia, Bavaria, and Saxony; clocks and wooden ware in Baden, Württemberg, and Bavaria; and beer principally in Bavaria.

The following are the statistics of the beet sugar manufacture in Germany :—

Internal Communications.

I. RAILWAYS.

On April 1, 1920, all the various German State railways were transferred to the Central Government. On October 11, 1924, as a result of the adoption of the Dawes Scheme, the German railway system was transferred to a private company—the Deutsche Reichsbahn-Gesellschaft—which manages and administers the system. The railways, however, remain the property of the State. The total length of railway line was 58,295 kilometres, or 36,231 miles on December 31, 1930. Of this total 53,795 kilometres, or 33,434 miles are State lines.

In 1930, 399,544,176 tons of merchandise including free-hauled were carried by the Deutsche Reichsbahn-Gesellschaft. The number of passengers (including military) was 1,829 million, who travelled 48,298 million kilometres, an average of 23·7 kilometres per journey per passenger.

In 1929 there were 4,009 miles of tramway, and 5,994 miles of light local railways.

II. CANALS AND NAVIGATION AND AIRWAYS.

The length of inland waterways in 1930 was 12,371 kilometres, or 7,689 miles. Of this total 10,020 kilometres or 6,228 miles are rivers or canalised rivers, and 2,351 kilometres or 1,461 miles are canals. ## Currency, Banking and Credit.

By the Currency Law of August 30, 1924, which came into operation on October 11, 1924, the currency was once more established on a gold basis, with the following gold coins as legal tender: 20 and 10 Reichsmark pieces. Provision was also made for silver coins of 1, 2, 3 and 5 marks, and for 1, 2, 4, 5, 10, and 50 pfennig. The notes of the Reichsbank (10 marks and upwards) are likewise legal tender; they have a minimum cover of 40 per cent. of their face value in gold and foreign exchange; three-quarters of this cover must consist of gold and the remainder of good commercial paper, complying with specified conditions. For the present the convertibility of these notes is suspended. Besides the Reichsbank there are the four so-called 'private note banks': (1) Bayerische Notenbank, in Munich; (2) Sächsische Bank, in Dresden; (3) Württembergische Notenbank, in Stuttgart; and (4) Badische Bank, in Karlsruhe, which also have the right of issuing notes (50 marks and upwards), on the same terms as the Reichsbank. They may issue notes up to a total of 194 million Reichsmarks.

On October 16, 1923, a proposal was adopted for the setting up of a Renten Bank to issue notes (Rentenmark) secured (since August 30, 1924) by first mortgages in gold marks on the entire German landed property.

On September 30, 1931, there were in circulation Reichsbank notes to the value of 4584·4 million marks; 'Private Bank' notes (see above), 183·6 million marks; notes of the Rentenbank (all of which must be withdrawn by the Reichsbank within 10 years), 422·2 million marks; and coins 1112·1 million marks; making a total of 6302·2 million marks.

The condition of the Reichsbank of Germany on February 14, 1932, is shown as follows (in thousands of marks):—

Assets	Amount February 14, 1932	Liabilities	Amount February 14, 1932
Gold . . . . .	924,682	Capital and reserves . . . . .	487,881
Bills and cheques . . . . .	3,253,631	Notes . . . . .	4,155,282
Loans . . . . .	187,926	Other liabilities . . . . .	1,224,198

By the Bank Law of August 30, 1924, the privileges of the Reichsbank were renewed for 50 years.

The Renten Bank commenced operations on November 15, 1923; it is now in liquidation and the process is expected to be completed by April 11, 1935 at latest. On September 30, 1931, its only credits outstanding were those to the Central Government, which amounted to 427·5 million Rentenmarks. The Renten Bank had issued notes to the value of 427·5 million Rentenmarks, of which the Reichsbank had 5·4 million Rentenmarks, cash in hand, and the rest (422·2 million Rentenmarks) were in general circulation.

By a law of March 19, 1924, there was established the German Gold Discount Bank (Deutsche Golddiscountbank) for the purpose of providing foreign currencies for German business. The capital of the institution is 10 millions sterling, one half provided by the Reichsbank (with the aid of English credits); the other half, from private sources, is not wholly paid up. On August 31, 1931, the German Savings Banks had deposits amounting to 10504·9 million Reichsmarks.

The capital of the Reichsbank is 150,000,000 Reichsmarks.

Money, Weights, and Measures.

The Reichsmark, of 100 Reichspfennig, is of the normal value of 11½*d.*, or 20·43 Reichsmark to the pound sterling. It contains 0·358423 grammes of gold. The metric system of weights and measures is in force.

On November 22, 1918, the Grand-Duke abdicated, and the Provisional Government proclaimed Baden a Republic.

Constitution.—The Constitution of the Republic of Baden was determined by the National Assembly which met on January 5, 1919, and which was elected on the basis of equal, secret, direct, universal suffrage (with proportional representation) of all males and females over 20 years of age. Qualified electors over 25 years of age are eligible as members of the Chamber. No fixed number of seats has been provided for, but generally one member is allocated for each 10,000 voters. The present Landtag, elected on October 27, 1929, will continue until October 27, 1933; it contains the following parties :—Centre, 34; Socialists, 18; German Democratic Party, 6; German Nationalist People's Party, 3; German People's Party (Liberals), 7; Communists, 5; Economic and Farmers' Party, 6; Evangelical People's Party, 3; National-Socialist German Labour Party, 6; total 88.

Duke Maximilian I. of Bavaria was elevated to the rank of Elector of the Holy Roman Empire in the Thirty Years' War; and Elector Maximilian Joseph was raised to the rank of king by Napoleon I. in 1805. On November 22, 1918, the dynasty was deposed, and Bavaria was declared a Republic.

Constitution and Government.—On the outbreak of the Revolution the Government was taken over by a Cabinet under the leadership of Kurt Eisner, an Independent Socialist. PRUSSIA.

(FREISTAAT PREUSSEN.)

On November 13, 1918, Prussia was proclaimed a Republic.

Until that date the country was ruled by sovereigns of the Hohenzollern family, the last of the line being William II (1888–1918). For an account of the rise of Prussia, see THE STATESMAN'S YEAR BOOK for 1922, p. 973.

Constitution and Government.

The Constitution, adopted on November 30, 1920, gives a vote to every citizen, male and female, over 20 years of age in general, equal, secret, and direct suffrage. Prussia is declared to be a Republic. Besides the Diet (Landtag) there is a State Council (Staatsrat) elected by the Provincial Assemblies on the basis of one representative for every 500,000 inhabitants. The function of the State Council is to advise the Diet, and is intended to be a kind of parallel institution to the Reichsrat in the Empire. The Diet elects the Premier, and he appoints the other members of the Cabinet. The Diet is elected for 4 years on the principle of proportional representation by secret and direct ballot.

The Prussian Constituent National Assembly, elected by universal, equal, and secret suffrage of men and women, met on March 14, 1919.

On May 20, 1928, the elections were held for a Parliament, and resulted in the return of the following parties : 137 Social Democrats ; 71 Centre (Catholics) ; 82 German National Party ; 6 National Socialists ; 40 German People's Party ; 21 Democrats ; 56 Communists ; 21 Economic Party ; 4 German Hanoverians ; 8 Farmers' Party ; 2 German Race Party ; 2 People's Right Party. Total, 450.

The Cabinet appointed on April 4, 1925, is composed as follows :—

Prime Minister.—Otto Braun (Socialist).

Minister of National Welfare.—H. Hirtsiefer (Centre).

Minister of Justice.—Dr. Hermann Schmidt (Centre). Appointed March 6, 1927.

Minister of Commerce.—Dr. Schreiber (Democrat).

Minister of the Interior.—Karl Severing (Socialist). Re-appointed October 22, 1930.

Minister of Finance.—Otto Klepper. Appointed November 9, 1931.

Minister of Education.—Adolf Grimme (Socialist). Appointed January 30, 1930.

Minister of Agriculture, Domains, and Forests.—H. Steiger (Centre).

For local government Prussia is divided into Provinces, Government districts (Regierungsbezirke), urban circles (Stadtkreise), and rural circles (Landkreise). According to the Constitution, there are 14 Provinces. Urban circles consist of towns of over 25,000 inhabitants; rural circles consist of the smaller towns and rural communes (Landgemeinden). For provinces and rural circles the local authorities of the constituent areas elect assemblies which appoint executive committees. Each province has a governor (Oberpräsident); each government district has a president, and deals chiefly with local affairs of State concern. In towns the deliberative authority is the town council (Stadtverordnetenversammlung), elected on the system of proportional suffrage. The executive is a magistracy with the burgomaster as president. Each rural circle has a Landrat. Local administrative business varies according to the nature of the administrative division. The matters dealt with are such as poor-relief, roads, light railways, etc., but in rural districts they include agricultural interests, and in towns, education, sick-insurance, valuation, collection of certain taxes, management of gas, water, and electric works, etc.

GREECE.

(HELLENIC REPUBLIC.)

GREECE gained her independence from Turkey in 1821-29, and by the Protocol of London, of February 3, 1830, was declared a kingdom, under the guarantee of Great Britain, France, and Russia. The crown was accepted by Prince Otto of Bavaria, who ascended the throne January 25, 1833, being under the age of eighteen. He was expelled the Kingdom, after a reign of 29 years, in October, 1862, which event was followed by the election, in 1863, under the directing guidance of the three guaranteeing Powers, of King George I. George I., who was assassinated on March 18, 1913, was succeeded by his son Constantine, who reigned until June 11, 1917, when he was excluded from the throne by the allied Powers. Alexandros, second son of King Constantine, then reigned till his death on October 25, 1920. Constantine returned to Greece on December 19, 1920, reigned until his abdication on September 27, 1922, and died in exile on January 11, 1923. He was succeeded by his eldest son George II, who was forced to leave Greece on December 18, 1923.

Mount Athos, the easternmost of the three prongs of the peninsula of Chalcidice, is inhabited by the monks of Greek (17), Russian (1), Bulgarian (1), and Serbian (1) monasteries and hermitages (Sketari). The monks and the novices till the fields, tend the vineyards, take in the harvest, fish, weave, transact business in their own shops, and, indeed, carry on the secular duties of the community as well as the sacred. Originally inhabited by one mediæval ascetic, Peter the Athonite, it has in the course of time grown to a religious colony of 4,858 males (Census of 1928), distributed in 20 monasteries with their respective dependencies; and after having passed in the fifteenth century from the sovereignty of the Greek Emperors of Byzantium to that of the Sultans it fell again into the hands of the Greeks, who occupied it in November, 1912. Each of the 20 monasteries is a sort of little republic in itself, those of the 'coenobitic' category being ruled by abbots elected by the brethren of the monastery, while the 'idiorrhhythmic' monasteries are administered by a board of overseers (epitropoi) elected for a certain term of years. Hitherto the peninsula has been administered by a Council of 4 members, and an Assembly of 20 members, the latter consisting of 1 deputy from each monastery. The Greek government on September 10, 1926, recognized the autonomous form of government existing in Mount Athos for centuries and ratified it by Articles 106-109 of the Constitution. It has also sanctioned by a law the Charter of Mount Athos, which was drawn up at the extraordinary double meeting held by representatives of its 20 monasteries on May 20, 1924.

Since 1925, there has been a fiscal Free Zone in the town of Salonika covering an area of 245,180 square yards on land and 188,988 square yards on water. Since 1924 there has been a Yugoslav Free Zone in the port of Salonika with an area of 78,536 square yards on land and 40,119 square yards on water with 909 miles of railway.

Religion.

According to the census of 1928, there were 5,961,529 adherents of the Greek Orthodox Church, 35,182 Catholics, 9,003 Protestants, 126,017 Mussulmans, 72,791 Jews and 162 belonging to other religions. By the terms of the Constitution of 1864, the Greek Orthodox Church was declared the religion of the State, but complete toleration and liberty of worship was guaranteed to all other sects. The government of the Orthodox Church is at present vested in a permanent council, called the Holy Synod, consisting of the Metropolitan of Athens as president and 8 bishops, who must during their year of office reside at Athens. The Orthodox Church has 33 archbishops in the old territory and 47 archbishops and 7 bishops in the new territories. By agreement with the Œcumenical Patriarchate of Constantinople in 1929 the sees within the spiritual jurisdiction of the latter in the new territories were provisionally attached to that of the Holy Synod of Athens for convenience in administration.

Education.

All children between the ages of seven and twelve years must attend school, but the law is not well enforced in country districts.

There were (1928-29) 381 infant schools with 396 teachers and 15,114 pupils (8,867 boys and 6,247 girls); 8,062 primary schools with 11,895 teachers and 621,281 pupils (355,654 boys and 265,267 girls). For secondary education there were 697 high schools with 2,836 teachers and 101,792 pupils (75,349 boys and 26,443 girls). There were 27 commercial schools with 276 teachers and 3,211 pupils (2,440 boys and 771 girls). There are 11 agricultural schools in Greece with 92 teachers and 345 pupils. There were also 8 seminaries with 65 teachers and 882 pupils. There was also 1 commercial high school with 92 teachers and 461 pupils, 5 military colleges with 57 teachers and 758 students, 20 practical schools for officers with 121 teachers and 547 students, and 4 other inferior military schools with 60 teachers and 1,384 pupils; also 2 naval colleges with 25 teachers and 81 students, and 6 inferior naval schools with 76 teachers and 790 pupils. There are 2 universities in Athens, the National University (founded 1836) and the Capodistria University, with 102 professors and 6,102 students (5,593 men and 509 women); and 1 at Salonika (founded in 1925), with 32 professors and 373 students (338 men and 35 women). The Polytechnic, with 5 faculties, 38 professors and 457 students, provides instruction in electricity, chemistry, mechanics, architecture, surveying. The School of Fine Arts provides instruction in painting, sculpture, etc., with 11 professors and 233 students (127 boys and 106 girls).

The Ministry of Education is also charged with the Service of Antiquities, managed by an Archaeological Council, which is responsible for the conservation and reparation of ancient monuments of all periods (Prehistoric, Classical, Byzantine and Mediæval), the upkeep of museums and the conduct of excavations.

British scholarship is represented in Athens by the British School of Archaeology, which, by the aid of grants from the Government, universities, and private subscribers, is able to encourage and carry out scientific research of all kinds, but especially art, archaeology and history. Members of the school have in recent years been responsible for the excavations at Knossos, in Crete, in Melos, at Sparta, in Thessaly, at Mycenæ, and elsewhere. There are also similar French, American, Italian, Austrian and German institutions.

The service on this debt during the fiscal year ended March 31, 1931, is estimated at 3,728,861,412 drachmai.

In accordance with the peace preliminaries between Greece and Turkey and the Greek Law of Control of March, 1898, the financial commission of delegates representing France, Great Britain, and Italy (the mediating Powers) is established at Athens in direct relation with the Greek Minister of Finance. The public debt of Greece is in large measure under the control of this commission. To this commission were assigned, for the payment of the interest on the external debt, the revenues (for the most part in Old Greece) from certain Government monopolies, the stamp duty, and the import duties at the port of the Piræus. The total income from these sources was, 1931, 209,926,240 drachmai from monopolies, and 990,431,581 from the Piræus customs. The surplus at the disposal of the Greek Government was 2,888,935,975 drachmai in 1928 and 2,786,841,493 drachmai in 1929.

The collection of the assigned revenues and the administration of the monopolies are entrusted to a Greek Company, called the 'Société de Régie des Revenues affectés au Service de la Dette Publique,' which is under the control of the international commission.

Defence.

I. ARMY.

Military service in Greece is compulsory and universal. It commences in the 21st year, and lasts up to the 50th. The normal term of service in the active army is one year for all arms, followed by 19 years in the first reserve of the active army and 8 years in the second. The normal annual contingent of recruits is about 60,000. Each annual contingent is called up for service in the active army in two batches on March 1 and September 1.

The country is divided into 12 military areas. To these correspond 12 divisions and 1 brigade. Moreover there are two brigades of cavalry and a number of units (telegraphists, railwaymen and engineers), as well as of Army Service Corps directly under the Minister of War. Each division contains 2 or 3 regiments of infantry (6 battalions) and one regiment of Mountain Artillery (3 or 4 batteries). The Air Force consists of 3 flying regiments each of 4 flights.

The effective strength in 1931 was 4,975 officers and the number of other ranks serving varied from 34,000 in August to 78,000 in December.

Production and Industry.

Greece is mainly an agricultural country. Of the total area only one-fifth is cultivable. The total area under cultivation in 1929 was 1,544,629 hectares (3,815,233 acres). Forest area is 2,406,502 hectares (5,944,059 acres), of which 4,121,119 acres were State owned.

By the draining of Lake Copais, an area of about 53,000 acres has been acquired for agricultural purposes. Irrigation and drainage canals, farm roads and buildings are being constructed, tree planting is undertaken, and the breed of cattle is being improved.

The acreage and production of the chief crops for two years were as follows:—

Internal Communications.

There are about 8,611 miles of roads in Old and New Greece, and 570 miles under construction. There is a canal (opened November 9, 1893) across the Isthmus of Corinth (about 4 miles). In 1929, 6,158 steamers of 3,436,830 tons and 2,980 sailing vessels of 77,997 tons passed through the canal.

Railways were open for traffic in 1929 for a length of 1,667 miles, of which 821 miles were operated by the State. Before the war with Turkey (1912-13) Greece was completely isolated by land from the rest of Europe, but on May 8, 1916, the railway was completed between Gida, on the Salonika-Monastir line, and Papapouli, on the Thessalian frontier, a distance of 56 miles, whereby Greece was linked up with the European railways. The Government has also purchased from England for two million francs the Salonika-Angista-Stavros line, 42 miles long, which was built by the British during the war. The operating revenues of the State railways in 1929 reached 358,206,578 drachmai, while operating expenses were 305,066,297 drachmai, other expenses 15,402,178 drachmai.

The National Bank (founded in 1841) was authorised to issue bank notes, the amount being increased each time the privilege of the bank was extended. According to a decree of May 12, 1928, the note-issuing privilege of the National Bank was transferred to the new issuing bank, the Bank of Greece, as from May 14, 1928, in accordance with the conditions of the Geneva Protocol of September 15, 1927. By the same decree, the drachma was stabilised, its gold content being fixed at 0.01952634 grammes of gold, corresponding to 77.02 drachmai to the U.S. dollar. The new paper money is to be in circulation within five years. Meantime, notes of the National Bank for 20, 1,000 and 5,000 drachmai, overprinted with the name of the Bank of Greece will be issued. On February 7, 1932, the total bank-note circulation amounted to 3,794,211,000 drachmai; total gold, 869,358,000 drachmai.

GUATEMALA.

(REPÚBLICA DE GUATEMALA.)

Constitution and Government.

THE Republic of Guatemala, established on March 21, 1847, after having formed for twenty-six years part of the Confederation of Central America, is governed under a Constitution proclaimed December, 1879, and modified in 1887, 1897, 1918, and finally in July, 1927. The present Constitution came into effect January 1, 1928. The legislative power is vested in a single-chambered National Assembly, consisting of representatives (one for every 30,000 inhabitants) chosen by universal suffrage for 4 years. In addition a Council of State of 7 members, 3 elected by the National Assembly, and 4 appointed by the President of the Republic, has supervision of public concessions and contracts, and large advisory powers. The President is elected for 6 years, and barred from re-election for a period of 12 years.

On May 27, 1927, the Foreign Ministers of Guatemala, Honduras and Salvador signed a convention binding the three countries to a unified foreign policy in the recognition of governments, declarations of war and other matters; this has been ratified by Salvador.

Manuel Estrada Cabrera ruled as dictator for 22 years but was overthrown in 1920. Several short-lived dictatorships followed until the election of General Lazaro Chacon who held office from 1926 to 1931.

President of the Republic.—General Jorge Ubico (February 14, 1931).

The administration is carried on, under the President, by the heads of seven departments—of Foreign Affairs, Government and Justice, Finance and Public Credit, Public Instruction, Public Works, War, and Agriculture.

Area and Population.

Area estimated at 109,724 sq. kilometres, or 42,353 square miles, but the boundary with Honduras has long been in dispute; in 1930 both countries agreed to submit it to arbitration. The population, according to the 1920 census, was 2,004,900. About 60 per cent. are pure Indians, most of the remainder being mixed Indian and Spanish (ladinos); the ruling classes are of European descent. There are about 25,000 foreigners. A system of peonage prevails on the large plantations. Guatemala is administratively divided into 22 departments, each with a governor appointed by the President.

The capital is Guatemala City, with 165,928 inhabitants, almost all ladinos or descendants of Europeans. Other towns are Quezaltenango, 30,125, Coban, 26,774, and Zacapa, 18,094.

Religion and Education.

Roman Catholicism is the prevailing religion; but all other creeds have complete liberty of worship. Guatemala has an archbishopric.

In 1929-30 there were 3,188 primary schools with 4,625 teachers, and 88,846 pupils and 65 professional, normal, secondary and special schools with an enrolment of 4,058. The Bureau of Indian Education maintains (1928) 1,451 rural and ranch schools with 1,808 teachers and 27,142 Indian pupils of whom 16,248 were previously illiterate. The University of Guatemala was established in 1910. The National Central Institute confers degrees which are recognised in all the Central American Republics. Among the other institutions are a School of Handicraft for Women, a National Conservatoire of Music, a School of Art, and a College of Pharmacy and Natural Sciences. The national library contains 20,000 volumes.

Justice and Crime.

Justice is administered in a supreme court, 6 appeal courts, and 26 courts of first instance. All judges, under the 1927 constitution, are appointed by the National Assembly. In all the municipalities there are Justices of Peace.

Finance.

Ordinary revenue and expenditure in currency (1 quetzal = 1 U.S. dollar):—

—	1926-27	1927-28	1928-29	1929-30	1930-31 <sup>1</sup>
	Quetzales.	Quetzales.	Quetzales.	Quetzales.	Quetzales.

Customs duties (imports and exports) provided 8,024,373 quetzales in 1929-30, or about 62 per cent. of the revenue. Public debt took 3,329,100 quetzales in the 1930-31 budget. British investments are estimated at £5,000,000; American at 75,107,000 dollars (U.S. Department of Commerce, 1931), and German at 12,500,000 dollars, principally in coffee plantations.

On June 30, 1930, the external funded debt was 12,588,325 quetzales, on which the interest and amortisation took 2,258,438 quetzales; in addition there was an interest-bearing internal debt of 2,411,755, a non-interest-bearing internal debt of 1,197,610 and a floating debt of 155,450. Total, 16,197,690 quetzales. Total, December 31, 1930, 20,916,732 quetzales.

Defence.

Military service is compulsory between the ages of 18 and 50. Service in the active army is for 1 year. The effectives for 1929 were 397 officers and 6,394 other ranks, organised in 2 infantry corps of 14 companies and 4 groups of artillery. The military estimates for 1931-32 were 1,900,528 quetzales.

Production and Industry.

The Cordilleras divide Guatemala into two unequal drainage areas, of which the Atlantic is much the greater. The Pacific slope, though comparatively narrow, is exceptionally well watered and fertile between the altitudes of 1,000 and 5,000 feet, and is the most densely settled part of the Republic. The Atlantic slope is sparsely populated and has little of commercial importance beyond the timber cutting of the Peten, coffee cultivation of Coban region, and banana raising of the Motagua Valley and Lake Izabal district.

The soil in general is exceedingly fertile and agriculture is the most important industry. The principal crop is coffee, accounting for about 80 per cent. of total exports; coffee exports in 1929, 662,184 bags; in 1930, 853,093 bags. Germans own and control between 30 and 40 per cent. of the coffee plantations of Guatemala. Next to coffee, banana is the most important export crop; exports, 1930, 4,874,319 stems; sugar output in 1929, 13,556,875 lbs.; maize, beans and rice, forming the diet of the population, are the most important domestic crops. Guatemala has almost a monopoly of the chicle gum used for chewing in the United States; exports in 1930 were valued at 587,807 quetzales. Crop diversification is encouraged by agricultural experiment stations maintained jointly by the International Railways of Central America and the United Fruit Company. Cattle-grounds (potreros) occupy about 758,640 acres. Census of 1930 showed 416,397 cattle, 183,537 sheep, 79,251 pigs, 63,117 horses, 21,413 goats and 37,049 mules and asses.

The forest area has an extent of 1,316,482 acres. The department of Petén is rich in mahogany and dye woods, for which there is a ready market in the United States.

There are silver, gold (output in 1929, 8,530 ounces), copper, iron and lead mines, but owing to the lack of transport, mining is little developed. Chrome was discovered in 1916.

Commerce.

Value of the commerce for 5 years (1 quetzal = 1 dollar, U.S.):—

	1926	1927	1928	1929	1930
	Quetzales	Quetzales	Quetzales	Quetzales	Quetzales
Imports . . .	21,084,178	19,785,880	21,464,324	30,399,067	16,473,970
Exports . . .	28,968,050	33,915,225	28,211,572	24,928,229	23,577,819

In 1930, 59·40 per cent. of the imports came from the United States, 8·54 per cent. from Great Britain, 12·77 per cent. from Germany, 2·94 per cent. from France, and 2·79 per cent. from Italy; 39·06 per cent. of the exports went to the United States, 35·16 per cent. to Germany, and 15·65 to Holland.

Total trade between Guatemala and the U.K. for 5 years (according to Board of Trade Returns):—

	1927	1928	1929	1930	1931
	£	£	£	£	£
Imports from Guatemala to U.K. .	69,897	56,584	89,580	57,748	88,266
Exports to Guatemala from U.K. .	434,028	457,508	437,098	230,906	195,787
Re-exports to Guatemala from U.K. .	7,854	11,583	7,818	4,153	2,399

Shipping and Communications.

In 1929, total tonnage of vessels entered and cleared was 2,082,805 tons. The chief ports on the Atlantic side are Puerto Barrios, which handles three-fourths of the country's imports, and Livingston; on the Pacific side, San José, chief port for exports, and Champerico.

The principal railway system is the American-owned International Railways of Central America which represents a consolidation of the Guatemala Railway (198 miles), the Guatemala Central Railway (139 miles), the Occidental Railway (51 miles), and the Ocos Railway (22 miles). Total mileage, 652. The lines extend from Puerto Barrios to Guatemala City, a distance of 198 miles, thence to San José de Guatemala, on the Pacific Ocean, a distance of 74 miles. This route carries both freight and passengers from the Atlantic to the Pacific more quickly than the Panama Canal, and promises eventually to be a formidable rival for fast traffic. The system extends northward to Ayutla on the Mexican border where it connects with the Pan-American Railway of Mexico. All roads are of 3 ft. gauge. Total mileage of all lines in 1929 was 691 miles. In 1930 the Government completed the first national electric railway in Central America; it connects Quetzaltenango with San Felipe.

There are (1929) 1,396 miles of highways. Motor traffic is possible almost everywhere during nine months of the year.

There are 379 post-offices. The national telegraph lines have a length of 4,357 miles, and the telephones, 4,950 miles. There are 283 telegraph offices and 112 central telephone stations; number of telephones in use, 1,992. Radio stations have been opened at Quezaltenango, San Marcos, and Guatemala City with service to Peten, Puerto Barrios, and other places. There is a broadcasting station at Fort San José.

Air-mail and passenger service connects Guatemala City with Puerto Barrios, Zacapa, Quezaltenango, Mazatenango, La Libertad, and with Mexico City; in 1930, 1,366 passengers and 3,314 tons of mail were carried.

Banking, Money, Weights and Measures.

The creation of the Central Bank of Guatemala, with an authorised capital of 10,000,000 quetzales (2,500,000 quetzales paid up in 1928), and the exclusive right to issue paper money for 10 years, was decreed on June 30, 1926. Total circulation of banknotes on December 31, 1930, was 5,445,435 quetzales, exclusive of 1,095,262 quetzales representing notes of the old banks not yet called in and cancelled. Gold coin, at home or abroad, totalled 2,957,037 quetzales.

Other important banks are: Anglo-South American Bank; Pacific Bank and Trust Co. (1927), paid-up capital, 1,000,000 dollars; National City Bank of New York; Bank of Guatemala (1895); Western Bank of Quezaltenango (1881); Agricultural Mortgage Bank.

The unit of currency is the gold quetzal, equal to the United States dollar. Gold coins in circulation, 20, 10, and 5 quetzales; quetzal notes in circulation, 100, 20, 5, 2, and 1. Silver coins are in circulation of the value of 1,  $\frac{1}{2}$ , and  $\frac{1}{4}$  quetzales, and 10 cents and 5 cents. The inconvertible paper currency has been stabilised at the rate of 60 pesos to the quetzal, and is being gradually withdrawn from circulation. U. S. paper is current but coin is not accepted generally except in Puerto Barrios. Notes in circulation (no longer issued) are for 500, 100, 50, 25, 20, 5 and 1 pesos and there are copper-aluminium coins for 5, 1, and  $\frac{1}{2}$  pesos, and for 1 cent.

HAITI.

(RÉPUBLIQUE D'HAÏTI.)

Constitution and Government.

THE Republic of Haiti, formerly a French colony, was proclaimed independent January 1, 1804, and is now governed under a Constitution ratified on June 12, 1918, and considerably amended in January, 1928. After being in abeyance since 1917 (their functions performed by the Council of State, nominated by the President) the Senate and Chamber were revived in October, 1930. The President is now elected by the 36 deputies and 15 senators, sitting as a National Assembly, for a period of six years.

President of the Republic.—Sténio Vincent ; elected November 18, 1930.

The administration of the Republic is carried on, under the President, by ten departments supervised by five Secretaries of State. The President receives an annual salary of 24,000 dollars.

In November, 1915, both Houses of the Haitian Congress ratified a treaty with the United States by which the latter agreed to assist in the establishment of responsible, orderly government. The treaty, which expires in 1936, provided for a number of American Advisers to the Haitian Government, appointed by the President of Haiti on the recommendation of the President of the United States; these still supervise the constabulary and finances, but public health, public works, and agricultural training were handed over in 1931 to Haitian officials.

Area and Population.

The area of the Republic, which embraces the western portion of the island of Haiti—the larger but less populated eastern division forming the Dominican Republic—is estimated at 10,204 English square miles. On January 1, 1927, the estimated population was 2,300,200, excluding 3,000 white foreign residents and the military forces of the United States. The majority of the population are Negroes; there are also great numbers of Mulatto Haitians, the descendants of the former French settlers. Capital, Port-au-Prince, with 79,797 inhabitants, situated on a large bay and possessed of an excellent harbour. Cap Haitien has an estimated population of about 22,000; Cayes and Jacmel about 12,000 each; Gonaives, 10,000; Port de Paix, 5,000. The official language of the country is French, though most of the common people speak a dialect known as Creole French.

Religion and Education.

The religion is Roman Catholicism. There is an archbishop with 4 suffragan bishops. The Catholic clergy are French.

Public elementary education is free, the country being divided into 24 inspectors' districts. In 1910 education was made compulsory. The sum allotted for public instruction amounts to nearly 1,000,000 dollars annually, chiefly for agricultural education, but the educational system is still very imperfect, especially in rural districts. In the 6 national lycées in 1925-26 there were 1,042 pupils, in 11 private secondary schools, 3,219 pupils; in 14 national primary schools, under friars, 5,820 pupils; and in 34, under nuns, 7,440 pupils. During 1927-28, 48 rural farm schools had 5,464 pupils. In 1926-27, 85 private city primary schools had 5,517; 417 national rural primary schools, 25,348 pupils; 115 religious national rural primary schools, 5,868 pupils; 240 national urban primary schools, 24,462 pupils.

Justice.

Justice is administered by a Court of Cassation, appointed for 10 years, and by lower courts appointed for 7 years. All the judges are nominated by the President and are irremovable, except on impeachment.

Finance.

About 90 per cent. of the revenue of Haiti is derived from customs, paid in American gold on exports and imports. In 1928-29 debt charges absorbed 30 per cent. of revenue.

The following table shows the revenue and expenditure (fiscal year ending September 30) for five years (in United States dollars; 5 gourdes = 1 U.S. dollar):—

	1926-27	1927-28	1928-29	1929-30	1930-31
Revenue . . . . .	7,765,200	10,084,200	8,504,400	7,729,638	6,349,316
Expenditure . . . . .	8,728,920	8,632,262	8,824,000	8,367,031	7,038,014

Customs receipts, 1930-31, amounted to 5,112,556 dollars. The unpledged cash surplus in the Treasury, December 31, 1930, was 2,854,869 dollars. In 1922, the Government secured an American loan of 16,000,000 dollars for the conversion of the two external loans in France, the cash settlement of outstanding debts and for public works; a second loan was secured in 1923 for 2,660,000 dollars to meet the default on the government-guaranteed National Railway Bonds. Total foreign debt, May 31, 1931, was 13,173,565 dollars. The internal debt amount-d (same date) to 12,953,605 gourdes. American direct investments (1931, U.S. Department of Commerce), amounted to 15,191,000 dollars, including 8,000,000 dollars in sugar industry.

Defence.

An armed constabulary (Garde d'Haiti), both urban and rural, was instituted in 1916. The officers are in part drawn from the United States Marine Corps and Navy, who, according to present plans, will retire by 1936. The establishment (1931) consists of 97 officers and 2,950 non-commissioned officers and men.

Production.

The industries of Haiti are mainly agricultural. The most important product is coffee of excellent quality grown by peasants. Production, 1928-29, 28,556,000 kilos. Cocoa is grown extensively and cotton is exported in increasing quantities. The cultivation of tobacco is extending; production in 1927-28 reached 2,500,000 lbs. Sugar is likewise grown, and there are 2 sugar-making establishments. An extensive sugar central, founded with American capital, has been constructed near Port-au-Prince. Rum and other spirits are distilled but not exported: the rum is of a superior quality. Logwood is an important product, and other valuable woods are now exported. Cattle breeding is encouraged.

Haiti possesses considerable mineral resources quite undeveloped. Gold, silver, copper, iron, antimony, tin, sulphur, coal, kaolin, nickel, gypsum, limestone and porphyry are found but are little worked.

Commerce.

Imports and exports for 4 fiscal years ending September 30 (in U.S. dollars):—

—	Imports	Exports	—	Imports	Exports
	Dollars	Dollars		Dollars	Dollars
1928 .	20,248,257	22,667,246	1930 .	12,841,626	14,144,567
1929 .	17,287,922	16,723,883	1931 .	9,576,818	8,963,419

In 1929-30, the principal exports were coffee, 34,321,114 kilos valued at 10,406,472 dollars (about 78 per cent. in value of total exports); raw cotton, 5,124,551 kilos (1,571,731 dollars); logwood, 26,775,964 kilos (488,323 dollars); cacao, 2,272,863 kilos (395,000 dollars). France took 49·7 per cent. of all the exports. Imports to the extent of 70 per cent. (15,246,598 dollars) came from the United States.

Total trade between Haiti and the U.K. for 5 years (Board of Trade Returns):—

—	1927	1928	1929	1930	1931
	£	£	£	£	£
Imports from Haiti to U.K.	162,455	165,012	166,974	149,745	195,582
Exports to Haiti from U.K.	181,656	888,889	180,162	166,921	110,847
Re-exports to Haiti from U.K.	1,484	2,927	2,822	1,908	2,288

Shipping and Communications.

Several lines of steamers (American and Dutch) connect the ports of Haiti with New York, and others (British, French, Dutch and German) with Europe.

Port-au-Prince is connected with Cap Haitien by a road 169 miles long, and with Mirebalais and Lascahobas by a road 33 miles long. Total length of motor road in 1930 was 935 miles. A light railway has been constructed from Port-au-Prince to Lake Assuéi (28 miles), and to Léogane (22 miles), but the traffic is small. The 'National Railroad of Haiti' runs from Port-au-Prince to Verrettes, distance 85 miles. Port-au-Prince has 5 miles of tramway. The two railroads, the National and the P.C.S. (Compagnie des Chemins de Fer de la Plaine de Cul de Sac) are both American-owned.

The principal towns are connected by the Government telegraph system, with 1,490 miles of wire in 1927. A cable runs from the Mole St. Nicholas to Santiago de Cuba and from the Mole to Port-au-Prince, and also to Cap Haitien, whence it runs to Puerto Plata (Santo Domingo) and to New York and South America. The All-America Cables has a cable to Haiti.

There were 92 post offices in 1930.

Port-au-Prince has a modern automatic telephone exchange; 1,200 miles of telephone cables connect 46 commercial and 17 local exchanges.

Money, Weights, and Measures.

The Banque Nationale de la République d'Haiti, established October 21, 1910, with a capital of 10,000,000 francs (present capital, 2,000,000 dollars), undertakes to render services to the Government in respect of loans and other matters; it has a monopoly of the note issue. In 1916, the National City Bank of New York purchased control over this bank. The Royal Bank of Canada has branches at Port-au-Prince and Cape Haiti.

The unit of currency is the Gourde which has a fixed value in relation to United States currency, i.e. 1 gourde is equivalent to 20 cents U.S. currency. Stock of money on December 31, 1930, 4,902,332 dollars (U.S.) in notes, of which 1,194,981 dollars were in U.S. Government notes and 3,707,351 were in notes of the Banque Nationale; gold coinage amounted to 156,518 dollars and subsidiary silver coinage to 13,014 dollars. Of the notes outstanding, 1,940,500 dollars were held by the Central bank as a reserve. To reduce the use of American money the Banque Nationale was authorized in April, 1928, to issue notes of 20, 50 and 100 goudes.

Use of the metric system of weights and measures has been made obligatory since July 1, 1922.

HONDURAS.

(REPÚBLICA DE HONDURAS.)

Constitution and Government.

ON September 15, 1821, the State of Honduras declared its independence of Spain and set up as a Republic which is governed under a charter proclaimed on October 3, 1824. The present Constitution was re-written in 1924. Legislative power is vested in a single chamber, the Congress of Deputies consisting of 43 members, chosen for 4 years by popular vote, in the ratio of one per 15,000 inhabitants. It meets for 60 days on January 1 each year. A Permanent Commission of five members sit whilst Congress is not in session for the transaction of such routine business as usually falls to the latter. The President is elected by popular vote for 4 years, holding office from February 1st.

President.—Dr. Vicente Mejia Colindres. Assumed office February 1, 1929.

The administration of the Republic is carried on by a Council of six ministers, to whom are entrusted the departments of Foreign Relations, Interior and Justice, War and Navy, Treasury and Public Credit, Public Works and Agriculture, and Instruction.

Area and Population.

Area about 44,275 English square miles, with a population, on June 29, 1930 (census), of 859,761, or 19.4 inhabitants to the square mile. Wild tribes are estimated to number over 35,000. The inhabitants are chiefly Indians with an admixture of Spanish blood. On the north coast there is a considerable proportion of negroes, chiefly employed by the fruit exporting companies, of whom about 10,000 are British subjects. The Republic is divided into 17 departments and one territory. La Mosquitia is still practically unexplored and is inhabited by native races who speak little or no Spanish.

The capital of Honduras is Tegucigalpa, with (census of June, 1930) 40,049 inhabitants. Other towns are Pespire, 7,132; Nacaome, 8,152; La Esperanza, 11,453; Santa Rosa, 10,574; Choluteca 8,065; San Pedro Sula, 7,820. The main ports are Amapala on the Pacific, and, on the Atlantic, Puerto Cortez (2,500), Omoa (1,000), La Ceiba, Trujillo Puerto Castilla, and Tela. The port of entry for the Bay Islands is Roatan.

Religion, Education, Justice.

Roman Catholicism is the prevailing religion, but the Constitution guarantees freedom to all creeds, and the State does not contribute to the support of any.

Instruction is free, compulsory (from 7 to 15 years of age), and entirely secular. The school census of 1928 showed 93,576 children of school age, of whom only 35,182 were then receiving education. In 1929-30 there were 1,527 public schools (1,496 under State control), with 1,953 teachers and 57,359 children enrolled. The 13 secondary schools had 609 pupils, the normal schools 1,107, and the commercial schools, 415. There is a school for the teaching of agriculture with about 52 pupils. At Tegucigalpa there is a National University with faculties of Law, Medicine and Engineering (179 students in 1930-31); a technical school with 157 pupils, and also a military school; at Comayagua there is a school of jurisprudence.

The Judicial power resides in the Supreme Court with five judges chosen directly by the people for 4 years; four Appeal Courts, and departmental and local judges. In 1923 a Supreme Court was established at San Pedro Sula to serve the Northern Provinces.

Finance.

For the years stated, ending July 31, the revenue and expenditure are given as follows (the new gold lempira, like the old silver peso, is legally fixed at one-half the value of an American dollar).

Revenue . . .	Lempiras 12,029,870	Lempiras 13,728,368	Lempiras 14,314,299	Lempiras 15,109,620 <sup>2</sup>	Lempiras 16,568,612

Total external debt stood on July 31, 1931, at 10,000,000 lempiras. Payment on debt services, external and internal, in 1929-30, was 2,547,123 lempiras. The external debt, held principally in England and unpaid as to principal or interest since 1872 (totalling by 1925, 30,000,000<sup>2</sup>), has been scaled down to 1,200,000<sup>2</sup> to be repaid in 30 annual instalments of 40,000<sup>2</sup> each, derived from a special Consular tax on imports to Honduras, collected abroad and deposited in New York. In addition the Government has borrowed 300,000% in New Orleans, repayable in monthly instalments of 5,000% at 7 per cent. interest. The internal debt stood at 17,754,948 lempiras on July 31, 1931. American investments (1931) are estimated by the U.S. Department of Commerce at 71,735,000 dollars, principally in railways, mines, and the banana industry.

Defence.

Every citizen of Honduras is liable to serve in the army from the age of 21. Service in the active army is for two years, and in the reserves from the age of 23 to 40. Foreigners are exempt from service, naturalised citizens being exempt for 10 years. Under the terms of the Washington Central American Conventions of 1923 the size of the Regular Army is fixed at 2,500 men, including the National Guard. The strength in 1928-29 was 344 officers and 2,253 men. The military budget for 1930-31 was 1,748,677 lempiras.

Production and Industry.

The chief culture is that of bananas, on the Atlantic coast (28,960,948 bunches exported in 1930-31 almost entirely by three companies; value of banana exports was 22,981,400 dollars, U.S.). The United States took 21,635,022 stems. Coconuts are also grown. The coconut groves of Puerto Sal extend from the Ulua River to the Cuero River, a distance of about 60 miles, and are said to contain over 28,000 fruit-bearing trees. Coffee of fine quality is grown, generally by small farmers (exports in 1930-31, 2,483,236 lbs.), likewise tobacco. The production of sugar from 2 large mills is increasing. Exports in 1930-31, 11,749,951 lbs. Exports of mahogany in 1929-30 totalled 4,147,739 feet, chiefly to the United States.

Honduras is essentially a cattle producing country, and the Government are now taking steps to encourage breeding.

The mineral resources of Honduras are—gold (exports in 1930, 13,567 ounces valued at 280,241 dollars), silver (exports in 1930, 2,957,093 ounces, valued at 1,093,440 dollars, U.S.) copper, lead, zinc, iron, antimony, some of them being found in almost every department. There is only one large mining company, at San Juancito, near Tegucigalpa. Deposits of brown and other coal have also been found.

Straw hats and cigars are manufactured for local consumption and export; 46,947,378 cigars were exported in 1930-31. A good quality of Panama hat is manufactured in the Departments of Copan and Santa Barbara. There is a large number of small factories of all classes in the Republic, chiefly for the manufacture of shoes, soap and candles, beer, non-alcoholic beverages, cigarettes and ice. There is a flour mill at San Pedro Sula.

Commerce.

Imports and exports for 5 fiscal years, ending July 31 (the lempira = 50 cents, U.S.):—

	1926-27	1927-28	1928-29	1929-30	1930-31
	Lempiras	Lempiras	Lempiras	Lempiras	Lempiras
Imports . . .	10,680,415	12,578,595	14,860,981	31,892,257	20,582,845
Exports . . .	17,546,289	28,142,787	24,569,165	52,842,486	40,056,173

The United States takes nearly 75 per cent. of the exports of Honduras, and furnishes 77 per cent. of its imports. Bananas constitute about 90 per cent. of the value of total exports.

COMMUNICATIONS—MONEY, WEIGHTS, AND MEASURES 997

Total trade between Honduras and United Kingdom for 5 years was (according to Board of Trade returns) as follows:—

—	1927	1928	1929	1930	1931
	£	£	£	£	£
Imports from Honduras . . .	1,332,998	826,760	1,108,906	496,415	1,100,049
Exports to Honduras . . .	552,817	185,326	750,323	517,007	88,161
Re-exports to Honduras . . .	2,093	1,627	2,339	2,050	1,643

Communications.

In general, travelling and transport are accomplished by means of mules and ox-carts. Slow improvements in road-making and repairing continue to be made. There is a fair mail service by automobiles, and a daily autobus passenger and freight service connects Tegucigalpa with both the northern and southern sections. The two principal roads are the Carretera del Sur from San Lorenzo, on the Pacific Coast, to Tegucigalpa, 84 miles; and the Carretera del Norte, from Tegucigalpa to Comayagua, and Lake Yojoa, 154 miles. Transport from Lake Yojoa (20 miles across) is continued by road to Potrerillos (25 miles), the head of the railroad to San Pedro Sula and Puerto Cortés. A road from Tegucigalpa to Juticalpa and one from Santa Barbara to San Pedro Sula are being built. Total mileage of motor roads in 1930 was 361 miles. Aviation services connect the principal towns and spread outward to other Central American points.

There is a national railway of 66 miles from Puerto Cortez to Potrerillos, taken over by the Government in 1912 and leased to a fruit company. The other four railroads are owned and operated by the various fruit companies on the north coast. Total length of line (1929) 1,065 miles.

The country has about 1,550 miles of telephone lines and 5,301 miles of telegraph lines. Number of telephones in use, 1,035; number of telegraph offices, 304. Number of post-offices, 1928, 332. Honduras has 6 wireless stations, all owned by foreign companies.

Money, Weights, and Measures.

By a decree of March 9, 1931, the gold lempira (named after a native chief) is the monetary unit; its value is that of 0·836 gramme of gold, 900 fine, or 50 cents, U.S. currency. But as only coins of 20 and 10 lempiras will be coined, the silver peso or dollar, of 100 cents, weighing 25 grammes, ·900 fine (equal in value to the lempira) remains in circulation. The value of the silver peso is legally fixed at one-half the value of an American dollar. The new lempiras have been minted in the United States and were placed in circulation early in 1932. The fractional silver money will consist of 100, 50, and 20 cent pieces. On the north coast the currency is almost entirely American paper money. Silver coins of practically all Latin-American countries circulate freely. Stock of money on December 31, 1930, included 20,000 dollars, U.S., in gold coins, 1,250,000 dollars in silver coins and 460,000 dollars in the notes of the two banks of issue.

There are two banks. One is the Banco de Honduras, founded in 1889, which in 1922 and for a short time thereafter acted as the Bank of the Republic. It still has the power to issue silver notes but does not act as the Government's fiscal agent. The second bank, Banco Atlantida, which belongs mainly to Americans, also issues silver notes which are exchangeable for American currency at the rate of 2 pesos for 1 dollar.

The metric system of weights and measures has been legal since April 1, 1897, but English pounds and yards and the old Spanish system are still in general use :

1 Vara	.	.	.	.	.	= 32 inches.
1 Arroba	.	.	.	.	.	= 25 lb.
1 Quintal	.	.	.	.	.	= 100 lb.
1 Tonelada	.	.	.	.	.	= 2,000 lb.

HUNGARY.

(KINGDOM OF HUNGARY.)

Constitution and Government.

HUNGARY first became an independent kingdom in 1001. On October 31, 1918, a revolution broke out in Hungary with the object of establishing a Republic. On November 13 King Charles issued a letter of abdication, and on November 16, 1918, Hungary was proclaimed an independent Republic (Hungarian People's Republic), of which Count Michael Károlyi became Provisional President. The two Houses of the Legislature were abolished, and their place taken by a Provisional National Council. Th

Károlyi régime continued until March 21, 1919, when its place was taken by a Soviet Government, which proclaimed the dictatorship of the proletariat. An opposition Government was, however, soon set up at Arad and Szeged, which with the assistance of the Rumanian army swept away the Soviet Government, and on August 7, 1919, a National Government was again in the Capital. Elections were held on the basis of universal suffrage in January and February 1920, and the new Parliament considered the period of the revolutions of 1918 and 1919 as de jure a blank space of time, and resolved that the old monarchical constitution should be continued. Hungary was thus considered a monarchy with a vacant throne, the functions of the monarch being exercised by a Regent. It has been decided that the dynastic question shall be solved at such time as the people are freed from external pressure.

Regent.—Nicholas Horthy de Nagybánya. (Elected March 1, 1920.)

The Legislature consists of two houses; the character of the Upper House was represented by a Bill passed on November 11, 1926. According to this the House consists of 6 groups—(1) elected representatives of the former hereditary members, about 38; (2) members elected by the County Councils and municipalities, about 50 members; (3) heads of the various religious communities, about 31 members; (4) high dignitaries—such as judges, the commander-in-chief of the army, the chairman of the National Bank; (5) representatives of scientific institutions, the Chambers of Commerce, about 40 members; and (6) life members appointed by the head of the State.

The Lower House consists of 245 members. At the elections held on June 28, 1931, the following parties were elected:—Party of National Unity (Bethlen Party), 155; Christian Social Union, 32; Socialists, 14; Independent Agricultural Party, 11; other parties, 12; Independents, 21; total 245.

The Ministry originally formed on June 17, 1922, and reorganised on December 19, 1931, is composed as follows:—

Prime Minister and Minister of Social Welfare.—Count Julius Károlyi.

Minister of Foreign Affairs.—Lewis Walko.

Minister of the Interior.—Dr. Francis Keresztes-Fischer.

Minister of Finance.—Baron Frederick Koranyi.

Minister of Agriculture.—Emil Purgly (Feb. 5, 1932).

Minister of Commerce.—Dr. Béla Kenéz.

Minister of Public Instruction.—Dr. Eugene Karafiatk.

Minister of Justice.—Dr. Tibor de Zsitvay.

Minister of National Defence.—Julius de Gombos.

Minister without Portfolio.—John Mayer.

II. LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

In Hungary a distinction is observed between communes which are large or small, and county-towns and municipalities, which are regarded as communes of a higher order. The representative bodies and executives are elected by the inhabitants of the communities concerned who have possessed an electoral right since 1886 on the basis of secret suffrage, which was in 1929 extended to women also. The representative body in the communes and county towns consists half of members elected for six years, and half of persons who pay the highest taxes, but in the representative bodies of the municipalities ("municipal committee") the proportion of those who pay the highest taxes has been reduced to two-fifths of the total number of members. The members of the representative bodies have an authorization for a fixed period. Each community has the right to issue orders within the limits prescribed by law, to be carried out either by its own officials or by the subordinate communities.

Area and Population.

The Treaty of Trianon, signed on June 4, 1920, and ratified by Hungary on November 13, 1920, mentions in general terms the boundaries of the new State with Austria, Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and Rumania. The exact boundaries with Yugoslavia and Rumania are to be determined by a mixed commission. As a result of negotiations with Austria and of the consequent plebiscite, Hungary has obtained Sopron in Western Hungary.

The population of Hungary according to the census of December 31, 1930, is 8,683,740, and its area 35,875 square miles as against a population of 7,989,039 in 1920. Of the total population, 4,245,561 were males and 4,438,179 females.

The following is the division of the total population according to language as estimated on December 31, 1929: Hungarian (Magyar), 7,784,087 (89·8 per cent.); German, 588,959 (6·8 per cent.); Slovak, 149,263 (1·7 per cent.); Rumanian, 25,479 (0·3 per cent.); Ruthenian, 1,534; Croatian, 38,855 (0·5 per cent.); Serbian, 16,778 (0·2 per cent.); others, 61,583.

There is perfect equality among all legally recognised religions, which include the Roman and Greek Catholic, the Evangelical (Augsburg and Helvetian), the Unitarian, the Greek Oriental, the Gregorian-Armenian, the Baptist (since 1905), the Jewish, and the Mohammedan (since 1916). Each has the independent administration of its own affairs.

In 1929, the population according to religion was estimated as follows: Roman Catholics, 5,587,254 (64·5 per cent.); Greek Catholics, 205,121 (2·4 per cent.); Helvetian Evangelicals, 1,797,840 (20·7 per cent.); Augsburg Evangelicals, 531,645 (6·1 per cent.); Greek-Orientals, 53,344 (0·6 per cent.); Unitarians, 6,267 (0·1 per cent.); Jews, 475,949 (5·5 per cent.); others, 9,118.

Education.

Public education in Hungary comprises the following grades:—(1) infant schools; (2) elementary schools; (3) industrial and commercial apprentice schools; (4) primary (city) schools; (5) training colleges for teachers; (6) middle or secondary schools; (7) special schools; (8) universities and colleges.

In 1920, 15.2 per cent. of the population over 6 years of age was illiterate (33.3 per cent. in 1910 on the territory of pre-war Hungary).

School attendance is compulsory for children of six to twelve years at day schools, and then for three years in continuation schools. There were in the school year 1929-30 altogether 1,076 infants' schools and permanent foster-homes with 1,517 female teachers and 115,499 infants, and 4 training colleges for female teachers of infant schools.

In Hungary there were in the school-year 1929-30, 6,794 elementary schools with 908,295 pupils and 19,087 teachers. There were also 4,172 general, 1,473 agricultural continuation schools (or courses) and 53 agricultural public schools with special teachers attached to them. There were 515 apprentice schools, 486 for industrial and 39 for commercial apprentices. The number of industrial apprentices was 62,689 and of commercial apprentices 3,442. There were 20 training colleges for elementary schools for males and 31 for females, with 730 teachers and 8,588 students. The number of primary schools was for boys 132, for girls 193, for both sexes 52, with 63,351 pupils and 4,752 teachers.

In the middle schools the curriculum extends over eight years. They are maintained by the State, by the larger communes, or (in the case of the denominational schools) by ecclesiastical foundations, with sometimes a sub-vention from the State. There were in 1929-1930, 28 gymnasia, 69 realgymnasia, 23 modern schools, and 37 girls' secondary schools. Total number of teachers, 3,068, pupils, 61,087 (47,814 boys and 13,273 girls).

Hungary has four universities and (since 1919) an independent Faculty of Economics at Budapest (43 professors, 1,271 students in 1929-30), all maintained by the State. In 1929-30 the University of Budapest had 380 professors and 5,227 students; the University of Szeged, 85 professors and 1,585 students; the University of Pécs 63 professors and 1,301 students, and of Debrecen 61 professors and 1,301 students—the last two having been founded in 1912. Total number of students at the Universities, 1929-30, 10,691. There are also 17 theological colleges, viz., 13 Roman Catholic, 3 Protestant, and 1 Jewish, with a total of 111 professors and 891 students; and 3 law schools with 34 professors and 832 students; and the veterinary school with 29 professors and 277 students. There are 8 other high schools with 221 professors and 1,686 students.

Justice and Crime.

The Supreme Court in Budapest (curia) is the highest instance in all civil and criminal matters. As courts of first instance, there are county courts (törvényszékek) with collegiate judgeships; district courts (járásbíróságok) with single judges; and jury courts (sajtóbíróságok) for press offences, besides an army special court.

Pauperism.

In Hungary poor relief is in the main left to communal administration. In the smaller communes orphans and the indigent are cared for by official guardians and overseers, while in the larger there are poor-houses, the funds being mostly derived from fines and taxes. The number of asylums for paupers and orphans is about 300. The Church and charitable societies also render assistance, and several millions of pengös are annually bestowed in legacies and gifts towards benevolent purposes.

Defence.

According to the Treaty of Trianon, Hungary is authorised to maintain an army of 35,000 officers, non-commissioned officers and men. The Treaty laid down that conscription was to be abolished, and consequently recruiting on a voluntary basis has been substituted. All recruits have to undertake to serve in the Army for a minimum period of 12 consecutive years, at least 6 of which are to be with the colours. Officers now serving will continue to do so until they attain the age of 40 years at least. Officers newly appointed must undertake to serve on the active list for a minimum of 20 consecutive years. No reserves or measures for mobilisation are permitted.

Hungary is divided into the following seven military districts:—Budapest, Székesfehérvár, Szombathely, Pécs, Szeged, Debrecen, and Miskolc. To each of these districts is allotted a mixed brigade each composed of 1 brigade staff, 1 cavalry squadron, 2 infantry regiments, 1 trench mortar company, 1 field artillery group, 1 cyclist battalion. In addition to the 7 mixed brigades there are the following troops: 4 hussar regiments, 1 mounted artillery group, 3 independent batteries, and 3 pioneer battalions. Strength in November, 1929, 1,552 officers and 33,203 men.

Hungary has a force of 12,000 gendarmerie and of 12,000 police, as well as 6,360 customs guards, and 1,600 river guards. The members of this force are under the obligation to serve for a minimum of 6 consecutive years. The authorised armament is as follows:—Gendarmerie: 1 rifle or 1 carbine per man; Police: 1 sword or revolver per man (automatic pistols for 5 per cent. of the establishment, i.e. 600); Customs Guards: 1 rifle per man.

A force of 3,000 finance guards is also maintained. These are armed with revolvers.

Hungary has no navy or air force, but only four patrol vessels for police duty on the Danube.

The budget expenditure on the army in 1930–31 was 145,375,000 pengös

In Hungary there were, in 1931, 864,571 horses, 1,813,894 cattle, 1,440,409 sheep, and 2,714,635 pigs.

The total area under forest in Hungary (1930) was 2,707,320 acres.

The production of coal in Hungary was in 1900, 6,575,000 tons; in 1910, 9,036,000 tons; in 1927, 7,030,196 tons; in 1928, 7,293,349 tons; in 1929, 7,870,189 tons; and in 1930, 6,985,658 tons. The best quality coal is found in the Mecsek Mountain, in the district of Pécs. Bituminous coal is found at Ajk. Hungary has a considerable number of brown-coal and lignite mines. Her bauxite deposits may be counted among the largest in the world; production in 1930 was 31,696 tons.

Hungary retains important fishery preserves in the Danube and Theiss rivers and in lake Balaton. The latter, situated in the west, is the largest lake in central Europe, being 50 miles long and from 2 to 7 miles broad. Its waters contain plentiful supplies of perch, carp, pike, sheatfish, shad and other fish. The north shore of Lake Balaton is an important wine-producing district. The best known Hungarian wines come from the hilly country, "Tokaj," in the northeast section of Hungary.

The industries of Hungary are based on agriculture. They include milling, distilling, the manufacture of sugar (2,359,140 metric quintals of raw sugar in 1930), hemp and flax, and also iron and steel works (257,226 metric tons of pig-iron and 369,388 metric tons of steel in 1930). In 1930 there were in Hungary 3,294 factories, employing on an average 216,219 workmen, with an output valued at 2,496 million pengos.

ICELAND.

(ISLAND.)

Reigning King.

Iceland is united with Denmark by a personal bond of union under the government of King Christian X. (see Denmark).

The first settlers came to Iceland in 874. Between 930 and 1264 Iceland was an independent republic, but by the 'Old Treaty' of 1263 the country recognised the rule of the King of Norway. In 1381, Iceland, together with Norway, came under the rule of the Danish Kings, but when Norway was separated from Denmark in 1814, Iceland remained under the rule of Denmark. Since December 1, 1918, it has been acknowledged as a sovereign State, and is united with Denmark only through the identity of the Sovereign.

As King of Iceland King Christian X. has a civil list of 60,000 kroner.

Constitution and Government.—By the Act of Union of November 30, 1918, Iceland is temporarily united with Denmark in certain affairs beyond the King's person.

According to the Act of Union, Denmark and Iceland are free, sovereign States, united by one King and by the agreement comprised in the Union Act. The order of succession is not to be altered without the assent of both States. In Iceland, Danish citizens enjoy the same rights as Icelandic citizens, and in Denmark the latter enjoy the same rights as Danish citizens. But citizens of either of the States are exempt from military service in the other. Danish goods and products in Iceland and Icelandic goods and products in Denmark are treated no less favourably than those of any other country. Denmark takes charge of the foreign affairs of Iceland, and if Iceland so desires it, special Icelandic attachés or experts on Icelandic conditions may be appointed to Danish embassies and consulates, the expenses arising out of such appointments to be borne by Iceland. Denmark has a minister at Reykjavík, and Iceland a minister at Copenhagen.

An advisory Danish-Icelandic committee of eight members has been appointed to review Bills of importance to both States, and also to prepare Bills aiming at co-operation between the two States. After December 31, 1940, the Danish Parliament and the Icelandic Legislature may demand negotiations to be opened concerning the revision of the Union Act.

Denmark has informed the Powers that, in conformity with the Union Act, she recognises Iceland as a sovereign State.

The present constitution of Iceland is embodied in the Charter of May 18, 1920. By the terms of this Charter the executive power belongs to the King, and is exercised by him through responsible ministers, while the legislative power rests conjointly with the King and the Parliament, which is called Althing. The Althing is composed of 42 members, of whom 36 are elected for the term of 4 years by universal suffrage in constituencies, each electing one or two representatives by simple majority, except the capital, where 4 members are elected by Proportional Representation. The remaining 6 members are elected for the term of 8 years by Proportional Representation for the whole country. The franchise is enjoyed by all Icelandic citizens (men and women) of good reputation (unless they are indebted for poor-relief) who are over 25 years of age and have resided in the country during the previous 5 years. All voters are eligible as candidates, save only the superior judges.

The Althing is divided into two Houses, the Upper House and the Lower House. The former is composed of 14 members, viz. the 6 members elected by Proportional Representation for the whole country, together with 8 members elected by the whole Althing in common sitting out of the members elected by universal suffrage. The remaining 28 members form the Lower House. The members of the Althing receive payment for their services besides travelling expenses; members residing in the capital are allowed 8 krónur (8s. 11d.) per day, and members residing outside the capital 10 krónur (11s. 1d.) per day. This payment has temporarily been raised by 17 per cent.

The Althing must meet on February 15 in every year, unless it is convoked by the King at an earlier date. The Budget Bills must first be laid by the Government before the Lower House, but all other Bills can be introduced in either of the Houses. If the Houses do not agree they assemble in a common sitting, and the final decision is given by a majority of two-thirds of the voters, with the exception of Budget Bills, where a simple majority is sufficient. The ministers have free access to both Houses, but can only vote in the House of which they are members.

The executive power is exercised under the King by a ministry divided into 3 departments. The ministry, appointed August 20, 1931, is as follows:—

President of the Council and Minister of Trade and Communications—Tryggvi Thorhallsson.

Minister of Justice and of Ecclesiastical Affairs—Jonas Jonsson.

Minister of Finance.—Asgeir Asgerisson.

The ministers are responsible for their acts. They can be impeached by the Althing, and in that case their cause will be decided by the Landsdómur, a special tribunal, which can only try parliamentary impeachments.

For administrative purposes Iceland is divided into 16 provinces (syslur), each governed by a chief executive functionary (syslumadur). Each province forms one or two municipal districts with a council superintending the rural municipalities (about 200). There are also 8 urban municipalities with a town council, independent of the provinces, and forming by themselves administrative districts co-ordinate with the provinces. The municipal councils are elected direct by universal suffrage (men and women over 21 years of age), in urban municipalities by Proportional Representation, but in rural municipalities by simple majority.

Area and Population.—The following table gives the area and population of Iceland according to the census in 1930:—

Divisions.	Area, English sq. m.	Population, 1930 <sup>1</sup>	Population, 1930, Per sq. m.
The South-West . . . . .	4,125	46,683	11·3

The South . . . . .	12,277	13,526	1·1

At the census in 1920, the population was 94,690 (46,172 males and 48,518 females).

In 1930, 49,586 were domiciled in rural districts, and 59,158 in towns and villages (of over 300 inhabitants). The population is almost entirely Icelandic. In 1920, the foreign-born population numbered only 710, or 0·7 per cent. of the whole; 352 were born in Denmark, 155 in Norway, and 203 in other countries.

The capital of Iceland, Reykjavík, had in 1930 a population of 28,182; other towns are Akureyri, 4,133, Hafnarfjörður, 3,552, Vestmannaeyjar, 3,380, Ísafjörður, 2,511, Siglufjörður, 2,002, Nes, 1,102, Seydisfjörður, 931.

The following table gives the total number of births, deaths, and marriages, with the surplus of births over deaths, for three years:—

Years.	Marriages.	Total living Births.	Stillborn.	Deaths.	Surplus of Birth over Deaths.
1928	714	2,542	61	1,124	1,418
1929	758	2,644	82	1,237	1,407
1930	759	2,808	63	1,253	1,555

Of the births in 1930, 15·1 per cent. were illegitimate (15·7 per cent. in 1929).

Religion.—The national Church, and the only one endowed by the State, is Evangelical Lutheran. But there is complete religious liberty, and no civil disabilities are attached to those not of the national religion. The affairs of the national Church are under the superintendence of one bishop. At the census of 1920 only 463 were returned as Dissenters.

Education.—There is a University in Reykjavík. There are 2 grammar schools, 3 public high schools, besides 2 ladies' schools, a school for elementary-school teachers, 2 schools of agriculture, a school of navigation, a commercial high school, and several other special schools. The elementary instruction is compulsory for a period of 5 years, the school age being from 10 to 14 years. Before the age of 10 the children are usually privately educated, at any rate in the country. In 1928–29, there were 238 elementary schools, with 400 teachers and 8,709 pupils. There are also several continuation schools for young people.

Pauperism and Old-Age Pensions.—Ordinary poor-relief is regulated by the law of May 31, 1927. Each community constitutes a poor district.

There is in every community one Old-Age Pension Fund, to which all men and women from 18 to 60 years of age, to whom pensions are not otherwise secured, are bound to contribute, unless they are considered too poor to do so. In addition the funds receive a subvention from the State. Grants are made to infirm poor persons over 60 years of age who for the preceding 5 years have not received poor-relief.

Justice and Crime.—The lower courts of justice in Iceland are those of the provincial magistrates (sýslumenn) and town judges (bæjarfógetar). From these there is an appeal to the Supreme Court (hæstiréttur) in Reykjavík, which has 3 judges.

In 1930, 37 men (30 in 1929), and 1 woman (1 in 1929), were convicted of crime.

IRAQ (MESOPOTAMIA).

IRAQ was freed from the Turks during the Great War. It was recognised as an independent State, to be placed under a Mandatory Power, and the mandate was allotted to Great Britain. On December 14, 1927, a treaty was signed between Great Britain and Iraq, by which the former undertook to recognise the latter as an independent State. Great Britain is to recommend Iraq for admission to the League of Nations in 1932.

In March, 1924, the elective Constituent Assembly met for the purpose of ratifying the Anglo-Iraqi treaty, passing the Organic Law and the Electoral Law for the election of a subsequent parliament. It completed these duties early in August, and was then dissolved. The first Parliament under the Constitution was opened by King Faisal on July 16, 1925.

The country is now divided into the following Liwas: Mosul, Arbil, Kirkuk, Sulaimani, Diyala, Baghdad, Dulaim, Kut, Karbala, Hillah, Diwaniyah, Muntifig, 'Amarah, Basrah. Each Liwa is administered by a Mutasarrif, and is sub-divided into Qadhas (under Qaimmaqams) and Nahiyahs (under Mudirs).

Area and Population.—The country has an area of 177,148 square miles (the former Turkish vilayets respectively of Baghdad, 113,867 square miles, Basrah, 27,070 square miles, and Mosul, 36,211 square miles) and a population, according to the census of 1920, of 2,849,282. Education.—The medium of instruction in the schools has been changed from Turkish to Arabic in the Arabic-speaking provinces, and to Kurdish in Kurdish-speaking areas; Turkish remains in a few Turcoman towns (Tuzkhurmatli, Kirkuk, Kifri). In 1930 there were 40,600 pupils (boys and girls) in the 316 government primary and elementary schools, with 1,312 teachers. There were in 1930 two secondary schools at Baghdad and Mosul with 676 pupils, and 16 intermediate schools at other places with 1,416 pupils. There are two technical schools, a law school, a medical school, an engineering school, a military college and a theological college for both sects. There are one men's training college for primary teachers with 286 students and one for secondary teachers, three women's training centres and one night secondary school. There are 37 schools for illiterates (male and female), having 98 classes in all, at various centres in the country. In April, 1922, the King laid the foundation stone of the future Al ul Bait University, and the first block was opened on March 15, 1926. The education budget for the year 1930-31 amounted to 40,05,509 rupees.

Justice.—Civil and Shara' Courts are established throughout the country as follows:—A Court of Cassation at Baghdad with a British President and 5 Iraq Judges, 2 Shara' Courts of Revision at Baghdad, 5 Courts of First Instance; 11 Single Judge Courts with jurisdiction of a Court of First Instance; 28 Peace Courts; 29 Shara' Courts. In districts where a Peace Court only is established the Peace Judge has limited jurisdiction of a Court of First Instance as well as Shara' Jurisdiction.

Wherever a Civil Court is established there is also a Criminal Court, every judge having either first or second class magisterial powers. Certain administrative officials of outlying places where no courts have been formed have also magisterial powers.

The prison population at the end of 1930 was 3,790 (64 females).

Defence.—Besides British Imperial Forces, which passed on October 1, 1922 under the control of the Air Ministry, local forces consist of the Iraq Army, and a Levy Force under British officers, financed by the Imperial Exchequer. The establishment of the Iraqi Army on April 1, 1929, was as follows:—3 cavalry regiments and 1 cavalry depôt; 2 field batteries and 3 pack batteries and 1 artillery school; 7 infantry battalions, 2 infantry depôts; 3 transport companies; 1 mechanical transport company; the Iraq Army medical corps; remounts and veterinary department; ordnance department; military police corps; Iraq army signal unit; Iraq royal military college; staff school; small arms school, signal training centre; machine gun company (motors); mechanical transport school and depôt; Iraq air force mechanics, and the King's bodyguard.

On January 1, 1931, the Iraq Police force comprises 59 Iraqi Gazetted Officers, 229 Inspectors, 3,762 mounted police and 3,924 foot police. The strength of the British Inspectorate staff is 12 Gazetted Officers and 5 non-gazetted. With the exception of the Railway Police, numbering 296 officers and men, the force is under complete Iraqi executive control. Police budget for the year 1930–31, 82,37,500 rupees. In addition to the above there are two camel corps, strength 279 camelmen, who operate on the South Western Frontier. There are also 10 sections of armed cars, equipped with Lewis and Vickers guns, and comprising 35 cars and seven Police wireless stations (3 fixed and 4 mobile). Of the car sections 2 operate in the interior of the country while the remainder are employed solely in the Western and Southern Desert areas stretching from Mosul Liwa in the North to Basrah Liwa in the South. There is a large Police Training School in Baghdad for probationary gazetted officers and inspectors.

Production.—Iraq is a land of great potentialities. The soil of the country is rich, but there are vast areas which can only be cultivated if irrigated by canals or pumps. The Irrigation Department operates several canal systems, exercising varying degrees of control in water distribution, whilst other canals are in the hands of tribal groups and individuals. The number of pumps at the end of August 1930 was roughly 1,960, with a total horse-power of perhaps 50,950, all in the hands of private individuals or tribal groups. The total area actually irrigated by them in a single year is at present about 1,000,000 acres, but reliable figures are not available.

The oil resources of the area known as the Transferred Territories near the Persian frontier, 30 miles south of Khanaqin, are being developed by the Khanaqin Oil Company, a subsidiary of the Anglo-Persian Oil Company. Three wells have now been drilled to the oil-bearing strata, and are on production being connected with the pipeline which supplies the refinery at Alwand (Khanaqin) some 30 miles away. Oil for consumption in Iraq is refined at the Alwand Refinery and distributed and marketed by the Khanaqin Oil Company in all parts of Iraq at cheap prices controlled by an agreement between the company and the Government. The oil resources of the remainder of the Mosul and Baghdad vilayets are being developed by the Turkish Petroleum Company, which in June 1929, changed its name to the 'Iraq Petroleum Co., Ltd., under its Concession of March 1925. Many different structures, chiefly in the Mosul, Kifri and Kirkuk districts, are being tested, and oil has already been struck in eleven wells chiefly on the Baba Gurgur structure north of Kirkuk.

The British Cotton Growing Association is encouraging cotton cultivation by offering a secure market to cultivators, and the Department of Agriculture co-operates by undertaking scientific experiments and seed culture. The crop for 1928 was 5,202 bales, and for 1929, 4,500 bales (estimated). The chief winter crops are wheat and barley. The date crop is important, and the chief producing area is the tidally irrigated riverain belt of the Shatt-el-Arab. Wool is also an important export.

Commerce.—Imports and exports for five fiscal years (ended March 31) were as follows:—

	1926-27	1927-28	1928-29	1929-30	1930-31

Communications.—The Iraqi railway system consists of a metre gauge line from the Port of Basra, which is the Port of Iraq situated on the Shatt-el-Arab at the head of the Persian Gulf, to Baghdad, a distance of 354 miles. There are further a metre gauge line, connected with the Basra line by a wagon ferry across the River Tigris at Baghdad, from Baghdad to Khanaqin (110 miles) which is an important town near the Iraqi-Persian Frontier; a branch metre gauge line from the Baghdad-Khanaqin line to Kirkuk (109 miles), which is to be extended to Mosul; a standard gauge (4 ft. 8½ in.) line from Baghdad to Baiji (136 miles) along the right bank of the Tigris towards Mosul. The main Basra-Baghdad line passes the ancient cities of Ur of the Chaldees, Babylon and Kish, and special railway facilities exist to enable travellers to visit these cities. Goods are carried direct from Basra Port to Khanaqin on the Iraqi-Persian Frontier, whence they are transported by road to the markets of Persia. The total route mileage open on March 31, 1931 was 752·70 miles. There were also 178·03 miles of siding, making a total of 930·73 miles. Railway earnings for the year 1930-31 were 78,78,515 rupees, and expenses 78,70,958 rupees.

The Iraqi railway also runs a passenger motor service between Kirkuk and Nisibin via Mosul to connect with the Taurus express to Haidar Pasha, and thence by the Simplon-Orient express. This gives a through connection from India to England by sea, rail and road—Baghdad to London in eight days with Wagons-Lits from Nisibin to Calais—and Bombay to London in eighteen days, including two days in Iraq to visit Ur of the Chaldees, Babylon, Kish, etc.

Since the War nearly five thousand miles of roads, chiefly earthen, have been opened for the passage of all classes of traffic.

In the year 1929–30, 820 steamers of a gross registered tonnage of 4,386,967 entered the ports of Basra and Abadan.

At the close of 1930 there were 102 Post Offices in Iraq. At most of these Money Orders are issued and paid. A restricted number of Offices also issue and pay Postal Orders and accept and deliver Insured and Cash-on-Delivery (Value-payable) postal packets.

Internal mail communication is maintained over distances totalling 4,917 miles, as follows:—1,286 miles by air, 739 miles by rail, 2,217 miles by mechanical road transport, 539 miles by pack animals and runner service, 122 miles by river and 14 miles by tram.

Apart from frontier exchanges of mails with Turkey and Persia ordinary foreign mails are received and despatched by two routes; a weekly service via India for correspondence to and from all countries East of Iraq and also East and South Africa, and a bi-weekly service across the Syrian desert and through Syria for correspondence with all countries West of Iraq including those in North and South America. The latter service affords mail communication to or from most countries in Europe in less than fifteen days, the time of transit for mails between England and Iraq being ten to twelve days. Parcels are received and despatched by both of these routes.

Air Mail correspondence is both despatched and received in mails conveyed by the Imperial Airways, Ltd., London–Cairo–Baghdad–Karachi service. The transit period between Iraq and England by this service is 4 to 5 days, and between Iraq and India about 3 days. Air Mail communication with Persia and Syria is maintained by means of a Messrs. Junkers bi-weekly service and an Air Union Orient Lines, Ltd., weekly service respectively.

During 1930 the number of postal packets transmitted by the Inland Post was approximately 3,275,000, including 14,447 parcels. Approximately 1,622,000 postal packets, including 7,756 parcels, were despatched to destinations abroad and 2,453,000 including 36,913 parcels, were received from foreign countries for delivery in Iraq.

Post Office Money Orders issued during 1930 totalled 68,126 of an aggregate value of 29,53,585 rupees, and 58,897 Money Orders, aggregating 24,97,350 rupees, were paid.

On December 31, 1930, the line and wire mileages of the Iraq Telegraph and Telephone System were 3,936 miles and 17,793 miles respectively. The number of Post and Telegraph Offices open for public telegraph traffic was 79; in addition, 62 Railway Telegraph Offices also dealt with public telegrams.

The total number of Inland Telegrams transmitted during 1930 was 169,222. Sent and received ordinary foreign telegrams totalled 50,193 and 46,242 respectively. The number of wireless messages sent was 6,793 and the number received 8,996. At the end of the year there were 26 Departmental Public Telephone Exchanges, and 21 Sub-Exchanges operating private systems. The number of connections in the public system was 1,455. A Strowager Automatic Telephone Exchange has been operating at Basrah since 1923.

Currency.—The rupee currency has been displaced by a new national Iraqi currency and note issue, according to a new Currency Law published on April 19, 1931. By this law, which came into effect on July 1, 1931, but has been suspended until December 31, 1932, at latest, the monetary unit is to be the gold dinar equal to the pound sterling, i.e., 7-322382 grammes of pure gold, and divided into 1,000 fils. Silver coins for 50 and 20 fils will be struck, and other coins for 10, 4, 2 and 1 fil. Notes for a quarter, a half, and one dinar, and for 5, 10 and 100 dinars will be issued. The 50-fil coins will be of a silver alloy, the fineness of which will be 500 parts of pure silver in 1,000 parts, and of a weight of 9.00 grammes, while the 20-fil coin will be of a silver alloy, the fineness of which will be the same, but of a weight of 3.60 grammes. The issue will be made by an Iraqi Currency Board until such time as a national bank is formed with exclusive right to issue notes.

ITALY.

(REGNO D'ITALIA.)

Reigning King.

Vittorio Emanuele III., born November 11, 1869, the only son of King Umberto I. of Italy and of Queen Margherita; succeeded to the throne on the death of his father, July 29, 1900; married October 24, 1896, to Elena, born January 8, 1873, daughter of Nicholas, King of Montenegro; offspring, Princess Jolanda, born June 1, 1901, married on April 9, 1923, to Count Calvi di Bergolo; has two daughters, born in 1924 and 1930, and one son born in 1927; Princess Mafalda, born November 19, 1902, married to Prince Philip of Hesse; has two sons, born in 1926 and in 1927 respectively; Prince Umberto Nicola Tomaso Giovanni Maria, Prince of Piedmont and Heir Apparent, born Sept. 15, 1904, married January 8, 1930, to Marie José of Belgium, born August 4, 1906; Princess Giovanna, born November 13, 1907, married to King Boris of Bulgaria, on October 5, 1930; Princess Maria, born December 26, 1914.

Cousins of the King.

Prince Vittorio Emanuele, of Savoy-Aosta, Count of Turin, born November 24, 1870; Prince Luigi Amedeo, of Savoy-Aosta, Duke of the Abruzzi, born January 29, 1873—children of the late Prince Amedeo of Savoy, Duke of Aosta, from his union with Maria Vittoria, Princess of Pozzo della Cisterna, who died November 8, 1876.

Most genealogists trace the origin of the reigning house to a German Count Berthold, who, in the eleventh century, established himself on the western slope of the Alps, between Mont Blanc and Lake Geneva. In the end of the eleventh century the Count of Savoy acquired the countries of Turin and Susa. Count Amadeus, in 1383, founded a law of primogeniture which led to the immediate acquisition of the territory of Nice. In 1416 the Counts of Savoy adopted the title of Duke; in 1418 they acquired the Principality of Piedmont; and in 1713 they obtained the island of Sicily, with the title of King. Sicily had to be exchanged, in 1720, for the isle of Sardinia, to which henceforth the royal dignity remained attached. The Genoese territory was added at the peace of 1815. The direct male line of the House of Savoy died out with King Carlo Felice in 1831, and the crown fell to Prince Carlo Alberto, of the house of Savoy-Carignano, a branch founded by Tommaso Francesco, born in 1596, younger son of Duke Carlo Emanuele I. of Savoy. King Carlo Alberto abdicated the throne March 23, 1849, in favour of his son, the late King Vittorio Emanuele II., who, by the Peace of Zürich, November 10, 1859, obtained Lombardy, with the exception of Mantua and a part of the surrounding territory. On March 11, 1860, annexation to Sardinia was voted by plebiscites in Parma, Modena, the Romagna, and Tuscany; on October 21, Sicily and Naples (including Benevento and Pontecorvo, part of the Papal States), and on November 4, the Marches and Umbria. The first Italian Parliament assembled in February 1861, and declared (March 17, 1861) Vittorio Emanuele King of Italy. The remaining part of the province of Mantua and Venetia were added in 1866. Finally, the remaining part of the Papal States (province of Rome), having been taken possession of by an Italian army (September 20, 1870), was annexed to the Kingdom by plebiscite on October 2. After the Great War—by the Treaty of Saint Germain (Sept. 10, 1919) there were annexed to the kingdom: the Venezia Tridentina, the Venezia Giulia with Zara, the islands of Cherso, Lussino and other minor ones. Later, on January 28, 1924, Fiume was also annexed.

The civil list has been settled (1919) at 11,250,000 lire; by a law of 1925 an allowance of 2,000,000 lire was settled on the Prince of Piedmont, Heir Apparent; Duke of Aosta receives an allowance of 1,000,000 lire.

The greater part of the private domains of the reigning family has been given up to the State.

Constitution and Government.

The present Constitution of Italy is an expansion of the 'Statuto fondamentale del Regno,' granted on March 4, 1848, by King Charles Albert to his Sardinian subjects. According to this charter, the executive power of the State belongs exclusively to the Sovereign, and is exercised by him through responsible ministers; while the legislative authority rests conjointly in the King and Parliament, the latter consisting of two Chambers—an upper one, the Senate, and a lower one, called the 'Camera de' Deputati.' To co-ordinate and complete all the activity of the régime, resulting from the Fascist Revolution, there is the Gran Consiglio del Fascismo which is composed of four Members (the quadrumviri of the March to Rome) appointed for an indefinite period; 19 Members (Ministers and other high dignitaries) appointed for as long as they hold their respective office; and an undetermined number of Members to be appointed for the duration of three years, by the Head of Government. The Gran Consiglio del Fascismo decides on the list of Members of Parliament; on the Statutes, on the arrangement and on the lines of conduct of the Fascist Party. Its approval must be obtained on all questions of a constitutional nature including those connected with the succession to the throne and the prerogatives of the Crown. The Secretary of the Partito Nazionale Fascista is also Secretary to the Gran Consiglio and is present at the sessions of the Council of Ministers. In 1930 the membership of the Fascist party was officially given as 1,176,883.

The Senate is composed of the princes of the royal house who are twenty-one years of age (with the right to vote when twenty-five years of age), and of an unlimited number of members, above forty years old, who are nominated by the King for life; a condition of the nomination being that the person should either fill a high office, or have acquired fame in science, literature, or any other pursuit tending to the benefit of the nation, or, finally, should pay taxes to the annual amount of 3,000 lire, or 120*l*. On December 31, 1930, the Senators numbered 417: of these 11 are Royal Princes.

By the law of May 17, 1928, the whole electoral system has been radically changed. Franchise is granted to men of 21 years of age, and also to men aged 18 years, if married or widowers with sons, who are paying a syndicate rate, or taxes to the amount of 100 lire, or are receiving a salary or pension from any public institution. Criminals and certain others are excluded.

The Chamber of Deputies consists of 400 members elected for 5 years. To be eligible it is necessary to have completed 25 years of age and to fulfil the conditions required for active electorate. The whole country is a single constituency. The National Syndicate Confederations are entitled to propose a number of candidates twice as great as the number of deputies to be elected. Juridical persons and Associations of national character are also entitled to propose a certain number of candidates. Out of these lists of candidates the Great Fascist Council selects 400 names to be included in the roll which will be proposed to the electors. If the proposed roll is not approved, fresh elections must be held. The lists of candidates must be presented fifteen days before the fixed day for the elections. The candidates elected are those inscribed on the list which has obtained the majority of votes. The seats reserved to the minority are divided among the other lists in proportion to the number of votes obtained by each list.

Each Deputy has an annual allowance of 21,000 lire.

The last elections took place on March 24, 1929; out of the 9,682,630 registered electors, 8,661,820 (or 89.5 per cent) participated in the balloting; of these 8,517,888 (or 98.3 per cent of the electors) voted in favour of the national list of candidates.

The duration of a Parliament is five years, and it must meet annually. The ministers have the right to attend the debates of both the upper and the lower House; but they have no vote unless they are members.

The executive power is exercised by the King through the Government. The Prime Minister is the Chief of the Government responsible to the King for the general political direction of the Government. The Ministers are responsible to the King and the Chief of the Government for the action of their respective Offices. The Prefects are responsible, in their respective Provinces, for the high efficiency of all the Services connected with the State—with the exception of those connected with the Administration of Justice, of War, of the Navy and of the Air Service.

To discipline mass labour, the Italian State juridically admits Syndicates. Syndical Associations are either grouped territorially, or in Federations. The latter consist of thirteen Confederations, six for the employers and six for the workers. Each Confederation corresponds to the following activities: Agriculture, Industry, Commerce, Banks, Transport on Land and Maritime and Air Transports. The thirteenth comprises Arts or Liberal Professions.

The National Council of Corporations is presided over by the Chief of the Government and through it is carried into effect the principle of integral corporation.

The present Cabinet appointed on September 12, 1929, consists of the following Members:

Prime Minister, Chief of the Government and Minister of the Interior.—Signor Benito Mussolini.

Minister of Foreign Affairs.—Signor Dino Grandi.

Minister of War.—Signor Pietro Gazzera.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

The State is divided into 92 Provinces, and these into 7310 Communes. Provinces are administered by a Provincial Rectorate and a President. The President, the Vice President and the Rectors are appointed by Royal Decree. In every province there is a Giunta Provinciale Amministrativa which exercises functions of guardianship on Communes and on the Opere Pie, as well as jurisdictional functions. The Consiglio Provinciale dell'Economia Corporativa represents the interests of the productive activities of the Province. At the head of the Commune (with the exception of Rome where there is a Governor, and Naples where there is a Royal Commissioner) is the Podestà (Mayor) who is appointed by Royal Decree and remains in charge for five years with the same powers which were formally exercised by the elected municipal authorities. In Communes with more than 20,000 inhabitants, there exists a Council (Consulta) of from 20 to 40 members, selected by the Ministry of the Interior from among the persons designated by the recognised local syndical associations. The Consulta has advisory functions only, but its advice must be asked in the case of the approval of budgets; the imposition of taxes.

Religion.

The treaty between the Holy See and Italy, of February 11, 1929, admits and confirms the principle established by the first article of the Fundamental Statute of the Kingdom of Italy that the Catholic Apostolic Roman Religion is the only religion of the State. Other creeds are permitted, provided always they do not profess principles, or follow rites, contrary to public order or to moral behaviour. The profession of such creeds is free, and discussion on religious matters is freely admitted.

The appointment of Archbishops and of Bishops is made by the Holy See; but before proceeding to such appointments the Holy See submits to the Italian Government the name of the person to be appointed in order to obtain an assurance that the latter will not raise objections of a political nature.

Catholic religious teaching is given in elementary and intermediate schools. Marriages may be celebrated before a Catholic clergyman in accordance with the rules of Canon Law, or before a clergyman of other religions admitted by the State. Civil marriages when celebrated in accordance with prescribed legal formalities are also recognized.

According to the Census of 1931, 95 per cent. of the Italians were Catholics (41,060,963); 82,659 were Protestants; 47,485 Jews, etc.

Education.

Elementary education is free and compulsory up to the age of 14. It is given in 3 grades: Preparatory in the so-called 'Maternal Schools' maintained by the municipalities (3 years), Lower (3 years), and Higher (2 years).

The Secondary schools are divided into 2 grades. In the first grade are the Scuole complementari, the Ginnasio, the Preparatory Course of the Technical Institute and the Preparatory Course for Teachers.

In every Province an Assembly for technical education has been established. The 'Complementary Schools' are being transformed into preparatory professional schools, and a similar reform is under consideration for superior grades.

Higher Instruction is given in the Royal Universities and Higher Institutes, and also in the Free Universities and Free Higher Institutes ('Free' denotes that they are self-supporting).

Physical education is organized by the Comitato Olimpionico Nazionale Italiano, which directs and co-ordinates the activity of 33 National Federations. Sports of a popular character are entrusted to the Opera Nazionale Dopolavoro. Physical education for boys from 6 to 14 years old is entrusted to the Opera Nazionale Balilla, and that for girls of the same age to the Opera Piccole Italiane.

The Italian Academy consists of 60 members, divided into 4 categories.

Justice and Crime.

Italy has 1 Court of Cassation, in Rome, and is divided for the administration of justice into 18 appeal court districts (with 6 detached sections), subdivided into 126 tribunal districts, and these again into mandamenti, each with its own magistracy (Pretura), 992 in all. There are also 85 ordinary and 34 extraordinary Assize Courts. For civil business, besides the magistracy above mentioned, Conciliatori have jurisdiction in petty plaints.

By a law of November, 1926, a special tribunal was instituted with jurisdiction in offences (delitti) against the security of the State.

Statistics of persons convicted of offences of all kinds:—

On December 31, 1930, there were 55,529 male and 3,827 female prisoners; of these 25,539 males and 1,834 females were found guilty. At that date there were 838 central and 171 arrondissement prisons, 66 penal establishments, including 2 reformatories for persons under age, and 3 penal establishments for women.

Pauperism.

In Italy legal charity, in the sense of a right in the poor to be supported by the parish or commune, or of an obligation on the commune to relieve the poor, does not exist. Public charity in general is exercised through the permanent charitable foundations, called 'Istituzioni pubbliche di assistenza e di beneficenza' (Opere pie), regulated by the laws of July 17, 1890, and later laws, including that of June 17, 1926.

Defence.

I. FRONTIER.

The extent of the land frontier of Italy is as follows :—French frontier 303 miles ; Swiss 450 ; Austrian 261 ; Yugoslav 152 ; frontier of San Marino 24; in all (exclusive of San Marino) 1,166 miles. The coast line of the peninsula measures 2,472 miles; of Sicily, 693; of Sardinia, 890; of Elba and the small islands, 973; the total length of coast is thus 4,968 miles.

II. ARMY.

Service in the army (or navy) is compulsory and universal. Liability to service begins at the age of 20 up to the age of 55.

The term of service in the active army is normally 18 months for all arms. After passing through the ranks, the men are placed on 'unlimited' leave, i.e., they are transferred to the reserve, in which they remain until the age of 55.

The army is divided into the metropolitan army and the colonial troops, the former being under the Ministry of War, the latter under the Ministry of the Colonies.

The establishment of the metropolitan army for 1931-32 was 15,886 officers and 226,000 other ranks organised in 11 army corps and the military commands of Sicily and Sardinia comprising:—

	Divisions	Brigades	Legions	Regiments	Battalions	Groups	Squadrons	Batteries	Companies

Besides the above-mentioned units, the Volunteer Militia for National Security was formed by decree of August 4, 1924. It is organised in General Headquarters, 4 areas (Milan, Bologna, Rome, Naples), 2 militia headquarters (Palermo, Cagliari), 33 legion group headquarters, 134 legions, and 6 independent cohorts. Its strength in 1931 was about 25,000 officers and 367,000 other ranks, inclusive of permanent formations amounting to 1,709 officers and 8,184 other ranks. Of these the average number called up for annual training was 30,400.

The Carabinieri are a force of military police. They are recruited by selection from the army, and by voluntary enlistment. In 1931 the strength of the Carabinieri was 1,129 officers and 29,500 other ranks.

The garrison of Libya consists of 2 infantry battalions, 2 companies artillery, and armoured car units and services of the metropolitan army; 2 legions of volunteer militia. The native army consists of 12 battalions, 3 companies artillery, 1 pack battery, 7 cavalry squadrons, 3 spahi squadrons, 9 camel squadrons, and 7 irregular units.

The garrison of Erythrea consists of 5 native battalions, 3 mountain batteries, 2 artillery companies, 1 engineer company, 1 coastguard company, 1 mechanical transport unit, and 1 native cavalry squadron.

In Italian Somaliland there is a native corps of 4 native infantry battalions, 1 garrison company, 3 artillery companies, and various auxiliary units.

The army estimates for 1932-33 amount to 2,960,670,546 lire.

III. AIR FORCE.

By Royal Decree of August 1925, the Italian Royal Air Force is constituted as a separate force under a Ministry of Aviation. Detachments of the Royal Air Force doing duty with the Army and Navy are for the time under the control of these services. The expenditure for 1932-33 was estimated at 754,200,000 lire. The number of aeroplanes in possession of the Air Force was 1,507. It is proposed to increase this number to 4,500, of which 1,500 will be with the active force, 1,500 in second line, and 1,500 in third line. The strength of the personnel in 1931 was 22,193. The Royal Air Force is organized in a military co-operation wing consisting of 3 reconnaissance regiments of 20 squadrons; a naval co-operation wing consisting of 2 mixed regiments of seaplanes, with 13 squadrons, and a colonial wing consisting of 8 squadrons in the colonies. There is, in addition, an independent air force at the disposal of the ministry consisting of 8 regiments of 58 squadrons and 1 regiment of dirigibles.

IV. NAVY.

The Treaty of Washington assigned to Italy, in capital ship tonnage, a replacement figure of 175,000 tons (177,800 metric), but the existing ships have a 'standard' displacement of only 86,532 tons. Italy, had she so desired, could have begun the construction of capital ships at any time from 1927 to 1930. Under the London Naval Treaty, she may still lay down capital ships, up to a total of 70,000 tons, at any time up to 1936. The current building programme (1931-32) includes 4 destroyers and 22 submarines. There are also, approaching the completion stage, the following ships of earlier programmes: 3 cruisers of 10,000 tons and 4 of 5,500 tons, and 4 destroyers. All these are intended to replace tonnage that has become obsolete.

The naval expenditure for 1932-33 is estimated at 1,538,923,277 lire, as compared with 1,573,622,800 lire in 1931-32.

The Head of the Naval Administration is the Minister of Marine, assisted by an Under-Secretary of State. The Ministry of Marine embraces various general and central directorates covering the personnel, the military and scientific services, naval and mechanical establishments, arms and naval armaments, medical and accountant officers, and civil personnel. Advisory Councils of the Ministry are the Board of Admirals; the Superior Marine Council; and the Committee of Ship Designs. The Office of the Chief of the Naval Staff is entrusted with the study of all problems connected with naval warfare and the employment of the various naval units.

The coast line of the peninsula is divided into zones placed under the jurisdiction of Admirals, Commanders-in-Chief of Maritime departments, with headquarters at Spezia, Naples, and Taranto. In localities more important from a strategical point of view, there exist Maritime commands (Venice, La Maddalena, Castellamare di Stabia, Messina); and in other localities there are stations under charge of Senior Naval Officers (Genoa, Leghorn, Brindisi, Pola and Zara).

The Mercantile Marine is administered by a Directorate General of the Ministry of Communications.

The last-named include 8 ex-enemy vessels. Eight of the cruisers and many of the destroyers are equipped as mine-layers.

The personnel consists of over 2,400 officers and 48,000 men, including 12,000 volunteers.

Production and Industry.

I. AGRICULTURE.

The systems of cultivation in Italy may be reduced to three:—1. The system of peasant proprietorship (coltivazione per economia o a mano propria); 2. That of partnership (colonia parziaria); 3. That of rent (affitto). Peasant proprietorship is most common in Piedmont and Liguria, but is found in many other parts of Italy. The system of partnership or colonia parziaria, more especially in the form of mezzadria, consists in a form of partnership between the proprietor and the cultivator. This system is general in Tuscany, the Marches, and Umbria. Large farms (la grande coltura) exist in the neighbourhood of Vercelli, Pavia, Milan, Cremona, Chioggia, Ferrara, Grosseto, Rome, Caserta, and in Apulia, the Basilicata, Calabria, and at Girgenti and Trapani in Sicily. In Italy generally the land is much subdivided.

The area of Italy comprises 76,637,676 acres, mainly distributed, on December 31, 1930, as follows (the figures are in acres):—cereals, 17,995,696; leguminous plants, 2,294,248; industrial plants, 617,962; vegetables, 1,170,784; vines, 1,938,517; olive trees, 1,414,345; woods and forests, 12,102,726; forage and pasture, 12,172,451. The total agricultural land extended to 70,263,349 acres.

According to the agricultural census taken on March 19, 1931, the number of firms engaged in agriculture was 4,074,065. Persons engaged in agriculture as their main occupation number 6,057,935 males and 2,752,065 females, while for 1,203,049 males and 2,896,785 females agriculture is a secondary occupation.

The principal crops for 3 years were as follows:—

III. MINES AND MINERALS.

The Italian mining industry is most developed in Sicily (Caltanissetta), in Tuscany (Arezzo, Florence, and Grosseto), in Sardinia (Cagliari, Sassari, and Iglesias), in Lombardy (particularly near Bergamo and Brescia), and in Piedmont.

Production in metric tons (1 metric ton = 2,204 lbs., or 1,016 metric tons = 1,000 English tons) of metallic ores and other minerals in 1930 was as follows:—

Iron and steel production in 1931 was as follows in metric tons (1930 figures in parentheses): pig-iron, 509,174 (534,293); raw steel, 1,452,647 (1,774,294); rolled steel, 1,253,607 (1,531,365).

In 1930 the 9,245 quarries in activity employed 59,156 persons, the output of building and decorative stone being valued at 488,752,713 lire.

IV. MANUFACTURES.

The Italian industrial census of October 15, 1927, showed that there were 732,109 industrial establishments in the country, having 4,005,812 employees (1,009,883 women). Of the total factories, 692,313 employed from 1 to 10 persons; 34,951 from 11 to 100 persons; 4,150 from 101 to 500 persons; and 695 over 500.

The cotton industry is the largest and most important (10,406 factories with 642,654 employees). Number of spindles in 1928, 5,300,000. Silk culture, while flourishing most extensively in Lombardy, Piedmont and Venetia, is carried on all over Italy. The quantity of silk produced in Italy was (in tons), 1926, 4,366; 1927, 5,010; 1928, 5,568; 1929, 5,521; 1930, 5,289.

The manufacture of sugar is growing in importance. Sugar output (in metric tons) in 1904-5, 74,831; 1913-14, 269,946; 1927-28, 254,954; 1928-29, 353,458; 1929-30, 405,081. The manufacture of cheese is also an important industry. The production in 1925 was estimated at 2,500,000 quintals.

FOREIGN DEPENDENCIES.

Colony of Eritrea.

The dominion of Italy on the coast of the Red Sea extends from Cape Kasar (18° 2' N.) to Cape Dumeirah on the Strait of Bab-el-Mandeb (12° 30' N.). The length of coast is about 670 miles. The total area is 45,754 square miles, and the population according to a census taken in 1931 is estimated at 510,000 inclusive of 3,650 Italians. Massawah has (1923) 12,275 inhabitants, of whom 350 are European, mainly Italian. The seat of the Government is Asmara, a modern town 7,765 feet above the sea-level, with 18,500 inhabitants (3,500 European). The religions of the native population are the Christian (Coptic rite) and the Mohammedan. There are some Roman Catholics and a few Pagans. The principal languages of Eritrea are Tigry and Tigré, two languages originating from the ancient Ghehz, the Ethiopian language, which is the ecclesiastical language of the Eritrean Christians. Tigré is spoken by the Abyssinian stock and Tigry in the North, in Massawah and district, and is understood to a certain extent in the whole of Eritrea. Other languages are spoken in the plateau, and Arabic in the lowlands and ports.

Military force (1928): 200 commissioned and non-commissioned officers and about 4,000 native troops, exclusive of the police force of the colony.

In the Italian dependencies the central government is represented by a civil governor, who is nominated by the King and is under the direction of the Minister for the Colonies.

Governor.—Riccardo Astuto dei Duchi di Lucchesi.

For the financial year 1931-32 the revenue and expenditure of the Colony of Eritrea are estimated at: Colonial revenue, 51,085,630 lire; State contributions, 20,700,000 lire; expenditure, civil administration, 35,346,580 lire; military, 15,789,050 lire.

For climatic and agricultural purposes the country must be divided into two zones, the lowlands along the sea coasts and the plains, where the climate is tropical and the rains fall in winter; and the uplands, where the climate is cool, and sometimes cold, and the rains fall in summer. Both in the lowlands and the uplands the annual rain is sufficient for the successful raising of the crops. Irrigation works are being carried on in the lower zone in order to facilitate intensive production by Italian farmers. Pasture is abundant, and the pastoral population is partly nomadic. Pearl-fishing is carried on at Massawah and the Dahlak archipelago. There are gold mines worked successfully in several localities of Hamasiën.

At Massawah the imports by sea, the exports, and the tonnage entered were as follows:—

—	1926	1927	1928	1929	1930
Imports . . . Lire	171,789,645	201,860,446	195,627,391	207,503,799	176,814,838
Exports . . . "	97,852,451	80,196,871	98,712,746	72,499,008	74,982,297
Tonnage entd. Tons (Steamships only)	521,037	688,857	600,960	597,631	496,648

Through the land frontier the imports in 1930 amounted to 24,661,931 lire, and the exports to 17,936,363 lire.

There are 75 miles of railway from Massawah to Asmara, 65 miles from Asmara to Cheren, and 53 miles from Cheren to Agordat. The line from Agordat to Tesseneti, under construction, has reached a point 65 miles from Agordat. There are monthly sailings between Massawah and Genoa and Massawah and Trieste, and weekly sailings for Egypt, and frequent sailings for the Far East. There are 15 post-offices. There is a telegraph line of 416 miles in length with 14 public offices. There are 1,023 miles of telephone lines with 9 public offices. Wireless telegraph stations have been opened at Massawah, Assab, Asmara, and Marsa Fatma Eri. They communicate with the radiotelegraphic system of Italian Somaliland and also with Italy (St. Paolo of Rome). There is thus through wireless communication between Italy and Italian Somaliland, via Massawah.

The legal currency consists of Italian coins and Maria Theresa dollars. The Italian mint in 1918 issued a new silver coin, the Tallero d'Italia, the weight of which is 28·0668 grammes, ·835 fine.

Italian Somaliland.

The Colony of Italian Somaliland has an area of about 190,000 sq. miles and a population (1931) of about 900,000 (1,828 Italians and 28 other Europeans). It extends along the east coast of Africa from British Somaliland to Dik's Head in Kenya Colony. The inland boundaries are determined under the Treaty of May 6, 1908, between Italy and Abyssinia, by a line (only partially demarcated) from the confluence of the Ganale with the Daua, thence to Bender Ziada (45th parallel) on the Gulf of Aden following an irregular line which runs at a mean distance of 180 miles from the coast through Jet, Ato, El Gorum, Bur Lemis, Bur Gumburu, Bur Burdubo, and Bur Galambaladi to Bender Ziada.

As a result of the Treaty of 1915 and the Colonial rearrangements consequent on the war, Britain has ceded Italy territories on the right bank of the Juba with the port of Kismayu (Chisimalo). This district is incorporated in Somalia and forms one of its provinces. It has an area of 35,000 sq. miles and an estimated population of 100,000. [See map in THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK for 1925.]

Italian Somaliland comprises (I.) The territories of Northern Somalia, viz.—(1) The territory of the Mijertins, from Bender Ziada, the most northerly point belonging to Italy on the Gulf of Aden, to Cape Gabà on the Indian Ocean (8° 13' N. lat.); (2) the territory of the Nogal, from Cape

Gabà to Cape Garad (6° 47' N. lat.), formerly occupied by the Mad Mullah ; (3) the territory of Obbia, from Cape Garad to the northern boundary of the colony of Benadir, determined by a line which ends at the sea near the wells of El Gabobe (about 4° 30' N. lat.). (II.) Southern Somalia, formerly called 'Benadir,' which extends from 4° 30' N. lat. to Ras Chiamboni (Dik's Head). Mogadiscio (population 28,000, of whom 800 are Europeans), capital of the Colony, with its territory, has been placed under the direct dependence of the Governor.

The principal occupations of the people are cattle-rearing and agriculture. In Southern Somaliland the whole country near the banks of the Webi Shebele and the Juba is inhabited and cultivated by the natives, and in the district of Merca-Genale and in that of Villaggio Duca degli Abruzzi there are Italian plantations with a cultivated area of some 70,000 acres. In Northern Somaliland agriculture is almost unknown ; the Mijertins rear camels and sheep. Exports (1929) were 49,980,699 lire ; imports, 143,906,528 lire. Imports are cottons, sugar, rice, tea, coffee, iron, machinery, timber ; exports sesame oil, gum, hides, butter, cotton and cotton-seed oil, resin, kapok and ivory. In 1929 there were 71 miles of railway open to traffic. In 1931 exports to U.K. amounted to 28,589*l.* and imports from U.K. 12,931*l.* Re-exports from U.K. in 1931 amounted to 24*l.* Length of roads 1,500 miles ; steamship service on the Juba River from Kismayu to Bardera. In 1929, 1,217 ships entered and 1,191 cleared the ports of the colony. Military force (1927), 200 (Italian) officers and 10,000 (coloured) men. A detachment of the Flying Corps has recently been added.

Governor.—Maurice Rava (1931).

The budget of Italian Somaliland for the year 1930-31 is as follows : Revenue proper of the colony, 23,500,000 lire ; State contribution, 56,500,000 lire ; total, 800,000,000 lire. Civil expenditure, 45,895,000 lire ; military, 20,898,000 lire ; extraordinary expenditure, 13,200,000 lire ; total, 79,993,000 lire.

Twenty-nine wireless telegraph stations are working in the Colony. The wireless station at Afgoi communicates directly with Italy.

There are in the Colony 6 principal post offices (Mogadiscio, Merca, Brava, Khismayu, Baidoa, and Mahaddei), and 24 local post offices. A railway runs from Mogadiscio to Afgoi Adalei Villaggio Duca degli Abruzzi (70·23 miles).

The currency is the Italian lira (silver coins and currency notes issued by the Banca d'Italia).

Tripolitania and Cyrenaica.

(LIBIA ITALIANA.)

Governor (with Headquarters in Tripolitania).—Marshall Pietro Badoglio (appointed December, 1928).

Vice-Governor (and Lieutenant-Governor of Cyrenaica).—General Grasiani (appointed March, 1930).

Italian Libya lies along the north coast of Africa between Tunis on the west and Egypt on the east, in longitude from about 9° to 25° east. The extreme northerly point of Libya is at about the parallel of latitude 33° north. The territory in effective occupation was greatly extended southwards early in 1928 ; and by the occupation and linking up of the oases of Gialo, Augila, Marada, Zella and Socna, and the linking of Gialo to Jaraboob, the temporary southern frontier was pushed to, or south of the 29th parallel. According to an arrangement with France (September 12, 1919) as a result of the Treaty of 1915, the western frontier extends in a curve from west of Ghadames to south of Tummo including Ghat. On the Egyptian frontier Italy has obtained Jarabooob from Britain.

Tripoli fell under Turkish domination in the sixteenth century, and though, in 1714, the Arab population secured some measure of independence, the country was in 1835 proclaimed a Turkish vilayet. In September, 1911, a quarrel broke out between Turkey and Italy, and the latter occupied Tripoli and established an army there. On November 5, 1911, a decree was issued annexing Tripoli, and on February 23, 1912, the Italian Chamber passed the Bill which ratified the decree of annexation. The war, nevertheless, continued until October 18, 1912, when the Treaty of Ouchy was signed, by which the sovereignty of Italy in Tripoli was established. This has been recognised by the Great Powers.

For administrative and military purposes the country is divided (since January 24, 1929) into two districts, Tripolitania and Cyrenaica, with their respective capitals at Tripoli and Bengazi.

TRIPOLITANIA.

Area and Population.—The area of the territory is estimated at about 900,000 square kilometres. According to a census taken in 1931, there were about 550,000 natives and 22,700 Europeans (20,000 Italians). It is estimated that of the total population, 203,000 are Arabs, 135,000 Berbers, 172,000 Arab-Berbers, and about 40,000 Jews. Of the Mussulman population the negroes of various races form about 35 per cent. Arabic is more generally spoken than written, and both Italian and Arabic are the official languages. The principal towns of Tripolitania are on the coast: Tripoli with about 60,000 inhabitants, Misurata with 14,000, and Homs with 5,000; other important centres are at Azizia, Zuara, and Zavia on the west coast, Sirte on the east coast, and Gariàn, Jefren, Giado, and Nalut on the highland. Inland are the caravan halting places, Ghadames, Sinauen, Mizda, Murzûk, and Ghat.

Justice.—In both districts justice, in so far as personal status or family or succession matters are concerned, is administered by Mohammedan or rabbinic tribunals for native Mohammedans or Jews according to their own religious law, and by regional tribunals according to Italian law in civil and commercial matters, whether the parties concerned be Italians, strangers or natives, except for special concessions made by the Colonial Judiciary to native mentality. Criminal cases are tried by the regional tribunals with the assistance of two assessors, chosen from the citizens of the best class, who with the President (a professional magistrate) form the Judicial College. One of the assessors must be a Mussulman or a Jew, according to the religion of the accused, but the judges of the metropolitan citizens are all Italians. More serious penal cases are tried by the Court of Assize, consisting of the President of the Court of Appeal with four assessors, two of whom must be Mohammedans or Jews, according to the religion of the accused. Appeals in both the districts, whether in civil or in criminal cases, are heard by the Court of Appeal for Libia, which was instituted in December, 1912, with its seat at Tripoli. There is a final appeal to the Supreme Court of Cassation at Rome. Disputes as to titles to land (which have to be inscribed in the Land Registry) are tried in the first instance by the Land Registry Office, from which there is an appeal to the Regional Tribunal composed of a judge and four assessors, and finally to the Court of Appeal of Libya.

Finance.—For the financial year 1931-32 the revenue and expenditure were estimated at: Revenue proper of the colony, 84,300,000 lire; State contribution, 167,600,000 lire; extraordinary contribution from the State 8,000,000 lire; civil expenditure, 112,621,000 lire; military expenditure, 178,667,000 lire.

Defence.—The military force in Tripolitania consists of a corps of Colonial troops numbering 560 officers, 620 non-commissioned officers, and 18,500 men (13,500 natives and 5,000 Italians). There is an aviation station near Tripoli, also a naval command, with its station at Tripoli and a higher naval officer at its head. To this are attached some light vessels and tugs, stationed in the harbour.

Production and Industry.—Tripolitania has three zones from the coast inland—the Mediterranean, the sub-desert and the desert. The first, which covers an area of about 17,231 square miles, is the only one properly suited for agriculture, and may be further subdivided into (1) the oases along the coast, the richest in N. Africa, in which thrive the date-palm, the olive, the orange, and all Mediterranean plants (the yield of dates in 1929 was 30,000 metric ton-); (2) the steppe district, suitable for cereals (barley and wheat) and pasture (the barley crop in 1929 was 30,000 metric tons and the wheat crop 60,000 metric tons). This district is the one where Italian colonisation has chiefly spread; it has olive, almond and mulberry trees and ricinus plants; (3) the dunes, which are being gradually afforested with acacia, robinia, poplar and pine; (4) the Jebel (the mountain district, Tarhuna, Garian, Fessato), in which thrive the olive, the fig, the vine and other fruit trees, and which on the east slopes down to the sea with the fertile hills of Msellata. The sub-desert zone produces the alpha plant. The desert zone contains some fertile oases, such as those of Ghadamas, Ghat and Fezzan, which produce olives, alpha, henna, palms, oranges, grapes and almonds. In 1928 (latest census) there were in the colony: 504,489 sheep, 336,267 goats, 48,182 cattle, 47,781 camels and 34,164 donkeys, mules and horses.

Sponge-fishing and tunny-fishing are of great importance. In 1930, there were 8 fisheries working, the number of tunnies caught was 6,932 compared with 8 fisheries, 8,234 tunnies in 1929. In 1929 the quantity of sponges fished amounted to 66,740 kilograms. Among the other industries the most flourishing is that of tobacco and tobacco manufactures. In 1930 the tobacco crop yielded 700 metric tons (230 metric tons in 1929). The exports of the products of the tobacco manufacture reached in 1929 the sum of 2,877,190 lire. The Mellaha salt-pits yielded 18,000 tons of the best salt in 1930, nearly the whole of it being exported. Among the other products are matting, carpets, leather articles, fabrics embroidered with gold and silver, and other articles of value of a local character.

Commerce.—There is a considerable caravan trade between Tripoli and Central Sudan. An important article of trade is ostrich feathers, which are brought overland from Central Africa, and exported to Paris and London from Tripoli to the value of 40,000*l.* to 50,000*l.* annually.

The trade of Tripolitania was: Imports, 1930, 215,266,000 lire, 1929, 249,733,230 lire; exports, 1930, 36,136,000 lire, 1929, 35,438,430 lire. In 1931 the exports to the United Kingdom were 11,657*l.* and the imports 46,086*l.* Re-exports from U.K. in 1931 were 3,297*l.*

Communications.—The principal means of communication inland are the caravans which follow long-frequented routes. Tripoli (town) is connected by telegraph cable with Malta, and by land lines with Bengardane (Tunis). In 1912 an Italian cable was laid between Syracuse and Tripoli.

Total length of railways, 144 miles. The lines in Tripolitania are: a line 73 miles long, along the coast, from Tripoli to Zuara; one 13 miles long, from Tripoli to Tagiura; and one 52 miles long, from Tripoli to Azizia, Henscir, and El Abiat. There are 1,007 miles of carriage road.

There are fortnightly steamship sailings from Tripoli to Naples. From Tripoli to Syracuse and vice versa there are two steamship sailings every week. Malta is always touched. From Tripoli along the coast there are weekly steamship sailings.

During the year 1929, 601 steamers and 219 sailing vessels entered the port of Tripoli, landing 149,344 tons of goods and 26,016 passengers; while 598 steamers and 243 sailing vessels left the port embarking 24,271 tons of goods and 26,890 passengers. During the same period the post office issued post money orders for 115,573,191 lire and paid out money orders amounting to 103,278,704 lira. The number of messages despatched was 198,159, and those received were 197,095. The railways carried 192,288 passengers and 170,243 tons of goods.

Banking and Currency.—The Banca d'Italia, the Banco di Sicilia, the Banco di Napoli, the Banco di Roma, the Cassa di Risparmio, the Cassa di Piccolo Prestito and other banks carry on financial operations. The official currency is the Italian, but English pounds and francs are also used in commercial transactions.

There is a British Consul at Tripoli and a Vice-Consul at Homs.

CYRENAICA.

Area and Population.—The area of the territory is estimated at about 75,340 square miles, and with the hinterland (zone of Cufra) 285,640 square miles. According to a census taken in 1931, the population was estimated at 225,000 (10,000 Italians). The principal town is Benghazi with 33,794 inhabitants in December, 1929.

The oasis of Jarabub, on the eastern border of Cyrenaica, was ceded by Egypt to Italy, and Italian troops occupied it on February 7, 1926. On the other hand, the frontier in the neighbourhood of Sollum on the sea was rectified in favour of Egypt.

Justice.—For details as to the Administration of Justice, see above under Tripolitania.

Finance.—For the financial year 1930-31 the revenue and expenditure of Cyrenaica were estimated at: Revenue proper of the colony, 43,880,000 lire; State contribution, 204,700,000 lire; total, 248,580,000 lire; civil expenditure, 96,905,000 lire; military expenditure, 150,980,000 lire.

Defence.—The military force in Cyrenaica consists (1929) of 500 officers and 16,000 men (13,000 natives and 3,000 Italians).

Production and Industry.—Pasturage is abundant and cattle could be bred on a vast scale. An impulse will be given to agriculture by the establishment of large numbers of Colonists from Italy. This process of established large nuclei at various points has already begun, notably at Guaracia, Soluk, Tocra, el-Abiar and Barce. Big concessions of territory have also been granted to single individuals upon a kind of hire-purchase basis near Sidi Mahius, es Sileia, el-Mletania, Tocra and Barce. Bananas are grown at Derna, and experimental planting of wine grapes at Guaracia, under Government supervision, has given promising results. Barley is the chief food of the people. In 1928 the yield in sponge fishing was valued at 50,558 kilos. There is one tunny fishery near Benghazi; catch in 1929 was 532 tons, and of pilchards, 4,750 tons. The development of the valuable salt pans of Benghazi is being advanced slowly: in 1929 the yield was 20,000 tons.

Commerce.—The trade of Cyrenaica was (1930): Imports, 151,652,000 lire; exports, 21,249,000 lire. The principal imports are cotton goods and sugar; exports (1929), sponges (8,633,210 lire); hides and skins (2,081,120 lire); wool (2,450,345 lire); cattle (1928, 2,830,000 lire); camels (1928, 283 in number), and carpets (1928, 261,000 lire).

Communications.—Good carriage roads join the coastal centres, and run from there inland, linking up with the old caravan routes which lead through the oases to Darfur, Wadai, and Borker. A steamer calls every week at Benghazi from Syracuse. Another steamer calls every two weeks from Genoa, Leghorn, Palermo, Tunis and Tripoli at Benghazi and continues to Derna and Alexandria (Egypt). In 1912 an Italian cable was laid between Syracuse and Benghazi. A railway line 67 miles long runs from Benghazi to el-Abiar and on to Barce, and one 35 miles long from Benghazi to Soluch. In 1929, 1,003 vessels of 696,752 tons entered, and 1,001 vessels of 667,510 tons cleared the ports. The length of railway open to traffic was 170 km. (106 miles). The number of passengers was 101,115, and the goods traffic 35,248 metric tons.

In Cyrenaica the telegraph lines have a length of about 187 miles (1928). In 1928 there were 7 telegraph stations. There is a cable from Benghazi to Syracuse. There were in 1928, 24 wireless stations, open to international service. In 1926, 30,000 messages were sent. There were in 1926, 12 telephone exchanges. During the year ending June 30, 1928-29, 75,874 postal money orders for an amount of 84,222,999 lire were issued and 22,428 amounting to 65,947,530 lire were received. During the same period 305,722 messages were despatched and 262,937 received. The railways (1927-28) carried 93,564 passengers and 34,702 tons of goods.

Banking and Currency.—The Banca d'Italia and the Banco di Roma carry on financial operations. In 1925 the Cassa di Risparmio della Cyrenaica opened at Benghazi and Derna, and now has branches at Barce, Cirene, Derna and Tobruk.

There is a British Consul at Benghazi. There are also French, Spanish and Greek Consuls.

AEGEAN ISLANDS.

Italy occupied the Aegean Islands in 1912, during the Tripoli War. By the Treaty of Lausanne, which came into force on August 6, 1924, Turkey ceded them, with the island of Castellorosso, to Italy in full sovereignty. The military regime in the islands lasted from the occupation, May 4, 1912, to August 7, 1920. The civil regime was then established, Governors being appointed. The Governor, who is subject to the Foreign Office in Rome, is head of the administration; his authority is represented in the smaller islands by the Regent of the Government of Cos and five delegates in the islands of Lero, Calimno, Symi, Scarpanto and Castellorosso. The municipalities of the cities of Rhodes and Cos debate autonomously the matters within their province. The municipal councils of these two cities are appointed by the Governor. The other towns and villages are administered by sindaci and demogerondi elected by the people according to ancient customs.

Governor.—Mario Lago. (Appointed February 1923.)

Area and Population.—The following are the Italian islands in the Aegean with their areas and population in 1929 (Italian names in brackets) :—

Island	Area in sq. miles	Population 1929	Island	Area in sq. miles	Population 1929
Rhodes (Rodi) .	550	45,000	Karchi (Calchi)	10	1,800
Cos (Coo) . .	115	18,000	Symi (Simi) .	22	9,287
Patmos (Patmo) .	12	2,550	Astypalaea (Stampalia) .	36	1,370
Lipso (Lisso) .	6	560	Karpathos (Scar-
Kalymnos (Callino)	37	24,000	panto) . .	109	11,500
Leros (Lero) .	24	4,000	Casos (Caso) .	23	1,760
Nisyros (Nisiro) .	15	3,160	Castelrosso .	3	2,740
Tilos (Piscopi) .	24	1,160

The chief towns are : Rhodes (capital) with more than 25,000 inhabitants ; Calimno, 15,970 ; Cos, 11,134 ; Symi, 9,287.

Justice.—The special judiciary of the Aegean Islands includes (1) the Department of Judicial Services, under which are all the judicial offices of the possession ; (2) the Tribunal of Second Instance (appeal) ; (3) the Assize Court ; (4) a Civil and Penal Tribunal of First Instance at Rhodes, with jurisdiction over the islands of Calchos, Symi, Piscopi, Scarpanto, Caso and Castelrosso ; (5) a Civil and Penal Tribunal of First Instance at Cos, with jurisdiction over all the other islands. The magistrates are metropolitans. Special Ecclesiastical and Mixed Tribunals which exert authority in matters of personal status also operate for the Orthodox, Moslems, and Jews, and Mixed Tribunals of Appeal. These special tribunals apply the provisions of Byzantine, Koranic and Talmudic law.

Finance.—The State contribution is 3,000,000 lire on a budget of 42,000,000 lire (1931).

Education.—There are Government schools for boys and girls, both elementary and secondary, and practical agricultural school, commercial school of first and second degree, and a normal school ; and private schools, both elementary and secondary, for the various communities.

Defence.—The Aegean Islands are garrisoned by an infantry regiment of two battalions, one stationed at Rhodes and the other at Cos. These battalions send detachments to the smaller islands. The Royal Navy has a station at Rhodes, to which are attached the units scattered over the Aegean and the naval base of Porto Lago in Leros. The police and passport service is in the hands of the Carabinieri (one company). The Customs services are carried out by the Finance Guard (one company).

Agriculture, Commerce and Navigation.—The agriculture of the islands of Rhodes and Cos is highly developed. These islands are famous for the cultivation of the very famous table grapes, other white and black grapes. Olives, tobacco and vegetables are also cultivated. The most important industries are the manufacture of oriental carpets, wines in bottles, and olive oils, that are specially exported to Italy and to Egypt.

The market to which the greater part of the exports is directed is Egypt, which is connected with Rhodes by speedy steamship lines. Rhodes is developing a considerable tourist traffic, partly dependent on the thermal springs at Calitea. Sponge fishing is of great importance in the islands of Calimno, Symi and Castellorosso. The transit and inter-island commerce gives rise to a brisk harbour movement of sailing vessels and small steamers, which serve the neighbouring islands. This traffic is heightened by the peculiar geographical situation of Rhodes. The countries which import manufactures and food-stuffs are principally Italy, Egypt and Turkey. The trade of Aegean Islands was (1930): imports, 89,250,000 lire; exports, 17,425,000 lire. There are no railways, but there exist about 200 miles of good roads.

Communications.—Every week a steamship sails from Brindisi and from Alexandria to Rhodes and vice versa. The means of communications are assured by steamships and motorships of the Lloyd Triestino, Puglia, San Marco, Situmar, Messageries Maritimes and many other steamship companies which touch at Italian ports of the Tyrranean and Adriatic Seas and the Piræus, Smyrna, Syria, Palestine and Egypt. There is an air-mail every week from Brindisi and Athens to Rhodes.

There are in Rhodes almost 200 miles of good roads and there are telegraph lines (cable and wireless) and automatic telephones in each island.

Banking and Currency.—The Banco d'Italia, the Banco di Roma, the Banco di Sicilia and other banks carry on financial operations. Italian money is current; the metric system of weights and measures is in use.

There is a British Consul at Rhodes.

Concession of Tientsin.—The Italian concession of Tientsin, under the agreement with China of June 7, 1902, lies on the left bank of the Hai-Ho and has an area of about half a square kilometre with a population of 5,148 (Chinese, 4,675; Italians, 60; other Europeans, 413) in 1925.

JAPAN.

(NIPPON.)

Reigning Sovereign.

THE Japanese claim that their empire was founded by the first Emperor Jinmu Tennō, 660 B.C., and that the dynasty founded by him still reigns. It was revived in the year 1868 (the first year of the Meiji), when the now ruling (de jure) sovereign overthrew, after a short war, the power of the Shogun (the de facto sovereign), who had held the ruling power in successive families, since the twelfth century; and in 1871 the feudal system (Hōken Seiji) was entirely suppressed. The Emperor bears title of Tennō; but the appellation by which he is called in relation to external affairs is 'Kōtei,' a word of Chinese origin. Only foreigners make use of the poetical title 'Mikado.'

Emperor of Japan.—Hirohito, born at Tōkyō, April 29, 1901; succeeded his father, Yoshihito, December 25, 1926; married, January 26, 1924, to Princess Nagako, born March 6, 1903, daughter of H.I.H. Prince Kuninomiya (died January 27, 1929). Offspring:—Imperial Princess.—I., Princess Shigeko (Terunomiya), born December 6, 1925. II., Princess Sachiko (Hisanomiya), born September 10, 1927; died March 8, 1928. III., Princess Kazuko (Takanomiya), born September 30, 1929. IV., Princess Atsuko (Yorinomiya), born March 7, 1931.

Empress Dowager.—Princess Sadako, born June 25, 1884; daughter of Prince Kujō; married, May 10, 1900, to late Emperor.

Brothers of the Emperor.—I., Prince Yasuhito (Chichibunomiya), born June 25, 1902; married, September 28, 1928, to Setsu-Ko Matsudaira. II., Prince Nobuhito (Takamatsunomiya), born January 3, 1905; married, February 3, 1930, to Kiku-Ko Tokugawa. III., Prince Takahito (Suminomiya), born December 2, 1915.

By the Imperial House Law of February 11, 1889, the succession to the throne has been definitely fixed upon the male descendants. In case of failure of direct descendants, the throne devolves upon the nearest Prince and his descendants. The civil list is fixed at 4,500,000 yen.

Constitution and Government.

By the Constitution of February 11, 1889, the Emperor combines in himself the rights of sovereignty, and exercises the whole of the executive powers with the advice and assistance of the Cabinet Ministers, who are responsible to him, and are appointed by himself. There is also a Privy Council, who are consulted by the Emperor on important matters of State. The Emperor can declare war, make peace, and conclude treaties, and he exercises the legislative power with the consent of the Imperial Diet. It is his prerogative to give sanction to laws, to convoke the Imperial Diet, to open, close, and prorogue it, and to dissolve the House of Representatives. The Imperial Diet consists of two Houses, a House of Peers and a House of Representatives. Every law requires the consent of the Imperial Diet. Both Houses may respectively initiate projects of law, can make representations to the Government as to laws or upon any other subject, and may present addresses to the Emperor.

The House of Peers (404 members) is composed of (1) male members of the Imperial family of full age (16 in number); (2) princes and marquises of the age of 30 and upwards (15 princes and 30 marquises); (3) counts, viscounts, and barons of the age of 30 and upwards, who have been elected by the members of their respective orders, to the total number of 18 counts, 66 viscounts and 66 barons; (4) persons above the age of 30 years, who have been nominated members by the Emperor for meritorious services to the State or for erudition, not to exceed 125 in number, the term of membership being, in principle, for life; (5) 4 members of the Imperial Academy of Sciences above the age of 30 years, who have been elected by the members of that body; (6) 1 or 2 persons above the age of 30 years, who have been elected in Hokkaido and each Fu and Ken from among and by respectively 100 or 200 male inhabitants thereof, paying therein the highest amount of direct national taxes on land, trade or industry, to the total number of 66. The term of membership under (3), (5) and (6) is seven years.

Until May 1925 the suffrage for the House of Representatives was restricted by qualification arising from payment of taxes. But in May 1925 general manhood suffrage was enacted to come into force at the first general election. According to the new law, the members of the House shall number 466 (at present, 453), a fixed number being returned from each electoral district for a term of 4 years.

The proportion of the total number of members to the population of Japan proper is 1 to 133,309. In principle, all the male Japanese subjects above the age of 25 years are electors and those above the age of 30 years eligible. Heads of the families of peers and persons in the army and navy can neither elect nor be elected; holders of certain specified offices in the Government are ineligible; and no Government officials except the seimukan (political) class are, while in office, permitted to be members of the House. Such persons as have not lived continuously for not less than a year within the same city, town or village, shall not be registered as electors. Voting is by secret single ballot.

The President and Vice-President of the House of Peers are nominated by the Emperor from among the members, and President and Vice-President of the House of Representatives are nominated by the Emperor from among three candidates, elected by the House. The Presidents of both Houses receive an annual salary of 7,500 yen; Vice-Presidents, 4,500 yen; elected and nominated members of the House of Peers and members of the House of Representatives, 3,000 yen, besides travelling expenses. The Imperial Diet, which must meet annually, has control over the finances.

At the elections held on February 20, 1932, the following parties were returned to the 56th Diet:—Seiyūkai (Government Party), 303; Minseitō (Liberal Opposition), 146; Labour, 5; Other Groups, 10.

The Cabinet (appointed on December 13, 1931) consists of the following members:—

Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs.—Takeshi Inukai.

Home Affairs.—Kizaburo Suzuki.

Finance.—Korekiyo Takahashi.

War.—Lt.-General Sadao Araki.

Marine.—Admiral Mineo Osumi.

Minister of Justice.—Toyosuke Hata.

Education.—Ichiro Hatoyama.

Agriculture and Forestry.—Teijiro Yamamoto.

Local Government.

For local administration Japan (except Hokkaidō or Yezo; Chōsen, formerly Korea; Karafuto or Japanese Sakhalin; and Taiwan or Formosa) is divided into prefectures ('Fu' and 'Ken'). The prefectures are sub-divided into municipalities ('Shi'), towns ('Chō') and villages ('Son'). Okinawa Prefecture and some islands have, however, special organisations. Municipality, town, and village are the units of local government. These administrative divisions form at the same time local corporations of the same names. In each prefecture there are a governor ('Chiji'), a prefectural assembly ('Fukwai' or 'Ken-kwai'), and a prefectural council ('Fu-Sanji-kwai' or 'Ken-sanji-kwai'), of which the governor is president; in each municipality a mayor, a municipal assembly, and a municipal council, of which the mayor is the president; and in each town or village a chief magistrate and a town or village assembly. Prefectural assemblies give decisions upon certain matters prescribed by the Law (chiefly upon financial affairs); and municipal, town and village assemblies, upon public affairs in general. The prefectural council gives decisions upon matters delegated by the prefectural assemblies and upon matters of pressing necessity when the assembly is not in actual session.

Citizenship in a municipality, town, or village, is recognised, in principle, for every male person above the age of 25 years who has resided for two years continuously within the municipality, town or village, with similar exceptions to those in the case of the suffrage for the House of Representatives. Every citizen is qualified to elect and be elected for the municipal, town, or village assembly of his own city, town or village, and also for the prefectural assembly of the prefecture to which his city, town, or village belongs.

Hokkaidō has a governor and a special organisation. Chōsen has a Governor-General. The peninsula is administered in 13 Do or provinces, these being sub-divided into 329 Tuand Yun or districts. Taiwan (Formosa) also has a governor-general, who is invested with very extensive powers. The island is divided into 5 provinces (Shū), each of which has a governor. Karafuto is divided into 7 local divisions (Shichō).

Area and Population.

The Empire consists of the five principal islands of Honshiu (mainland), Kiushiu, Shikoku, Hokkaidō (Yezo), and Taiwan (Formosa); besides the Chishima (Kuriles), Sado, Oki, Awaji, Iki, Tsushima, Riukiu (Luchu Islands), Ogasawarajima (Bonin Islands), Bōkōtō (Pescadores) islands, the peninsula Chōsen (Korea), and the southern half of the island of Karafuto (Sakhalin). Total area is shown as follows:—

Administratively there exists a division into 47 prefectures. There is also a division into 633 rural districts, 109 cities, 1,704 towns, and 10,046 villages (October, 1930).

Taiwan (Formosa) and Bōkotō (the Pescadores) were ceded by China in accordance with the treaty of Shimonoseki in 1895, and Japanese Karafuto was ceded by Russia by the Treaty of Portsmouth, N.H., in 1905. By the same Treaty of Peace the Russian Government ceded to Japan the lease of Port Arthur, Ta-lien, and adjacent territory and waters, and also the railway between Chan-Chun and Port Arthur, and the coal mines worked in connection therewith. In March, 1915, the Chinese Government agreed to extend the lease of the territory on Liaotung Peninsula, including Port Arthur and Dalny, to 99 years. The Chino-Japanese Treaty of December 22, 1905, provided for the interests of China and Japan with respect to Manchuria. By a treaty between Japan and Korea on Aug. 23, 1910, the Korean Territory was annexed to the Empire of Japan.

By an agreement signed May 25, 1915, Japan obtained from China exclusive mining rights in Eastern Mongolia, and the right to settle in the province, and in Shantung the transference of all mining and railway privileges hitherto enjoyed by the Germans; also the extension of the lease of Port Arthur to 99 years, and a joint control over certain industrial works in which they have a large financial interest, besides other privileges. (For full details, see Introduction to THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK for 1916.)

volumes. In 1929, 21,111 original books and translations, and 9,191 periodicals, monthly, weekly, and daily, were published.

Justice and Crime.

A system of justice founded on modern jurisprudence has been established. Judges are irremovable, except by way of criminal or disciplinary punishment. There are four classes of courts in Japan; namely, subdistrict courts, district courts, courts of appeal, and court of cassation. In the court of cassation five judges preside; in the courts of appeal and in the district courts three judges; in each case one of them being the chief judge. In the subdistrict courts a single judge presides. A court which deals with disputes respecting administrative affairs is under the direct supervision of the Emperor.

The following are the criminal statistics for four years:—In 1925, 156,442 criminals were condemned; in 1926, 155,316; in 1927, 105,780; in 1928, 144,409.

In 1928 there were 56 prisons, 100 detached prisons and houses of correction. Number of prisoners of all kinds, convicted and accused, and those in houses of correction at the close of 1928:—Men, 38,900; women, 724; total, 39,624.

Pauperism.

In 1899 new legislation settled that the minimum amount of prefectural funds for the relief of sufferers from extreme calamity shall be 500,000 yen; that funds below that limit are to be made up by the Treasury; and that when the amount of relief exceeds 5 per cent. of the funds at the beginning of the fiscal year, one-third of the amount thus granted is to be supplied from the Treasury.

The relief statistics for 3 years show expenditure as follows (in yen):—

Year	Food	Clothing	Providing with work	Shelter and Temporary lodgings	Total (including miscellaneous)
1926-27	264,420	115,472	68,817	873,982	962,860
1927-28	255,552	91,253	140,774	81,823	606,632
1928-29	112,809	50,697	64,435	126,261	375,086

In 1928-29 the Government relieved 12,332 persons to the amount of 549,000 yen. On March 31, 1929, 604 foundlings were being maintained, and the expense in that year was 98,081 yen. There are, besides, several workhouses established by local corporations and private persons. The number of hospitals in 1928 was 2,003 (12 state, 92 public and 1,899 private).

I. ARMY.

Service in the army (or navy) is universal and compulsory. Liability commences at the age of 17 and extends to the age of 40, but actual service begins at 20. All those physically capable of bearing arms are divided into two classes, the 'fit,' and the 'absolutely fit.' The numbers necessary for the first line (or active army), called Gen-eki, are taken solely from the 'absolutely fit.' Service in the ranks is for 2 years in all arms; then for 5 years and 4 months in the reserve (Yōbi). Reservists are usually called out once during their reserve service, for 3 weeks. Having completed 7 years and 4 months in the first line, including its reserve, the men are transferred to the second line, called Kōbi. Service in the Kōbi is for 10 years, with usually one period of training of 3 weeks. At the end of their Kōbi service the men are in the 38th year of their age, and they are passed into the Kokumin, which is the territorial or home defence army. In this they serve for 2 years and 8 months, to complete their total service of 20 years.

The reserve for making good the waste of war, or supplementary reserve, is called Hojū. It is composed of the balance of the 'absolutely fit' recruits not required for the first line, and of as many of those classed as 'fit' as may be required to make up a certain fixed number. They all serve in the Hojū for 12 years and 4 months, during which a part of them is called out for training. After completion of this they are passed to the Kokumin until 40 years of age to complete their army service.

The Kokumin is divided into two 'bans.' The first ban comprises all the men who have passed, as shown above, through the first line and landwehr, or through the supplementary reserve and landwehr, and who therefore have only 2 years and 8 months to spend in the Kokumin. The second ban consists of Jōbi, Kōbi, Hojū, and those of which do not serve for the first ban. It includes (1) those who though 'fit' are not required for the Hojū; (2) those who for various reasons have been exempted from military service; and (3) the young men between 17 and 20 years of age who have not been called up. None of these classes receive any military training, but they can be drawn on in case of national emergency.

The partially trained men who have been passed into the Kōbi from the Hojū are not included in the fighting units of the Second Line. They supply the large number of men required for the transport service on mobilisation, and for the expansion of other departmental corps.

The standing army of Japan consists of 17 divisions, including the guard, 4 independent cavalry brigades, 2 independent regiments of mountain guns, and 8 regiments of heavy field artillery.

Two infantry regiments form a brigade, and two brigades (12 battalions) a division. The divisional artillery consists of a regiment of field or mountain artillery (6 batteries of 4 guns). A regiment of cavalry of 2 squadrons, and a battalion of engineers, and also a battalion of transport service, complete the division. Four infantry, and 4 artillery, ammunition columns, 6 field hospitals, 4 supply columns, and 1 remount depôt accompany each division in the field. The war strength of a division is reckoned at 18,700 officers and men, 4,800 horses, 36 guns, and 1,674 vehicles.

The peace establishment of the active army in 1931 was 12,348 officers and 185,540 other ranks. The strength of the active army and the first and second reserves was 17,343 officers and 259,304 other ranks.

The air personnel for the army numbered in 1931, 3,500, organised in 8 flying regiments and a balloon corps. The number of aeroplanes in service was 584, in reserve 254. It is proposed to increase the number in service by 300.

The Japanese Islands are divided into military districts, corresponding to the divisions of the army, and the district is the unit of administration as well as of territorial command. Each division is supplied with recruits from its own district, except the Guards, whose infantry recruits are selected from the whole country; the other arms of the Guard division are recruited from each district of the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 13th and 14th divisions. Abroad there are 9,000 men in Manchuria, and 800 in North China.

The Emperor is the head and supreme commander of the army, and also of the navy. He nominates the War Minister (always a general officer of high rank), the Chief of the General Staff, the Director of Military Schools, and the Members of the Military Council.

The arm of the Japanese infantry is the improved rifle; calibre, 6.5 mm. (.256") machine guns and light machine guns, infantry cannons and infantry howitzers, a Mauser with an altered chamber. The cavalry are armed with a carbine of similar construction, and also with heavy and light machine guns. The field gun is a q.-f. shielded Krupp of 7.5 cm. calibre, which fires a shrapnel of 14.3 lbs. The mountain artillery has a gun of the same calibre firing a lighter shell. There are a certain number of field howitzer batteries, armed with 4·6" and 5·9" howitzers, firing shells of about 44 lbs. and 80 lbs. respectively. A 4" gun for heavy field batteries is being introduced.

The military budget for 1929-30 amounted to 225,256,000 yen.

II. NAVY.

The administration of the Navy is in the charge of the Minister of Marine, under whose control is also the Naval Technical Department for Naval Construction, while the Chief of the General Staff is directly responsible to the Emperor for Operation, Mobilization, and Intelligence.

The coast of Japan is divided into three maritime districts having their headquarters at Yokosuka, Kure, and Sasebo.

The Japanese Fleet was markedly affected by the Washington Agreement, though Japan remains the third great naval power of the world. Her replacement tonnage was fixed by the Treaty at 315,000 tons in capital ships, which is superior to the strength allowed to France and Italy. By the London Treaty, no capital ships may be replaced during 1931-36. The existing ships are in process of being modernized, it is said at a cost of 5,000,000*l*. Recent programmes have been concerned mainly with the building of cruisers, destroyers and submarines for the purpose of replacing obsolete ships. Under the Fleet Replacement Law there are to be built during 1931-38: 4 cruisers of 8,600 tons, 12 destroyers, 8 submarines, 4 minelayers, 5 minesweepers and sundry auxiliary units.

The principal state dockyards are at Kure and Yokosuka, where capital ships have been built, and there is a dockyard also at Sasebo, where lighter vessels are constructed. The earthquake of September 1, 1923, almost destroyed the dockyard of Yokosuka, which was the Japanese Portsmouth, but no ship of the active fleet was damaged seriously, and considerable sums have since been devoted to the reconstruction of the yard. The Kawasaki private shipbuilding yard at Kobe and the Mitsubishi establishment at Nagasaki are well equipped with modern plant, and there are lesser building yards at Maizuru, Uruga and elsewhere, as well as the government armour and armament factory at Kure. Japan has made herself practically independent of Europe for the building and arming and equipment of her warships.

A statement of the Japanese fleet follows:—

There were only 11 steamships of more than 10,000 tons, all belonging to the Nippon Yusen Kaisha. The Japanese Government subsidises shipping companies for foreign trade, and now Japanese vessels run on four great routes to Europe, North America, South America, and Australia. There are also lines plying between Japanese ports and Korea, Northern China, and nine ports on the Yangtse-Kiang.

Internal Communications.

The total length of roads in Japan is 591,484 miles (1927).

The first railway in Japan was built in 1872, between Tokyo and Yokohama, a distance of 18 miles. By 1880 there were 73 miles of railway in operation; by 1900, 3,638 miles; by 1910, 5,354 miles; by October, 1923, 9,974 miles. The following table gives the railway statistics for 1929-30 :—

It has been decided to make the standard gauge 4 feet 8½ inches. The work is expected to be completed in 1943, and the cost estimated at 1,408,000,000 yen. Japan has been conceded by China the right to build five railway lines in Manchuria and Mongolia. Comprehensive plans have been made for the electrification of the Japanese Government railways. On June 30, 1929, there were 3,492 miles electrified, of which 153 miles were state-owned and 3,339 miles owned by private companies.

There are (1928-29) 1,183 miles of electric tramway in Japan.

The notes of the Bank of Japan are of seven denominations, 1, 5, 10, 20, 50, 100, and 200 yen.

The total amount of notes in circulation on Dec. 31, 1930, was 1,556,090,000 yen, of which 1,413,891,000 yen were notes of the Bank of Japan; 90,615,000 yen were notes of the Bank of Chosen; 39,904,000 yen notes of the Bank of Taiwan. On March 31, 1929, the gold stock of Japan was 1,178,000,000 yen, of which 91,000,000 yen were held by the Government and 1,087,000,000 yen by the Bank of Japan. The embargo on the export of gold, imposed on September 12, 1917, was removed on January 11, 1930, and Japan thus returned to the gold standard. The embargo, however, was re-imposed on December 13, 1931, to check the gold efflux.

The modern banking system dates from 1872. The principal banks of Japan are the Nippon Ginko (Bank of Japan), the Yokohama Specie Bank, the Hypothec Bank, the Industrial Bank of Japan, the Hokkaidō Colonisation Bank, the Bank of Taiwan, Bank of Chōsen. There are also (1929) 24 agricultural and industrial banks, 955 ordinary banks, and 97 savings banks. The condition of the banks (ordinary, saving and special) for three years (December 31st) was as follows.

Money, Weights, and Measures.

The present monetary law came into force from October, 1897, by which gold standard was adopted. The unit of value is 0.75 gramme of pure gold, and is called the yen = 2s. 0½d., which, however, is not coined. The pieces coined are as follows:—Gold coins (20, 10, and 5 yen pieces), silver coins (50, 20, and 10 sen pieces), nickel coin (10 and 5 sen pieces), and bronze coins (1 sen and 5 rin pieces). The sen is the hundredth part of a yen, and the rin is the tenth part of a sen. The gold coins are .900 fine, and the silver coins .720 fine. The gold coins formerly issued (20, 10, 5, 2, and 1 yen pieces) are used at double their face value. The one-yen silver coin formerly issued is withdrawn. The old copper 2, 1 and ½ sen pieces are used as formerly.

Weights and measures are as follows:—

The kin	= 160 momme	.	.	.	= 1.323 lbs. avoirdupois.
„ kwan	= 1,000 „	.	.	.	= 8.267 lbs. „
„ sun	.	.	.	.	= 1.193 inches.
„ shaku (10 sun )	.	.	.	.	= 11.930 inches.
The ken	= 6 shaku	.	.	.	= 5.965 feet.
„ chō	= 60 ken	.	.	.	= ⅓ mile, 5.4229 chains.
„ ri	= 36 chō	.	.	.	= 2.44 miles.
„ ri sq.	.	.	.	.	= 5.9552 sq. miles.
„ tsubo	.	.	.	.	= 3.9538 sq. yds.

„ to , liquid = ⅓ koku	.	.	.	.	= 3.9680 gallons.
„ „ dry	.	.	.	.	= 1.9851 pecks.

The metric system was made obligatory by a law passed in March, 1921, but has not yet been enforced. The following rates are recognised:—

metre = 3.3 shaku.

gramme = 0.266667 momme (⅓ momme).

KOREA (CHŌSEN).

Government.—By a treaty concluded between Japan and Korea on August 22, 1910, the Korean territory was formally annexed to the Empire of Japan. The Emperor was deprived of all political power, and the title of the country was changed back to 'Chōsen,' from Tai Han, which had been adopted in 1897, and the office of Japanese Governor-General established. By an Imperial Rescript of 1919, Korea is to be treated as in all respects an integral part of Japan, Koreans to be on the same footing as Japanese. Members of the Korean Imperial House and the late Korean Cabinet have had Japanese patents of nobility conferred upon them.

Governor-General.—General Kazunari Ugaki (June, 1931).

Area and Population.—The area is 85,228 square miles. Population at the end of 1929, 19,331,061. Of this number, 488,478 were Japanese, 18,784,437 Koreans, and 58,146 foreigners. The 1929 returns give the number of British subjects as 258, Americans 854, French 64, and Germans 87. At the end of 1929 the population of the largest cities and towns was as follows:—Keijo-fu (Seoul), the capital, 340,290 (93,272 Japanese), Fusan-fu (Pusan), 119,655 (42,642 Japanese), Heijo-fu (Pyongyang), 156,442 (27,438 Japanese), Taikyū-fu (Tai-Ku), 94,801 (28,090 Japanese), Chemulpo 59,558 (11,534 Japanese).

On October 1, 1930, the population of Korea was 21,057,969 (10,763,230 males and 10,294,739 females).

The language of the people is intermediate between Mongolo-Tartar and Japanese, with a large admixture of Chinese words, and an alphabetical system of writing is used. Official correspondence, except with Korean provincial officials, is conducted in Japanese. The written language of the people is a mixture of Chinese characters and native script.

Religion and Education.—The knowledge of Chinese classics and of Confucian doctrine, formerly considered essential to the education of the upper classes, has given way under Japanese and foreign influence to a more practical system of instruction, but the worship of ancestors is still observed with as much punctiliousness as in China. In the country there are numerous Buddhist monasteries, which, however, are looked upon with scant respect. There is a large number of Christian converts. French missionaries were working in the country from 1784 and struggled for a century in the face of official persecution. The ban on Christianity was raised in 1882 and the first Protestant missionaries came to Korea in 1884. In 1929 there were 2,791 foreign missionaries working in Korea and a membership of 312,645 converts (communicants) was claimed. The missions early established numerous hospitals and schools throughout the country.

Since annexation the Japanese authorities have provided schools in all parts of the country, but it is recognized that much is required to be done, as less than 20 per cent. of the Koreans are literate. Plans are now being drawn up to establish an elementary school in every myen or village, but lack of funds hinders the speedy attainment of this ideal. Technical schools are being gradually introduced.

In 1929 there were for the education mainly of Japanese 463 elementary schools with 63,171 pupils and 2,039 teachers, 11 middle schools with 5,649 pupils, 1 medical school, a law university, 14 normal schools with 2,429 students and 203 teachers, a higher technical school, a higher commercial school and a higher agricultural school, 24 girls' high schools with 9,432 pupils, and various kindergarten and private schools. For the education of Koreans there were 1,620 common schools with 422,800 pupils, and 78 private common schools with 19,966 pupils, 24 higher common schools (9 private) with 10,716 pupils, 15 (9 private) higher common schools for girls, with 3,840 pupils; besides various industrial schools. There is a University at Seoul with 553 students (March 31, 1929), of whom, 387 were Koreans and 166 Japanese. The preparatory course has 291 students.

In Seoul there are three daily Korean newspapers, and 2 Japanese besides others published at Chemulpo and in other parts of the country. There is a Government-subsidised daily newspaper in English, published at Seoul.

Finance.—The finances of Korea form a special account in the Budget of Japan. The estimated revenue and expenditure for two years are shown as follows :—

Revenue.	1930-31	1931-32	Expenditure.	1930-31	1931-32
	Yen	Yen		Yen	Yen
Ordinary ...	195,975,003	202,057,540	Ordinary ...	176,558,644	186,672,827
Extraordinary ...	50,877,840	37,672,243	Extraordinary ...	76,392,921	53,056,956
Total ...	246,852,843	239,729,783	Total ...	252,951,565	239,729,783

The outstanding debt (March 31, 1931) is 387,945,394 yen.

Production.—Korea is almost entirely an agricultural country; the cultivated area at end of 1929 was 10,763,319 acres. The Japanese own nearly one-half of the cultivated land with an average holding of 51.80 acres per household as against 3.84 acres per household for Koreans. The chief crops are rice (about 27 per cent. of the cultivated area), barley, wheat, beans, and grain of all kinds, besides tobacco and cotton. The rice crops for 4 years were (in bushels) :—1926, 91,142,474 ; 1927, 103,045,131 ; 1928, 80,485,957 ; 1929, 81,617,865. In 1929, 42,957,907 bushels of barley were produced ; 23,773,178 bushels of soya beans, 150,161,860 lbs. of Upland American cotton and 59,148,220 lbs. of native cotton. Whale fishing is carried on the coast. In 1929, 66,181,747 pounds of apples and 30,280,960 pounds of pears were produced. Silkworm rearing is also carried on and in 1929 there were produced 2,887,844 bushels of cocoons ; in 1928, 2,299,978 bushels. Live-stock is raised as a by-product of agriculture. The cattle are well known for their size and quality. In 1929, there were 1,585,526 cattle, 55,826 horses, 1,327,983 pigs, 9,901 donkeys and 21,666 goats. The fishing industry is developing; value of catch in 1929, 65,338,398 yen.

Gold mining is carried on; the value of the 1929 output was 5,848,720 yen. There are several foreign-owned gold mines in active operation. Copper, iron, and coal are abundant in Korea; the development of these resources has been impeded by defective means of communication, but is making steady progress. The output of pig iron in 1929 was valued at 6,795,334 yen; iron ore at 3,153,988 yen; and coal 6,321,485 yen. Anthracite coal mines in the north of Korea are in operation. Graphite and mica also are found in fair quantities. The total value of mineral products in 1929 was 26,488,366 yen. The Government has the monopoly of ginseng, salt and tobacco, the latter yielding 54,068,249 lbs. in 1929. At end of 1928 there were 5,342 factories with a capital of 549,122,364 yen, and 99,547 employees, while the value of the output was 392,533,876 yen.

Commerce.—The open ports are Seoul, Chemulpo, Fusan, Gensan, Chinnampo, Mokpo, Kunsan, Seishin, Ping-Yang (inland city), Wiju, Yong-Am-Po (1908), Yuki, Joshin and Shin-wi-ju.

Shipping and Communications.—The shipping entered at the open ports in 1930 had a tonnage of 9,646,889, and those that cleared a tonnage of 9,514,652. In March 1930 there were 186 steamships, of 47,202 tons, and 684 sailing ships, of 22,705 tons, registered in Korea.

Transport in the interior is by rail, road (motor-car, oxen, pack-horses, etc.), and river. The railways are being rapidly extended and the roads are being gradually improved. At the end of March 1930 there were 11,464 miles of completed roads. Length of railways, 1931 (public and private), about 2,395 miles; number of passengers carried (1931) 20,649,934.

Number of post offices 725. There were 24,353 miles of telegraph wire open (March 1931), and the lines connect with the Japanese and the Chinese systems. The telephone has been introduced into all the principal towns; length of lines 5,589 miles (March, 1931). During the fiscal year ended March 1931 176,455,929 telephone messages, and 11,332,115 telegrams were sent.

A central bank, the Bank of Chōsen, was established in August, 1909, and in November it took the place of the First Bank of Japan (Dai-Ichi-Ginko) as the Government Treasury. Notes of this bank are permitted to circulate unrestrictedly within the jurisdiction of the Government-General of Chosen and are exchangeable with gold coin and convertible notes issued by the Bank of Japan. The Bank of Chōsen has a paid-up capital of 25 million yen, the deposits amounting to 2,508,031,000 yen (Dec. 31, 1929). Notes issued at Dec. 31, 1929, 118,701,000 yen. Against their issue must be provided a reserve of the same amount, consisting of gold coin, gold and silver bullion, and convertible notes of the Bank of Japan; silver bullion, however, must not exceed one-fourth of the total reserve. The postal savings banks had 2,098,602 depositors with a total amount 36,286,418 yen on March 31, 1930.

The coinage consists of gold pieces of 5-, 10-, and 20-yen, silver of 10-, 20-, and 50-sen, nickel of 5-sen, and 10-sen, and bronze of 1-sen. The gold coins, however, are not in general use, the ordinary medium of commerce being the notes of the Bank of Japan or of the Bank of Chōsen which are issued in the following denominations, viz.: 100 yen, 20 yen, 10 yen, 5 yen, and 1 yen. The old nickel coin has been wholly withdrawn from circulation, and the cash currency is now rarely seen, and then only in remote parts of the country. Under certain regulations, bills of exchange and cheques may pass into the currency. In the more important commercial towns there are authorised 'note associations' of merchants for the transaction of business relating to bills.

FORMOSA (TAIWAN).

The Island of Formosa, or Taiwan, was ceded to Japan by China by the treaty which was ratified on May 8, 1895, and Japan took formal possession on June 2 of the same year. Japanese civil government in the island began on March 31, 1896.

Governor-General.—Eizo Ishizuka.

The Island has an area of 13,890 square miles, with a population according to the census of Oct. 1, 1930, of 4,592,537 (2,353,238 males and 2,239,274 females). The official language is Japanese, but Chinese (Amoy dialect) is the most used.

Many improvements have been effected by the Japanese administration. A colonising scheme was commenced in 1909, whereby Japanese were settled in Taiwan. An educational system has been established for Japanese and natives. In 1929-30 there were for the instruction of the Japanese 183 primary schools, with 842 teachers and 30,148 pupils. There are also normal schools, a medical school, an industrial school, and a school for teaching the Japanese language to natives, and native languages to Japanese. The University of Formosa was opened in April, 1928.

The receipts of the Japanese administration are from inland taxes, customs, public undertakings, and also subsidies from Japan ranging from 5 to 9 million yen annually. The expenditure is chiefly for internal administration and the working of public undertakings.

LATVIA.

(LATVIJAS REPUBLIKA.)

LATVIA, along the southern part of the Baltic littoral, is inhabited chiefly by Letts. As early as the 13th century the Letts fought against the Germans (battle of Durbe, 1260), but in the long run the Germans carried the day, and the state created by the Teutonic Order under the form of a Federal Republic (consisting of Estonia, Latgale, Livonia, and Courland) lasted until 1560. Eventually, Estonia passed under the rule of Sweden, Latgale and Livonia under that of Lithuania-Poland, while Piltene and Oesel became Danish. Courland alone retained her independence under the form of a vassal duchy of Lithuania-Poland. In 1621 Livonia was annexed by Sweden, and in 1710 by Russia. In 1772, after the first partition of Poland, Latgale was assigned to Russia, and in 1795 Courland joined Russia. From this time onwards, Latvia was under Russian rule.

In 1917 Lettish public opinion expressed itself in favour of the separate existence of Latvia, and announced its view officially in the Russian Constituent Assembly in January 1918. An organization for establishing the independence of the country was formed, and on November 18, 1918, it proclaimed in Riga the sovereign Free State of Latvia, which has been recognised as an independent State by all the Powers, and was admitted to the League of Nations on September 22, 1921.

Constitution and Government.—The Latvian Constitution which was passed by the Constituent Assembly on February 15, 1922, declares that Latvia is an independent democratic Republic and that the sovereign power of the State is vested in the Latvian people. The Saeima (Parliament) consists of 100 representatives elected for 3 years by universal, equal, direct, and secret vote on the basis of proportional representation, by citizens of both sexes over 21 years of age. Its powers expire on the day on which the new Saeima assembles. The Saeima elects the President of the State by absolute majority, and he holds office for 3 years. No person can hold this office for more than 6 consecutive years. The President must be over 40 years of age. He is the Chief of the armed forces of the State, and, for the period of war, appoints a commander-in-chief. War can only be declared after a vote of the Saeima. The President chooses the Prime Minister, who forms the Cabinet; and the Cabinet is responsible to the Saeima. The President may propose the dissolution of the Saeima, which proposal shall then be followed by a vote of the people. If this proposal is accepted by the people, the Saeima is dissolved and new elections are proclaimed; if not, the President of the State is to be considered as having resigned and the Saeima elects a new President. All citizens are equal before the Law. The Judges are independent and irrevocable. The State Control is an independent collegial institution, its chief being elected by the Saeima for a definite period.

The elections to the Saeima, held on October 15, 1931, returned the following parties: Right, 29 (National bloc, 5; Farmers' League, 16; Clerical Catholic Party, 8); Centre, 26 (Economic Party, 7; Centre Party, 6; Latvian National Party, 5; Progressive Union, 3; various smaller parties, 5); Left, 28 (Social Democrats, 21; Communists, 7); National Minorities (Germans, Russians, Jews, Poles), 17; total, 100.

The Ministries are those of Interior, Foreign Affairs, Finance, War, National Welfare, Education, Agriculture, Justice, Communications, and State Control.

President of the State.—Albert Kviesis (elected April 9, 1930).

Prime Minister.—Mārgers Skujenieks (appointed December 5, 1931).

Area and Population.—Latvia consists of the former Russian Province of Courland (about 10,435 square miles), four southern districts (Riga, Wenden, Wolmar, Walk) of the former Russian province of Livonia (about 8,715 square miles) and three western districts (Dvinsk, Reshitza, Lutsin) of the former Russian province of Vitebsk (about 5,292 square miles), making a total of about 24,440 square miles, or, including inland lakes, about 25,000 square miles. The total length of the frontier line of Latvia is 1,040 statute miles, with a coast line of 338 statute miles. For administrative purposes Latvia is divided into: Vidzeme (Livonia), Kurzeme (Courland), Zemgale, and Latgale.

The chief town is Riga (the capital), population (1930) 377,917; population of other principal towns according to 1930 Census, Liepāja (Libau) 57,238; Daugavpils (Dvinsk), 43,226; Jelgava (Mitau), 33,048; Ventspils (Windau), 17,253; Rezekne (Rositten), 12,680; Valmiera (Wolmar), 8,368; Cēsis (Wenden), 7,692.

The census taken in 1930 showed a population of 1,900,045 in Latvia, of which 1,893,877 were Latvian citizens, and 56,168 foreigners (including 21,336 persons without nationality). Of the Latvian citizens 73.42 per cent. were Letts, 12.52 per cent. Russians, 4.97 per cent. Jews, 3.68 per cent. Germans, 3.12 per cent. Poles, 1.36 per cent. Lithuanians, 0.40 per cent. Estonians, 0.45 per cent. other nationalities, and 0.08 per cent. were persons with unknown nationality.

The birth-rate during 1930 was 19.81, and the death-rate 14.20 per 1,000.

Religion and Education.—The majority of the population in Latvia is Protestant (56.58 per cent.), but in Latgale and one district of Kurzeme there are also many Roman Catholics (23·69 per cent.), while in Riga, Ventspils and south-east of Vidzeme there are a number of Greek Catholics and members of the Orthodox Church (8·93 per cent.).

During the year 1930-31 there were 2,003 elementary schools in Latvia, with 187,995 pupils and 8,288 teachers. Most of these schools were supported by the State or municipal institutions, only 146 being supported by private persons or societies. The State or municipal institutions also supported 80 of the secondary schools in the country, the remaining 62 being supported by private persons or societies. In these 142 secondary schools 2,732 teachers taught 22,462 pupils.

Each national minority has the right to its own schools (elementary and secondary) with its own language of instruction. The State contributes to the maintenance of these schools according to the percentage of inhabitants of the respective national minorities. In 1930-31, instruction was given in elementary schools in the following languages (figures in brackets refer to secondary schools):—Lettish in 1,441 (85) schools, with 133,863 (16,150) pupils and 5,469 (1,736) teachers; national minorities in 562 (57) schools, with 54,132 (6,312) pupils, and 2,819 (996) teachers.

Formerly the University of Dorpat served the whole of the Baltic provinces of Russia, and as Dorpat became an Estonian institution, the Riga Polytechnic was in 1919 raised to be the Latvian University. The number of students is (1930-31) 8,577, and of professors, 376. There are also 113 technical professional schools with 10,659 pupils; a Musical Academy with 390 students and 42 teachers; and an Academy of Arts with 282 students; and 22 teachers.

LIBERIA.

Constitution and Government.—The Republic of Liberia had its origin in the efforts of several American philanthropic societies to make permanent provision for freed American slaves by establishing them in a colony on the West African coast. In 1822 a settlement was formed on the west coast of Africa near the spot where Monrovia now stands. On July 26, 1847, the State was constituted as the Free and Independent Republic of Liberia. The new State was first recognised by Great Britain and France, and ultimately by other Powers. The Constitution of the Republic is on the model of that of the United States, with important differences. The executive is vested in a President and a Council of 8 Ministers, and the legislative power in a parliament of two Houses, called the Senate and the House of Representatives. The President and the House of Representatives are elected for four years, and the Senate for six years. The President must be at least thirty-five years of age, and have unencumbered real estate to the value of 2,500 dollars, or 500*l*. Electors must be of negro blood, and owners of land. The natives of the country are not excluded from the franchise, but, except in the centres of civilisation, they take no part in political life. The official language of the Government is English.

President of Liberia.—Hon. Edwin Barclay (1932–1936).

Area and Population.—Liberia has about 350 miles of coast line, extending from the British colony of Sierra Leone, on the west, to the French colony of the Ivory Coast on the east, and it stretches inland to a distance, in some places, of about 200 miles. The boundaries were determined by the Anglo-Liberian agreement of 1885 and the Franco-Liberian agreements of 1892 and 1907–10. Early in 1911 an agreement was concluded between the British and Liberian Governments transferring the territory of Kanre-Lahun to Sierra Leone in exchange for a strip of undeveloped territory of about the same area on the south side of Morro River, which now becomes the boundary.

The total area is about 43,000 square miles. The total population is estimated at 1,000,000, all of the African race. Since the organisation of the frontier force the Government has obtained complete control of Northern Liberia and of the Kroo countries in Southern Liberia. The indigenous natives belong in the main to six principal stocks: (1) the Mandingos (Muhammadan), (2) the Gissi; (3) the Gola, (4) the Kpwesi, (5) the Kru negroes and their allies, and (6) the Greboes. The Kru tribes are mostly Pagan. The number of Americo-Liberians is estimated at about 12,000. About 60,000 of the coast negroes may be considered civilised. There is a British negro colony of about 500, and there are about 150 Europeans and Americans. The coast region is divided into counties, Bassa, Sino, Maryland, and Grand Cape Mount, each under a Government superintendent, and Montserrado, subdivided into 2 districts, each under a superintendent. Monrovia, the capital, has, including Krutown, an estimated population of 10,000, and is administered as a Federal District by a Municipal Board appointed by the President. It is one of the eleven ports of entry along the 350 miles of coast, the others being Liberian Jene (river port), Robertsport (Cape Mount), Marshall (Junk), Buchanan, River Cess, Greenville (Sinoe), Sasstown, Grand Cess, Harper (Cape Palmas), and Kablaki (river port). Other towns are Royesville, Arthington, Careysburg, Millsburg, Whiteplains, Bopora (native), Rocktown (native), Garraway, Upper Buchanan and Edina.

Religion and Education.—The Americo-Liberians are all Protestant (Anglican, Presbyterian, Baptist, or Methodist). There are several American missions at work and one French Roman Catholic. The Government educational system is supplemented by mission schools, instruction being given both to American and to native negroes. In the year 1930 there were 169 schools, of which 51 were Government schools and 118 were maintained by missions. The total number of pupils receiving instruction amounted to 7,588. The Methodist Episcopalians have a college at Monrovia and an agricultural and industrial institute at Kakata; the African Methodist Episcopalians have a college at Monrovia; and the Protestant Episcopalians a college at Cape Palmas. The Government has a college with (1930) 9 professors and 84 students. A criminal code was enacted in 1900; the customs laws were codified in 1907.

Finance.—The revenue and expenditure for 5 years (in American dollars):—

	1925-26	1926-27	1927-28	1928-29	1929-30
	Dollars	Dollars	Dollars	Dollars	Dollars
Revenue . . .	894,745	959,474	1,276,437	1,028,123	980,156
Expenditure .	895,715	984,285	1,712,709	1,098,152	985,554

The customs duties were for 1926-27, 557,428 dollars; for 1927-28, 767,597 dollars; for 1928-29, 604,226 dollars; for 1929-30, 461,099 dollars.

In 1927 arrangements were made with the Finance Corporation of America for a loan of 5,000,000 dollars, of which 2,027,700 dollars has been issued. The previous 1912 loan, in which British financial interests preponderated, was paid off from the proceeds of the new loan, which is secured by a first lien on customs revenues and head moneys. The Loan Agreement also provides for financial supervision by American officials.

Defence.—For defence every citizen from 16 to 50 years of age capable of bearing arms is liable to serve. There is an enlisted Frontier Force of about 700.

Production, Commerce.—The agricultural, mining, and industrial development of Liberia has scarcely begun. There are forests unworked; but the working of one para rubber plantation has begun, and rubber is being produced. The soil is productive, but cultivation is neglected; cocoa and cotton are produced in small quantities only, and indigenous coffee is the staple product. Piassava fibre, prepared from the raphia palm, palm oil and palm kernels, kola nuts, chillies, beni seed, coffee, anatto seed and rice are also produced. Beeswax is collected, and gum copal is found but is not collected. Tortoiseshell, improperly prepared, is sold in small quantities. In the forests there are rubber vines and trees of 22 species. No survey of the mineral resources of the country has been made by an expert mineralogist, and although iron exists and is worked by the natives, no mineral deposits of sufficient importance to warrant exploitation have yet been found. Prior to the war a British company was attempting to exploit a diamond-bearing deposit near Careysburg.

The trade for five years was as follows (in dollars):—

	1926	1927	1928	1929	1930
	Dollars	Dollars	Dollars	Dollars	Dollars
Imports . . .	2,251,597	2,896,081	4,029,506	2,064,440	1,228,102
Exports . . .	1,757,521	1,614,671	1,465,568	1,475,356	888,789

The chief imports are rice, cotton goods, gin, tobacco, building material, galvanised iron, ready-made clothing, and dried and preserved fish. The chief exports in 1929 were coffee (1,372 tons); piassava fibre (5,710 tons); palm oil (603,856 gallons); palm kernels (343,566 bushels); rubber (230 tons); ivory (6,822 lbs.); ginger (5 cwt.). The trade in 1929 was chiefly with Germany (1,452,063 dollars); United Kingdom (830,402 dollars); the United States of America (441,667 dollars); and Holland (389,092 dollars).

According to Board of Trade Returns, the value of the trade between the United Kingdom and Liberia was as follows in five years:—

—	1927	1928	1929	1930	1931
	£	£	£	£	£
Imports into U.K. from Liberia	61,080	63,816	58,512	42,767	31,308
Exports of U.K. produce to Liberia	186,813	211,297	133,452	119,575	65,425
Re-exports to Liberia from U.K.	20,629	22,268	17,874	9,699	6,841

Communications.—There are no railways in Liberia, and means of transport are extremely limited. At present there are about 150 miles of road fit for light motor traffic, all of which are in the coastal area. In the interior communication is maintained between villages by tracks, all goods being carried by native porters.

The River St. Paul is navigable for a distance of 25 miles from its mouth for small craft of shallow draft, and a service of motor launches runs between Monrovia and White Plains.

There is cable communication with Europe and America via Dakar, and a wireless station is maintained by the Government at Monrovia. There is no telephone or telegraph service in the country.

Money, Weights, and Measures.—The money chiefly used is British silver, but there is a Liberian coinage in silver and copper. Official accounts are kept in dollars and cents, but commercial accounts are generally in English currency. The Liberian coins are as follows:—Silver, 50-, 25-, and 10-cent pieces; copper, 2- and 1-cent pieces.

Weights and measures are the same as Great Britain and the United States.

The Bank of British West Africa, Ltd., withdrew from Liberia in October 1930; and the Firestone Plantations Company have established a bank at Monrovia under the title of 'United States Trading Company (Banking Department).'

LIECHTENSTEIN.

THE Principality of Liechtenstein, lying between the Austrian Land of Vorarlberg and the Swiss cantons of St. Gallen and Graubünden, is a sovereign State consisting of the two counties of Schellenberg and Vaduz (formerly immediate fiefs of the Roman Empire). The former in 1699 and the latter in 1712 came into the possession of the house of Liechtenstein and, by diploma of January 23, 1719, granted by the Emperor Karl VI., the two lordships were constituted as the Principality of Liechtenstein. After the break-up of the Empire in 1806 the Principality was incorporated in the Rhine Confederation; from 1815 to 1866 it formed part of the German Confederation, since the break-up of which it has joined no similar union.

The Reigning Prince is Francis I., born August 28, 1853; succeeded his brother, February 11, 1929. The reigning family originated in the twelfth century, and traces its descent through free barons who in 1608 became princes of Liechtenstein. The monarchy is hereditary in the male line. The constitution, adopted in October 1921, provides for a Diet of 15 members elected for four years by direct vote on the basis of universal suffrage and proportional representation. The capital and seat of Government is Vaduz (pop. 1,715). The principality has a High Court. Since February 1921, Liechtenstein has had the Swiss currency, and since January, 1924, it has been included in the Swiss Customs Union; the posts and telegraphs are administered by Switzerland.

Area, 65 square miles; population, of German origin (Census 1930), 10,213; Catholics, 9,492; Protestants, 253. In 1930 there were 206 births, 62 marriages and 106 deaths. The revenue for 1929 was 1,626,594 Swiss francs and the expenditure 964,441 francs. Budget estimates for 1930: revenue, 1,179,350 francs; expenditure, 1,049,597 francs; for 1931, revenue, 1,733,100 francs; expenditure, 1,314,349 francs. Public debt on December 31, 1931, 5,117,626 francs. The inhabitants of Liechtenstein since 1867 have not been liable to military service. The Principality has no army (since 1868). The population is in great part agricultural, the chief products of the country being corn, wine, fruit, wood, and marble. The industries are cotton weaving and cotton spinning, leather goods, and pottery. The rearing of cattle, for which the fine alpine pastures are well suited, is highly developed.

LITHUANIA.

(LIETUVA.)

LITHUANIA became a Grand Duchy in the early part of the thirteenth century. In 1386 the Grand Duke Jogaila embraced Christianity and married the Polish Queen Hedvig, thus becoming King of Poland. During the reign of Vytautas (Vitold) the Great (1392-1430) Lithuania reached the zenith of her power and prosperity, her frontiers extending from the Baltic to the Black Sea. After the death of Vytautas the Great, Polish influence gradually increased in Lithuania, and in 1569 the Lithuanians were forced to unite with the Poles at Lublin, the Lithuanians retaining their own treasury, laws, courts of justice, and army. Both countries elected the same king and had a common Seim (parliament).

At the end of the eighteenth century Lithuania fell under Russian rule.

In 1917 a Lithuanian Conference of 214 representatives at Vilna elected a Lithuanian State Council (Taryba) and demanded the complete independence of Lithuania. The independence of the Lithuanian State was proclaimed on February 16, 1918.

On December 20, 1922, Lithuania received de jure recognition by the Great Powers. Russia had already accorded that recognition in the Treaty of Peace of July 12, 1920.

Constitution and Government.—The constitution adopted by the Constituent Assembly on August 1, 1922, and amended on May 15, 1923, declares that the State of Lithuania is an independent Democratic Republic. The Diet (or Seimas) is the exponent of the sovereign power of Lithuania, and makes laws, ratifies treaties with other States, approves the State budget and superintends the execution of the laws. The Executive Power is placed in the hands of the President of the Republic and of the Cabinet of Ministers. The President of the Republic is elected by the people for seven years, and he appoints the Minister-President (Premier), and all other Ministers, as recommended by the Premier. The President also appoints the higher military and civil officials of the State. In case of the absence or illness of the President, his place is to be taken by the Premier. All the acts of the President must be countersigned by the Premier or the proper Minister. The Cabinet of Ministers is responsible to the Diet and resigns on an expression of a lack of confidence by the latter. The Members of the Diet on entering the Cabinet of Ministers do not cease to be Members of the Diet.

All the citizens of Lithuania, without distinction of sex, nationality or religion, are equal before the law; there are no classes or titles. All citizens are also guaranteed inviolability of person, homes, and correspondence, and freedom of religion, conscience, Press, speech, strikes, assembly and organization.

The Diet of Lithuania is elected every five years by universal, equal, direct and secret suffrage according to the proportional system, the electoral unit being one representative to 50,000 inhabitants. The last parliament, elected in 1926, was dissolved in 1927.

President of Lithuania.—Antanas Smetona (1932-39).

Prime Minister and Minister of Finance.—Juozas Tubelis.

For administrative purposes the territory of Lithuania is divided into 20 districts, of about 100,000 inhabitants each. The districts are divided into communities, with about 15 communities to each district. National minorities (Jews, Germans, and Poles) enjoy cultural autonomy.

Area and Population.—The Lithuanian Government claims that Lithuania consists of: (1) the whole of the former Russian Province of Kaunas (Kovno); (2) the Province of Vilnius (Vilna), minus the districts of Disna and Vileika; (3) a part of the Province of Gardinas (Grodno), north of the Niemen River and the narrow hinterland of the city of Gardinas (Grodno) in the south; (4) the Province of Suvalki minus the southern parts of the districts of Suvalki and Angustovo; (5) part of the Province of Courland between the old German frontier and the Holy Aa (Sventoji) River by the Baltic Sea, and (6) the territory of Klaipeda (Memel).

For the northern and eastern frontier of Lithuania, see THE STATESMAN'S YEAR BOOK for 1929, p. 1075.

In the south (in the region of the Province of Suvalki) the frontier with Poland has not yet been conclusively agreed upon by Lithuania and Poland. Both Lithuania and Poland lay claim to Vilna, but though the Great Powers (on March 15, 1923) recognized the de facto boundary between the two countries as de jure, and though the League of Nations has endeavoured to bring about a solution of this problem, so far (March, 1932) no agreement has been reached. The southern part of Lithuania occupied by Poland has an area of about 27,000 sq. kilometres (10,422 sq. miles), with a population of 1,000,000.

The total area of Independent Lithuania (including Memel) is 55,670 sq. kilometres (21,489 sq. miles), and the population (1931 estimate) 2,367,072.

The Memel territory (area 943 sq. square miles, population 146,000), which by the Treaty of Versailles was detached from Germany and placed under the control of the conference of ambassadors, was handed over to Lithuania on February 16, 1923, subject to certain conditions intended to regulate the use of the port by both Lithuania and Poland.

The Lithuanians claim that the capital of Lithuania is Vilnius (Vilna), with a population of 214,600 in 1914. Other large towns are: Kaunas (Kovno), seat of the Government, 113,000; Gardinas (Grodno), 61,600; Klaipeda (Memel), 36,988; Suvalkai (Suvalki), 31,000; Siauliai (Shavli), 22,996; and Panevėžys (Poneviej), 20,287. Of these cities, Vilna, Grodno and Suvalki are in possession of Poland.

Religion.—In Independent Lithuania, according to the census of 1923, Roman Catholics formed 80·5 per cent., Jews 7·3 per cent., Protestants and Calvinists 9·5 per cent., Greek Orthodox 2·5 per cent. In the Memel Territory Protestants form 91·7 per cent., Roman Catholics 5·3 per cent. In April, 1926, the Vatican decided to declare Lithuania a Church Province, with an Archbishop and four bishops.

Education.—In 1930-31 there were 2,530 primary schools with 4,432 teachers and 281,505 pupils, and 196 secondary schools with 2,206 teachers and 28,093 pupils, among which are 12 teachers' training colleges with 1,423 pupils, and 24 institutions of higher grade (commercial, technical, art and music) with 4,228 pupils, and 58 institutions of lower grade with 3,258 pupils. The University of Vytautas the Great, at Kovno, which was opened on February 16, 1922, has (1931) 241 professors and teachers and 3,929 students. The academy of agriculture has 38 professors, etc., and 301 students, and there are 26 agricultural institutions with 1,359 pupils.

	Litas	Litas	Litas	Litas	Litas
Revenue. . . .	319,820,780	338,541,200	347,694,100	327,806,300	295,000,000
Expenditure . . .	280,481,207	269,959,800	320,620,700	327,806,300	295,000,000

By the Treaty of Peace of Moscow, Russia took over, in place of an indemnity for the damage done by the Russian Army, the whole of the old Russian debt devolving on Lithuania; in addition, it was agreed to hand over to Lithuania 3,000,000 roubles in gold and to concede to Lithuania 100,000 hectares of forests.

On September 1, 1931, the foreign debt of Lithuania was: to the United States, 6,197,682 dollars; to Lithuanians in the United States, 1,481,000 dollars, United Kingdom, 1,202,198 l., Swedish Match Syndicate, 4,000,000 dollars. Total external and internal debt on September 1, 1931, 148,117,787 litas, or about 3,000,000l.

Defence.—Military service is compulsory, beginning at the age of 21. Service in the active army is for 1½ years. The establishment of the active army in 1931 was 1,351 officers and 16,488 men, organized in 3 divisions. There is in addition an auxiliary force of about 52,000 men.

Production.—Lithuania is an agricultural country, and preponderantly rural in character; the resources of the country consist of timber and agricultural produce. Of the total area, 49·6 per cent. is arable land, 25·3 per cent. meadow and pasture land, 15·9 per cent. forests, and 9·2 per cent. unproductive lands. In 1930 in the territory administered by the Lithuanian Government, 5,200,000 hectares (about 13,000,000 acres), there was produced (in metric tons) rye, 639,525; wheat, 308,270; barley, 236,960; oats, 384,205; potatoes, 1,888,895; peas, 68,800; flax fibre about 29,115; flax-seed about 38,910.

In 1931 the country possessed 597,000 horses, 1,297,400 cattle, 1,212,500 sheep, and 1,568,500 pigs. Dairy and animal farming is considerably developed, particularly pig-rearing. Poultry farming is also an important occupation.

Forests cover 873,000 hectares (about 2,156,310 acres). 70 per cent. of the forests consist of needle-bearing trees, mostly pines, and the remainder of leaf-bearing trees. In 1930, about 90,000 tons of peat were produced.

In 1930 there were 1,100 industrial establishments (with not less than 5 working persons) with 23,397 working persons. The values of the production of principal commodities in 1930 were: wood pulp, 30,000,000 litas; manufactured timber, 16,000,000 litas; tissues and yarns, 19,500,000 litas; machines and metallic wares, 14,500,000 litas; leather, 15,500,000 litas.

Commerce.—Trade for five years:—

Imports . . . .	265,694,000	291,091,400	306,422,400	312,415,400	277,958,000
Exports . . . .	245,929,300	256,881,800	329,841,900	333,739,000	278,118,000

In 1930 imports of textiles amounted in value to 70,213,500 litas, of food products (sugar, salt, herrings) to 38,866,900 litas, agricultural machinery and fertilisers 19,257,100 litas. Exports of timber in the same period were 69,384,000 litas, foodstuffs (corn, flour, eggs, meat, dairy products) 131,496,900 litas, flax and linseed 33,799,600 litas.

Of the imports in 1930, 24,066,600 litas came from the United Kingdom, 151,427,100 litas from Germany, 18,000,000 litas from Czechoslovakia. Of the exports in 1930, 65,042,000 litas went to the United Kingdom, 199,925,400 litas to Germany, and 22,868,400 litas to Latvia.

Total trade between Lithuania and the United Kingdom for five years (according to Board of Trade Returns):—

	1927	1928	1929	1930	1931
Imports from Lithuania into United Kingdom . . .	£ 389,956	£ 357,148	£ 587,061	£ 791,015	£ 1,490,727
Exports to Lithuania from United Kingdom . . .	231,865	353,367	380,006	367,708	301,343
Re-exports to Lithuania from United Kingdom . . .	17,144	22,983	14,444	30,381	5,968

Shipping.—In 1930, 960 vessels of 499,800 tons entered and 960 vessels of 500,100 tons cleared the port of Memel.

Internal Communications.—On December 31, 1930, the total length of railways was 1,699 kilometers (1,050 miles), of which 1,189 kilometers (738 miles) were broad gauge lines.

There are about 15,582 kilometers (9,738 miles) of roads in the country, while of the waterways those navigable for steamboats extend to 481 kilometers (301 miles); for rafts to 2,000 kilometers (1,242 miles); total, 2,586 kilometers (1,606 miles). The river Niemen is navigable for about 270 days in the year; good for floating, 1,977 km. (1,234 miles).

Banking and Currency.—By a law promulgated on August 16, 1922, a national currency, based on the gold standard, with the Litas as unit, was introduced to replace the Ost mark, Ost rouble, and German mark hitherto in circulation but now withdrawn. The litas contain 0.150462 grammes of pure gold, and is equivalent to a tenth of the American gold dollar. The par of exchange with the pound sterling is 48.66 litas. There are no gold coins in circulation, but a 50-litas piece weighing 8.3592 grammes .900 fine is provided for in the currency law. Silver coins in circulation are 5, 2 and 1 litas, and there are also a number of subsidiary copper-aluminium coins ranging from 50 centas to 1 centa. The Bank of Lithuania (Lietuvos Bankas) was established in August 1922, on joint-stock principles, 50 per cent. of the shares being held by the State and the balance being available for private subscription. The Bank's capital-stock is 12,000,000 litas. The Bank enjoys during twenty years the sole right of issuing bank-notes. Although under the law the bank-note issue calls for a gold cover of one-third, yet in practice the Government has decided that the actual security must represent 100 per cent. in the form either of gold or stable currencies backed by gold. On February 15, 1932, the bank-notes in circulation amounted to 100,326,000 litas, gold coin and bullion, 50,200,000 litas. The Land Bank, with a paid-up capital of 50,000,000 litas, is under the control of the Government, and grants agricultural credits to farmers and agricultural co-operative societies. There are now 16 private banks in Lithuania with a total capital of 32,000,000 litas, and deposits amounting to 122,000,000 litas.

The weights and measures are of the metric system.

LUXEMBURG.

Reigning Grand Duchess.—Charlotte, born January 23, 1896, was the daughter of William, Grand Duke of Luxemburg, Duke of Nassau (died February 25, 1912) and of Marie-Anne, Princess of Braganza, born July 13, 1861, succeeded on the abdication of her sister Marie-Adelaide, on January 9, 1919; married to Prince Felix of Bourbon-Parma on November 6, 1919. Offspring:—Prince Jean, born January 5, 1921, Princess Elisabeth, born December 22, 1922, Princess Marie-Adelaide, born May 21, 1924, Princess Marie-Gabrielle, born August 2, 1925, Prince Charles, born August 7, 1927, and Princess Alix, born August 24, 1929. Sisters of the Grand Duchess:—Princess Marie-Adelaide, born June 14, 1894, died January 24, 1924; Princess Hilda, born February 15, 1897; Princess Antoinette, born October 7, 1899; Princess Elisabeth, born March 7, 1901; Princess Sophie, born February 14, 1902.

The early history of Luxemburg may be divided into four periods, viz., from 963 to 1443, when the country was part of the Holy Roman Empire; from 1443 to 1506, the Burgundian period; from 1506 to 1714, the Spanish period; and from 1714 to 1795, the Austrian period. From 1795 to 1815 the Duchy was French. The Congress of Vienna made the Duchy into a Grand Duchy, and from 1815 to 1866 the Grand Duchy was included in the dissolved Germanic Confederation. By the Treaty of London, May 11, 1867, it was declared neutral territory, and its integrity and independence were guaranteed.

On September 28, 1919, a Referendum was taken in Luxemburg to decide on the political and economic future of the country. Those entitled to vote were men and women of 21 (voters on the register, 127,775; actual voters, 90,984). The voting resulted as follows:—for the reigning Grand Duchess, 66,811; for the continuance of the Nassau-Braganza dynasty under another Grand Duchess, 1,286; for another dynasty, 889; for a Republic, 16,885; for an economic union with France, 60,133; for an economic union with Belgium, 22,242. But France refused in favour of Belgium to consider the possibility of an economic union, and negotiations to this end between Belgium and Luxemburg were concluded on December 22, 1921, when the Chamber of the Grand Duchy passed a Bill for the economic union between Belgium and Luxemburg. The Agreement, which is for 50 years, provides for the disappearance of the customs barrier between the two countries and the use of Belgian currency in the Grand Duchy. It came into force on May 1, 1922.

Constitution and Government.—The Constitution now in force was proclaimed on October 17, 1868; in 1919 some important changes were introduced into it, viz. the Constituent Assembly decided that the sovereign power resided in the Nation (Article 32); that all secret treaties were abolished (Article 37); that the deputies are to be elected on the basis of universal suffrage, pure and simple, by scrutiny of lists, according to the rules of proportional representation and in conformity with the principle of the smallest electoral quotient (Article 52).

The country is divided into four electoral districts: the South, North, Centre, and East. In order to qualify as an elector it is necessary to be a citizen (male or female) of Luxemburg and to have completed 21 years of age; to be eligible for election it is necessary to have completed 25 years of age and to fulfil the conditions required for active electorate. The electors may be called upon to record their votes by means of a referendum or plebiscite in all cases and under the conditions to be determined by law (Article 52). The Members of the Chamber of Deputies are elected for 6 years; half are renewed every 3 years (Article 56); they receive a salary which may not surpass 4,000 francs per annum; they are also entitled to receive a travelling allowance (Article 75).

The Chamber of Deputies consists of 54 members. The state of the parties (1931) is as follows:—Catholics, 26; Radical Socialists, 5; Labour Party, 14; Radicals, 4; Independents, 5.

The head of the State takes part in the legislative power, exercises the executive power, and has a certain part in the judicial power. The Constitution leaves to the sovereign the right to organise the Government, which consists of a Minister of State, who is President of the Government, and of at least three Directors-General. The Cabinet, appointed July, 1926, is composed as follows:—

Minister of State and President of Government.—M. Bech.

Director-General of Justice and Home Affairs.—M. Dumont.

Director-General of Public Works, Trade and Industry.—M. Clemang.

Director-General of Finance and Social Welfare.—M. Dupong.

Besides the Government there is a Council of State. It deliberates on proposed laws and Bills, on amendments that might be proposed; it also gives administrative decisions and expresses its opinion regarding any other question referred to it by the Grand Duke or by the Law. The Council of State is composed of 15 members chosen for life by the sovereign, who also chooses a president among them each year.

Area and Population.—Luxemburg has an area of 999 square miles, and a population (December 31, 1930) of 299,782. The population is Catholic, save (1927) 4,001 Protestants, 1,771 Jews, and 359 belonging to other sects. The chief town, Luxemburg, has 53,791 (1930, December 31) inhabitants. Other towns are Esch am Alz, the centre of the mining district, 29,429 inhabitants; Differdange, 17,567 inhabitants; Dudelange, 14,657 inhabitants; Rumelange, 5,209 inhabitants; and Diekirch, 3,858 inhabitants.

MEXICO.

(REPÚBLICA MEXICANA.)

Constitution and Government.

MEXICO's history falls into three epochs. She was annexed to the Spanish Crown by conquest in 1521, and for three centuries was governed by Spain through 62 Viceroy, from Antonio de Mendoza (1535-1550) to Juan Donoju (1821-1822). From 1822 to 1911 was the second epoch, covering early a century of national existence and abounding in movements and events shaping the national life. After three quarters of a century marked by stormy events (see STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK, 1928, p. 1099) the country settled down in 1876 to a long and quiet regime under the presidency of General Porfirio Diaz (died July 2, 1915), who ruled the country with the exception of four years (1880-4, General Manuel Gonzalez) until May 25, 1911, when he presented his resignation to Congress. Then began the third or revolutionary epoch, commencing with coups d'état and civil war and culminating in bold social and economic experiments. Recent Presidents have been General Alvaro Obregon, President Calles (1924-28), and Provisional President Gil (1928-30).

President.—Señor Pascual Ortiz Rubio, elected November 18, 1929. Assumed office February 5, 1930, to serve until November 30, 1934.

A new Constitution, amending the Constitution of 1857, was promulgated on February 5, 1917. By its terms Mexico is declared a federative republic, divided into States, each of which has a right to manage its own local affairs, while the whole is bound together in the usual federal system. The Constitution was amended in 1929.

Congress consists of a Chamber of Deputies (185 members) and a Senate. Deputies are elected for two years by universal suffrage at the rate of one member for 100,000 inhabitants. The Senate consists of fifty-eight members, two for each State and the Federal District, returned in the same manner as the deputies. Congress sits from September 1 to December 31. During the recess there is a Permanent Committee consisting of fourteen Senators and fifteen Representatives appointed by the respective Houses.

The President is elected by direct popular vote in a general election, and (by an amendment in 1929) holds office for six years. Failing the President, Congress acts as an electoral college for the election of a successor. The administration is carried on, under the direction of the President and a Council, by eight Secretaries of State (Foreign Affairs, Interior, Finance and Public Credit, War and Marine, Communications and Public Works, Agriculture and Development, Education and Industry, and Commerce and Labour), and four Departments of State (Manufacture of State Supplies, Public Accounts, Statistics, and Public Health).

LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

Mexico is divided into twenty-eight States, one Federal District (comprising Mexico City and 11 surrounding villages), and three Territories, of which the peninsula of Lower California constitutes two. Each State has its own constitution, government, taxes, and laws; but inter-State customs duties are not permitted. Each State has its governor, legislature, and judicial officers popularly elected under rules similar to those of the Federation. All the States must publish and enforce laws issued by the Federal Government. The Federal District is governed by a Chief of the Department of the Federal District appointed by the President who also appoints the Governors of the Territories.

Area and Population.

Mexico is situated between the parallels of 14°33' and 32°43' north, and 86°48' and 117°3' west, and comprises, according to Mexican estimates, 757,907 square miles, though English geographers compute it as 767,198 square miles, and German authorities as 767,290 square miles.

The population at the census of May 15, 1930, was 16,404,030, an increase of 2,069,250 or 14·4 per cent. since 1921; density was 21·36 persons per square mile; census results are shown in the following table. The capitals of the States and territories are in brackets.

Religion, Education, and Justice.

The prevailing religion is the Roman Catholic (7 archbishops and 23 bishops), but by the Constitution of 1857, the Church was separated from the State, and the Constitution of 1917 provided strict regulation of this and all other religions. No ecclesiastical body can acquire landed property. Since 1917 the property of the Church has been held to belong to the State. In 1926 all foreign priests were expelled. Disputes between the Government and the Churches were settled in July 1929. In 1921, there were 13,921,226 Roman Catholics; 73,951 Protestants; 22,718 of other faiths; 208,836 of unknown faith.

Primary education is free and compulsory, and, according to the Constitution of 1917, secular in all official educational establishments. Clergy are forbidden to set up primary schools. In the Federal District and in the Territories education is controlled by the National Government; elsewhere by the State authorities. The census of 1921 showed 65 per cent. of those over 10 years old to be illiterate; in the Federal District, 26.90 per cent., reduced in 1930 to 23.06 per cent. The National University at Mexico City, re-organised in 1910, had 7,273 students in 1929. The National University of the South-east, established at Mérida (Yucatan) in 1922, had 1,011 students; University of Guadalajara (founded in 1792, closed 1860, and reopened in 1925), 602. Total number of students in seven universities on July 31, 1930, 9,472. Schools of all grades supported by the Federal Government, in 1930, had 663,170 pupils; State and municipal schools, 824,349 pupils. Private schools, 174,852. Total enrolment, 1,662,371. Total expenditures by the Federal Government, States and municipalities, 1928, were 52,586,053 pesos. Ranches, mills, mines and other concerns maintained 6,073 schools in 1929, for employees and their children; 14,578 Federal rural schools in 1929 had 14,578 teachers, and 670,379 pupils. There are also 58 normal schools, 60 professional schools, 76 preparatory schools, 32 fine arts schools, 13 commercial schools, and 169 technical schools, with 72,079 students and 6,192 teachers.

The judicial power consists of various Courts the magistrates of which are appointed by Congress for life. They include the Supreme Court with 16 judges, nine Circuit Courts with 3 judges, and District Courts with 44 judges. The Federal District has a Higher Court of Justice composed of 22 magistrates and 4 supernumeraries. Popular juries are part of the judicial system. The new Penal Code of January 1, 1930, abolished the death penalty, except for the Army.

Federal Finance.

The ordinary receipts and expenditure for four years (1 gold peso = 50 cents, U.S.):—

	gold pesos	gold pesos	gold pesos	gold pesos
Revenue	288,428,600	270,796,383	298,000,000	213,074,225
Expenditure	288,013,392	246,289,785	299,490,480	212,987,421

The funded debt (in default since 1914 and allowing for payments of 75,000,000 pesos between 1923 and 1927) stood in July, 1930, at 1,185,598,808 pesos, of which the Republic owed 946,598,808 and the National Railways, guaranteed by the Government, owed about 239,000,000 pesos.

Congress in January, 1932, ratified an agreement reached December 22, 1931, with the International Committee of Bankers by which 'the foreign debt totalling 274,000,000 dollars, the principal covering 15 bond issues since 1885, will be refunded by a single issue totalling 267,419,241 dollars at 5 per cent. interest, which will be guaranteed by import and export duties.' Revenues from these will be deposited in the bank of Mexico which will handle the debt service. Payments will begin not later than January 1, 1934.

Estimates of American investments in Mexican Government securities range from 22,000,000 dollars to 160,000,000 dollars; the U.S. Department of Commerce attempts no estimate. But the Department estimates direct investments in 1931 at 694,786,000 dollars, of which 200,000,000 dollars was in petroleum, 230,000,000 in mining and smelting, and 73,000,000 in railroads. In 1929 British investments were 199,029,980L., of which 99,932,690L. were in railways, 38,784,430L. in Government securities, and 60,312,860L. in industrial enterprises, particularly petroleum. Estimates several years ago placed French investments at 290,000,000 dollars, of which 105,000,000 dollars were in Government securities.

Defence.

Every citizen is compelled to serve in the active army or in the National Guard. Supreme command is vested in the President, exercised through the Secretary for War. The active army on July 31, 1931, consisted of 50 battalions of infantry, 30 regiments of cavalry, 2 regiments of military police, 2 marine corps, 4 regiments of artillery and 3 detached companies. Infantry strength, 2,538 officers and 23,608 men; cavalry, 4,074 officers and 19,235 men; artillery, 454 officers and 1,372 men. Total strength in 1931 was 55,260 officers and other ranks. Military education is provided at a military college and in officers' training schools, and is compulsory in the colleges. To combat illiteracy in the Army, 165 regimental schools have been established. The air force on July 31, 1931, consisted of 470 men with 45 aeroplanes and 2 aerodromes.

The Navy, which is little more than a police force, consists of a coast defence vessel El Anáhuac of 3,162 tons, purchased from Brazil in 1924, the gunboats Bravo and Agua Prieta, the armed transport Progreso, the coastguard Tampico, and some smaller vessels.

Production and Industry.

Mexico is well suited for agriculture. In the tropical regions, in the mountain valleys, and on the great central plateau are millions of acres of virgin soil and millions more which have been barely skimmed by the antiquated methods of agriculture in vogue. About 3,500,000 acres have been placed under irrigation; this is equal to 45 per cent. of the area occupied by the nine principal crops. Wheat, cotton, garbanzos, sugar, tomatoes and vegetables are grown principally on irrigated land. Five large irrigation projects in Nuevo Leon, Tecamachalco and Aguascalientes were completed by 1931; nine other projects are under way.

Cultivated lands, 24,000,000 acres (about 5 per cent. of the total area); available for cultivation, 73,000,000 acres; pastoral lands, 146,000,000 acres; forest lands, 43,933,200 acres. Number of farms, 1931, about 600,000. Up to June 30, 1931, public and confiscated lands, exceeding 16,000,000 acres, had been distributed to families in accordance with the agrarian laws, which makes the rural village the unit for holding land in common. Estates in excess of 2,000 acres are being broken up. Principal products in 1930 were maize (1,324,599 metric tons), rice (74,000 tons), sugar (178,327 metric tons), sugar cane (4,049,000 tons), henequen (88,000 tons), wheat (306,834 tons), coffee beans (80,478 tons), chickpeas (49,795 tons), tomatoes (78,076 tons), tobacco, alfalfa. The Yucatan peninsula produces about 50 per cent. of the world's supply of henequen; plantations are almost wholly Mexican-owned. Banana production started in 1928 in the Gulf Coast region near Tampico. The west coast grows vegetables for the United States and Canada. The cotton production, 1930, was 36,712,000 kilos.

Timber lands are estimated to extend over 25,000,000 acres and to contain pine, spruce, cedar, mahogany, logwood, and rosewood.

Live-stock is declining; in 1926: Cattle, 5,584,892; horses, 1,035,782; mules, 686,213; donkeys, 850,041; sheep, 2,897,688; goats, 5,423,959; and pigs, 2,902,949.

The chief Mexican oil-fields may be grouped in five districts; fields covered by 1,186 concessions on January 1, 1930, occupied 30,866,894 acres. Total output since first well was sunk in 1901, 1,632,455,689 barrels.

Petroleum output follows: In 1929, 44,687,879 barrels; in 1930, 39,529,913 barrels; in 1931, 33,038,680 barrels. Of the 1930 output, 25,478,000 barrels were exported, against 33,262,066 barrels in 1928. There are 2,005 storage tanks with a total capacity of 83,806,356 barrels. Mexico has the two largest petroleum refineries in the world, with capacities of 113,220 and 140,000 barrels respectively. Domestic consumption is increasing rapidly.

Mining is the principal industry in Mexico, but practically 97 per cent. of the 31,000 mining properties are foreign-owned. Of the annual output, measured in pesos, probably less than 10 per cent. is Mexican-owned. Concessions operated in 1928 numbered 17,355. Nearly all the mines yield silver; output is about 40 per cent. of world production.

Coal is produced only in the State of Coahuila (about 1,000,000 tons per annum). Opals are mined in Querétaro.

The following table shows the quantities of mineral products for three years:—

The industrial census of 1929 showed 44,216 manufacturing establishments with capital of 971,135,633 pesos; number of employees, 307,581; raw material used, domestic, 260,088,154; foreign, 68,426,749 pesos; value of output, 890,394,138 pesos. Food products led in importance, with 14,911 establishments, employing 103,315 persons, with a capital of 239,276,007 pesos, consuming raw materials worth 141,055,123 pesos. There were 236 tobacco factories, 145 cotton textile factories, 28 woollen mills, and 79 small iron and steel works, producing for local consumption about 50,000 tons annually. There are 588 electric power plants, with combined capacity of 630,000 horse power.

* Shipping and Communications.

The most important ports are Vera Cruz and Tampico, both on the Gulf of Mexico. In 1930, 20,816 vessels entered at all the ports, and 20,869 vessels cleared. A system of subsidies to encourage the national merchant marine was established in 1930.

In 1909 the main railway lines of Mexico were united in a Government corporation—The National Railways of Mexico—which owned (1931) 14,680 miles. There were also 3,439 miles operated by the various States. Road-building is being pushed in order to invite tourist traffic, especially on the new highway (770 miles) between Mexico City and Laredo, on the American border. Total mileage, of uneven character, is 62,137 miles, of which 380 miles are surfaced. Motor cars, 1930, 84,791.

On December 31, 1930, the Federal telegraph and telephone system had 727 offices and 23,441 miles of line. Systems belonging to individual States and private companies had 1,119 offices and 14,554 miles of line. Number of telephone instruments, 57,563. Mexican Telephone and Telegraph Corporation operates about 50 per cent. of all telephones in the country, and serves Mexico City and the central section of the republic. Mexico City has telephone connections with London and the Continent. There are about 3,003 post-offices.

There is a State mail, express, and passenger airplane service between Mexico City and Tampico and Tuxpan, as well as over other routes. Airplane service to South and Central America was established in 1930. Passengers carried (1930), 20,920; mail, 74 metric tons. There were two large companies operating, 1931, against five in 1930.

Banking and Credit.

On January 1, 1931, the 38 banks of the Republic (mostly national) had total capital of 203,053,000 pesos and reserves of 25,198,000 pesos.

On September 1, 1925, the Bank of Mexico was established with an authorised capital of 100,000,000 gold pesos, of which 67,770,852 pesos were paid up by December 31, 1930. It succeeded a number of former banks of issue now being slowly liquidated, and under Article 28 of the Constitution it has the sole right to issue notes. It has 26 branches scattered over the country, but discontinued commercial banking in July, 1931, becoming solely a central reserve and issue bank. The Government holds 51 per cent. of the capital stock. On January 1, 1931, current deposits were 45,450,985 pesos; assets included 8,038,868 pesos in gold, 10,011,074 in silver and 3,552,230 in foreign banks. The Bank's note circulation was negligible, 1,218,250 pesos on that date. The Monetary Law of July 1931, however, authorizes it to issue notes to double the amount of its gold and foreign currency reserves. Notes may be accepted voluntarily but are not legal tender. Ex-president Calles of Mexico became President of the Bank in July, 1931.

Money, Weights, and Measures.

By a decree of April 29, 1925, the monetary unit was the gold peso or dollar, the legal value of which was fixed at .75 gramme of pure gold. At par it equalled 24.58*d.* or 50 cents. (U.S.). But the excessive premium (30 to 40 per cent) commanded by the gold peso in 1930 and 1931 led to a decree on July 26, 1931, setting up the silver peso as the monetary unit at a fixed value of .75 grammes of gold. Further minting of gold coins was suspended and restrictions upon export removed. The silver coins are in denominations of 1 peso, 50, 20 and 10 centavos, with a fineness of .720, except the 2-peso, which is .900 fine. Silver pesos are legal tender for all debts and contracts; banks may repay gold deposits up to 30 per cent. in gold, the balance in silver. Control of the issue of silver pesos was lodged with a Currency Commission representing the Bank of Mexico and other banks. Exchange value of the silver peso in New York, 1931, ranged between 49 cents and 26 cents, U.S. The bronze coins are in denominations of 20, 10, 5, 2 and 1 centavos. There are 5-centavo nickel coins.

The weights and measures of the metric system were introduced in 1884 and their use is enjoined by law of June 19, 1895, though the old Spanish measures are still in use.

MONACO.

Prince Louis II, born July 12, 1870, succeeded his father, Prince Albert, June 26, 1922.

Monaco is a small Principality on the Mediterranean, surrounded since 1860 by the French Department of Alpes Maritimes except on the side towards the sea. From 968 it belonged to the house of Grimaldi. In 1715 it passed into the female line, Louise Hippolyte, daughter of Antony I., heiress of Monaco, marrying Jacques de Goyon Matignon, Count of Thorigny, who took the name and arms of Grimaldi. Antony I died in 1731, Louise Hippolyte reigning only ten months and dying in 1732. She was succeeded by her husband under the name of Jacques I., who also succeeded Antony I. as Duc de Valentinois, and was in his turn succeeded by his son Honorius III. This Prince was dispossessed by the French Revolution in 1792, and died in 1795. In 1814 the Principality was re-established, but placed under the protection of the Kingdom of Sardinia by the Treaty of Vienna (1815).

In 1848 Mentone and Roccabruna revolted, and declared themselves free towns; in 1861 Charles III. ceded his rights over them to France, and the Principality thus became geographically an enclave of France, when the Sardinian garrison was withdrawn and the Protectorate came to an end.

On January 5, 1911, a Constitution was promulgated, which provides for a National Council elected by universal suffrage and scrutin de liste. The Government is carried out under the authority of the Prince by a Ministry assisted by a Council of State. The legislative power is exercised by the Prince and the National Council, which consists of 21 members elected for four years. On December 26, 1930, the Prince by decree dissolved the elected bodies of the Principality and suspended some of the constitutional guarantees.

The territory of the Principality is divided into three communes, administered by municipal bodies, in the election of which women are entitled to take part.

In 1819 the Government adopted a code founded upon the French codes and a Court of First Instance, as well as a Juge de Paix's Court. The Principality issues its own separate postage-stamps, and has its own flag.

The small harbour, absolutely sheltered, has an area of 42 acres, depth at entrance 90 feet, and alongside the quay 24 feet at least. The Customs duties are the same as in France.

The area is 149 hectares, or 370 acres. Population (census January 9, 1928), 24,927. Towns: Monaco, 2,085; La Condamine, 11,787; Monte Carlo, 11,056.

There has been since 1887 a Roman Catholic bishop. A semi-military police force has taken the place of the 'guard of honour' and troops formerly maintained. The value of the commerce of the Principality is not stated. The revenue is mainly derived from the gaming tables. The annual grant for the concession was 80,000*l.* in 1917; 90,000*l.* in 1927, and in 1937 it will be 100,000*l.*

MOROCCO.

(MOGHREB-EL-AKSA, i.e. The Farthest West)

Reigning Sultan.

THE introduction of Islam into Morocco about the end of the 7th century was followed by an exceedingly confused period, to the latter part of which belongs the great Arab influx of the 11th century known as the Hilalian invasion. This period witnessed the rise and fall of various Arab and Berber dynasties, notably the Idrissids, under whom Fez was founded or refounded early in the 9th century, and the Almoravids, the first of whom, Youssef Ben Tashfin, founded Marrakesh in 1062, and later extended his power over the north of Morocco and into Spain. His dynasty was followed by the Almohads (12th and 13th centuries), and the Merinids (13th to 16th centuries), whose decline led up to the establishment of the Sherifian dynasties, the Saadians (16th and 17th centuries) and the Alaouis. The latter claim descent from Ali, the son-in-law of the Prophet, through the Filali Sherifs of Taflelt. The present Sultan is the 18th of this dynasty.

Sidi Mohammed, third son of Moulay Youssef (reigned 1912-1927), was proclaimed Sultan on November 18, 1927, on the death of his father.

Government.

The Empire of Morocco is in principle an absolute monarchy, in which the Sultan exercises supreme civil and religious authority; the latter in his capacity of Emir-el-Mumimin or Commander of the Faithful. The majority of his subjects are Sunni Moslems of the Malekite school, the teachings of which formerly constituted the common law of Morocco. The country is now, however, divided into three Zones, in each of which a different system of government prevails as the outcome of the Protectorate Treaty concluded between France and the Sultan at Fez on March 30, 1912, the subsequent Convention between France and Spain of November 27, 1912, and the Convention between Great Britain, France and Spain of December 18, 1923 (modified July 25, 1928), providing for a special Statute in the Tangier Zone.

The Sultan resides in the French Zone, usually at Rabat, but occasionally in one of the other traditional capitals, Fez, Marrakesh, and Meknes. His government, known as the Makhzen, consists of the Grand Vizier, the Vizier of Justice, the Vizier of 'Habous' or Pious Foundations, the Grand Vizier's Delegate for Public Instruction and the Presidents of the Sherifian High Court and the Religious Court of Appeal. All effective authority is exercised by the Protecting Power, which is represented by a Resident General. The latter is Minister of Foreign Affairs to the Sultan and head of an elaborate French administration which has its headquarters at Rabat and which is divided into departments for Finance, Economic Affairs, Public Instruction, etc. The French have created a large body of modern law in the form of Imperial Edicts or 'Dahirs' issued by the Sultan but promulgated and made executory by the Resident General, and decrees of minor importance, all of which similarly require French approval. Local administration is in the hands of native Pashas or Caids and French Controllers. The French civil administration has been made independent of military authority in the coastal regions and the Oudjda district adjoining Algeria. In other districts it is still subordinate to military authority. In the less settled districts in the south-east of the Zone the French control is less direct than elsewhere, although the system of governing through the 'Grand Caids' or tribal overlords is on the decline.

In the Spanish Zone the Sultan's powers are entirely delegated to a Khalifa, whom he chooses from a list of two candidates presented by the Spanish Government, and whose administration is controlled by a Spanish High Commissioner resident at Tetuan. Spanish authority in the Zone was consolidated by successful military operations terminating in the spring of 1927. Spain also has treaty rights in a narrow coastal strip at Ifni as well as in an area extending south from the river Dra and some distance inland from the coast about Cape Juby. She has never established herself effectively in the Ifni enclave. The connection of the area south of the Dra with the rest of Morocco is tenuous and it merges into the Spanish Rio de Oro further south.

The 1923 Tangier Statute came into force on June 1, 1925, but did not receive the adhesion of all the Powers signatory of the Act of Algeciras of April 7, 1906. It was modified by a Protocol signed at Paris on July 25, 1928, to which Italy, one of the previously non-adhering Powers, was a party. The Zone is permanently neutralised and demilitarised. The regime is one of autonomy, and legislative power is vested in an international Assembly of 27 members, but the parties to the Statute agreed on certain regulations and fiscal enactments which were not to be modified for two years, as well as on a special code of law. A Committee of Control, composed of the Consuls of the Powers signatory of the Act of Algeciras, is invested with a right of veto and certain other powers. The administration of the Zone is entrusted to an administrator, with assistant administrators for finance, health, etc., and justice. These officials are at present (March 1932) French, British, Spanish, and Italian respectively for the first six years. The Sultan is represented by a Mendoub, who is ex-officio President of the Assembly and who deals more particularly with native affairs.

Area and Population.

The French Zone comprises the whole of Morocco (except the Ifni enclave and the Cape Juby area) from the Atlantic to the Algerian frontier, and from the confines of the Sahara to the boundary of the Spanish Zone as agreed to in 1912. The Franco-Spanish boundary has not been fully delimited. It follows a generally eastern direction from a point on the Atlantic about 16 miles south of Larache to the river Moulouya, which completes the boundary to the Mediterranean. The Spanish Zone comprises the area between this line and the sea, with the exception of the small territory around Tangier which is included in the international zone. The southern and eastern boundaries of Morocco being largely indeterminate, no exact estimate can be made of the total area, but it may be estimated as follows:—

French Zone	approximately	200,000 square miles.
Spanish Zone	"	13,125 " "
Tangier Zone	"	225 " "
Total . . .		213,350

The native population consists mainly of Islamised Berbers and Arabs dating from the great invasions of the Middle Ages. These elements have to some extent intermixed with each other and with negro stocks. There is a large native Jewish population, mostly in the towns. Since 1912 the European element has greatly increased, especially owing to the influx of French into the towns of the French Zone and of a fair number of agricultural settlers, also mostly French. A census of the French Zone taken in March, 1931, puts the population at about 4,230,000 native Moslems, 120,000 native Jews and 150,000 foreigners; total 5,000,000. That of the Spanish Zone may be put at something under 1,000,000 (about 38,000 Europeans and 11,000 Jews), and that of the Tangier Zone at about 53,000 (35,000 native Moslems, 10,000 Europeans and 8,000 native Jews).

The following table shows the estimated population of the principal towns of the French Zone on the results of an urban census in 1931:—

The principal towns in the Spanish Zone are Alcazar (population in 1926, 12,750), Arzila (3,100), Larache (15,500), Tetuan (38,000).

There are important British colonies at Casablanca (about 1,000), and Tangier (about 600). Spaniards form an important element in the European population of the coast towns.

The principal languages are Moorish, Arabic, and numerous Berber dialects. The use of French for official and business purposes is very widespread, except in the Spanish Zone, where Spanish is chiefly used. In the Tangier Zone, French, Spanish and Arabic are recognised as the official languages.

Education.

The bulk of the native population is illiterate. There are numerous Koranic schools imparting a very elementary education, and a number of higher schools attached to mosques. The most notable is the Kairoween University at Fez, which is highly reputed in the Islamic world. In the French Zone education on European lines is given in the French schools, and schools provided by the Protectorate for Moslem natives. There were in 1929 for European boys and girls 125 primary public schools and 21 primary private schools, and a total of 22,500 primary pupils ; 3 primary technical schools with 200 pupils ; 12 secondary schools with 5,000 pupils in all, including an industrial and commercial school at Casablanca. The system is correlated with the French system, and pupils can take their baccalauréat in the French zone. The Institut des Hautes Études Marocaines at Rabat had 1,000 students in 1929, and has a faculty of French law. The boys' and girls' high schools at Rabat have sections for training teachers. For Moslems there were in the French zone, in 1929, 83 primary schools attended by 8,000 boys and girls ; 5 schools attended by 1,000 sons of notables ; 15 technical schools with 500 boy pupils ; 2 Moslem colleges with 400 students at Rabat and Fez. The Italian Government maintains schools at Rabat and Casablanca. Jewish education has made great progress since 1912 under the joint auspices of the Protectorate and the Alliance Israélite. There were in 1929, 37 Franco-Jewish schools with 10,000 pupils and 3 schools for domestic economy. Research work is done at the Institut Scientifique Chérifien at Rabat.

There are State schools in the chief towns of the Spanish Zone, also certain Hispano-Arabic schools for education of natives. The Alliance Israélite has schools in Tetuan and Larache, and a native school of Arts and Industries exists in Tetuan, and a carpet-weaving school at Sheshuan.

In the Tangier Zone the education of native Moslems is mainly confined to the elementary Koranic schools. The Government of the French Protectorate and the Spanish Government, however, maintain several primary and elementary schools for natives, and there are French technical schools for boys and girls. There are several primary and secondary schools for Jews maintained by the Jewish community but connected with the Alliance Israélite. The French Protectorate and Spanish Governments also maintain a number of primary and secondary schools for European boys and girls, to some of which natives are admitted, and there is an Italian school with primary and secondary classes for Europeans as well as natives.

Justice.

French Zone.—Native justice is administered by religious courts and in a large range of criminal and civil cases by the Pashas and Caids. Under the Protectorate two Courts of Appeal corresponding to these jurisdictions have been set up at Rabat. French Courts modelled on those in France were created in 1913, and deal with cases brought by or against French and other foreigners, except cases against British and United States citizens, who retain capitulatory rights and are justiciable in their own Consular courts. The French Courts are the Court of Appeal at Rabat, Courts of First Instance at Rabat, Casablanca, Oudjda, Marrakesh and Fez, and twelve tribunaux de paix. They administer specially drawn-up codes, which inter alia provide for the application of the national law in matters affecting the personal status of foreigners. Rabbinical Courts deal with matters affecting the personal status of Jews.

Spanish Zone.—Native and Jewish justice is similar to that in the French Zone, except that all criminal cases are tried in the Spanish Courts. These consist of Audiencia, or Supreme Court, Court of First Instance, and Tribunaux de Paix. As in the French Zone, British subjects and American citizens are justiciable in their own Consular Courts.

Tangier Zone.—Native justice is administered as in the French Zone, the Mendoub having a jurisdiction similar to that of Pashas and Caids. The Statute provides for a Mixed Tribunal which deals with all cases involving foreigners, except the subjects of the U.S.A. which have not adhered to the Convention and still claim capitulatory rights.

The Moroccan debt consists of French loans (1904, 1910, 1914, 1918, and 1920). The 1904 loan amounted to 62,500,000 francs and bears interest at 5 per cent. The 1910 loan was for 101,124,000 francs and also bore interest at 5 per cent. The 1914 loan, guaranteed by the French Government, was for 170,250,000 francs. By a law dated March 25, 1916, the 1914 loan was increased to 242,000,000 francs. The first issue of 70,250,000 in July, 1914, was at 4 per cent., and the second issue 171,750,000 in March, 1918, was at 5 per cent. By the law of August 19, 1920, a further loan, also guaranteed by the Government, was authorised for 744,140,000 francs. Of this amount 300 million francs had been issued by 1923, after which no further issue was made. Provision was made in 1928 for a new loan of 819,822,000 francs in which was to be merged the balance of the 1920 loan not already earmarked for expenditure. A first issue of Fr. 325,000,000 at  $4\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. (price of issue Fr. 925 for Fr. 1,000) was made in May 1929. The second issue of Fr. 425,000,000 at 4 per cent., price Fr. 977.50, followed in July 1930. Until recent years the finance of the French Zone has been facilitated by the accumulation of a considerable reserve fund, the ordinary budget having yielded large surpluses. In the last two years it has been necessary to increase taxation and to use the reserve fund and loans in order to balance the budget.

The budget of the Spanish Zone for 1929 balanced at 59,184,799 pesetas by the help of a subvention from the Spanish Treasury.

The principal revenue of the Tangier Zone is from Customs and Consumption duties. The net revenue for 1928 amounted to 30 963,425 francs and the expenditure to 27,810,745. The budget for 1930 provides for a revenue of 25,423,500 francs and an expenditure of 25,349,569. A reserve fund of some 4 million francs has been maintained. This it is proposed to apply gradually to new public works.

Defence.

The Sherifian army as such no longer exists, except for the Black Guard or Sultan's bodyguard. The military forces in the French Zone are made up of drafts (consisting largely of African troops) from the French Metropolitan and Colonial armies, a portion of the Foreign Legion and native levies of various kinds. Following on the termination of the Rif war a Presidential decree of October 3, 1926, placed the army under the control of the Resident General for all purposes except actual operations, and directed that the regular land forces should be organised in three divisions and two mixed brigades. The French budget for 1931-32 provided for 2,650 officers and 58,614 N.C.O.'s and men of the regular army to be employed in Morocco, as well as the following irregulars:—8 auxiliary native officers, 228 French non-commissioned officers, 140 French brigadiers, 12,122 native rank and file. The composition of the Spanish forces in the Spanish Zone in 1931 numbered 52,500 all ranks. The Tangier Zone is demilitarised. The 1923 Statute as revised in 1928 provides for a native gendarmerie not exceeding 400 men, to be reduced after 12 months to 250, under a Spanish commanding officer and a French second-in-command. The total strength of this force is 417 officers and men.

Production and Industry.

French Zone.—Agriculture is by far the most important industry. The total agricultural area is estimated at about 23,800,000 acres, not including forests. Forest land is estimated at about 3,700,000 acres, of which one-third lies within the agricultural area. The principal crops are cereals, especially wheat and barley; beans, chickpeas, fenugreek and other legumens; canary-seed; cumin and coriander; linseed; olives; vines and other fruits, especially almonds. The approximate yield of the principal crops in 1930 was as follows in metric quintals (220.4 lbs.):—barley, 8,162,534; wheat, 5,797,612; beans, 229,469; oats, 342,185; maize, 1,521,502; chick peas, 588,186; linseed, 113,742. Endeavours are being made to stimulate the production of other crops, e.g. cotton. Market-gardening for export has become important in the neighbourhood of Casablanca. The almost universal wild palmetto is put to various uses, including the manufacture of crin végétal. The trees grown include cork, cedar, arar, argan, oak, and various conifers. In 1930 there were 5,264,758 olive trees, 318,919 orange and lemon trees, 508,453 palm trees (dates), 1,805,955 almond trees, 5,060,756 fig and other trees. Tizra wood is exported for tanning purposes. Gums are produced in considerable quantities. Stock-raising is an important industry. The estimate of the animals in the Zone in 1930 was:—cattle (bovine), 2,092,002; sheep, 7,795,936; goats, 3,356,694; pigs, 59,083; horses, 686,139; mules, 99,504; asses, 576,413; camels, 129,528.

The bulk of the land is held by natives, who cling to primitive methods. There are now, however, a fair number of European settlers. The number of exploitations was estimated at the end of 1929 at 2,595, representing 1,729,756 acres. Work was started in 1927 on a considerable programme of irrigation works, which is to include barrages in the rivers Beth, Moulouya, Mellah, Nefis, Oum-er-Rebia, Derna, Tessaout and El-Akhdar.

The principal mineral exploited is phosphate, the output of which (under a State monopoly) has grown rapidly from 8,232 tons in 1921 to 885,720 tons in 1928, 1,608,249 tons in 1929, 1,779,008 tons in 1930, and 900,731 tons in 1931. Lead ore and manganese are produced in exportable quantities principally in Eastern Morocco. Prospecting for other minerals including gold, silver, iron, tin, copper, antimony, zinc, petroleum and coal is active in many parts of the zone. The output has hitherto been small. The Protectorate has recently embarked on a policy of stimulating mining enterprise by State participation.

The coasts abound in fish. The chief fishing centres are near Casablanca and at Fedhala, which possesses an important preserving industry.

The great scheme for providing a central supply of electrical energy for practically the whole zone by harnessing the water power of the Oum-Er-Rebia is expected shortly to yield 18,000 h.p. and to supply all the coast towns and Marrakash. A large barrage on the Oued Beth, near Meknes, is to supply further power for electrification schemes. At present there is a large power station at Casablanca and local supplies exist in various other towns.

A great number of miscellaneous industries designed partly to supply local requirements of goods previously imported have grown up in recent years. Among them are flour mills, breweries, soap and candle factories, cement factories, etc., etc. The total number of European industrial establishments in 1930 was estimated at 1,000, employing 35,000 persons.

Spanish Zone.—Agriculture is potentially important, but is carried on by natives in primitive fashion. European colonisation is at present almost entirely confined to the towns, but is spreading from the new Riffian township of Villa Sanjarjo into the fertile Guis valley, which was once Abdel Kerim's headquarters. Iron ore is mined and exported from the Melilla district. The Jebala and Ghomara areas are reputed to be rich in mineral wealth, but the disturbed state of the country has in the past prevented any systematic exploitation. Prospecting is now being undertaken in these areas. Fishing, largely tunny, is an important industry. No other considerable industries exist.

Tangier Zone.—The agricultural output, consisting principally of wheat, barley and chickpea, is insufficient for the needs of the population. The most important single industry is the manufacture by a Régie of cigarettes for the whole of Morocco. This employs 700 persons. There are also fisheries and preserving factories and a certain amount of market gardening for local requirements.

Casablanca possesses a fully equipped port, Kenitra a smaller up-river one. Modern ports are under construction at Rabat and Tangier. Fedhala can accommodate vessels up to 4,000 tons which supply important oil storage stations. Mazagan and Mogador have lighter ports and another is under construction at Saffi. Agadir was opened to commerce on January 1, 1930, and a port is projected.

The ports in the Spanish Zone are relatively unimportant, the bulk of the trade being done through Tangier, Ceuta and French Zone ports. In 1930, 1,426 vessels of 1,666,062 tons entered the port of Tangier. Of these 828 (244,488 tons) were Spanish, 241 (531,081 tons) French, and 124 (346,873 tons) British.

Normal gauge (1'44) railways connect :— Fez-Petitjean (112 km.) ; Petitjean-Arbaoua (88 km.) ; Petitjean-Rabat (123 km.) ; Rabat-Casablanca (89 km.) ; Casablanca-Marrakesh (133 km.), with a branch from Ber Reshid to Kourigha for phosphates. The first two form part of the Tangier-Fez railway, which was completed and opened to traffic in July 1927, and the total length of which is 314 km. The narrow-gauge (60 cm.) railway has a total length of 1,210 km. of main line and 187 km. of sidings, and connects :— Oudjda-Taza-Fez (401 km.); Guercif-Midelt (288 km.); Bir Tamtam-Ahermoumou (40 km.); Kenitra-Ouezzan (157 km.); Rabat-Khemisset (94 km.); Aïu Defali-Fes El Bali (65 km.); El Tleta-Meshra El Hader (54 km.); Boñskoñra-Caid Tounsi-Mazagan (227 km.). In 1929, 397,725 metric tons of freight and 529,997 passengers were carried.

The existing railways in the Spanish Zone are Ceuta-Tetuan (41 km.); Nador-Tistutin (36 km.); and Larache-Alcazar (40 km.), besides the portion of the Tangier-Fez railway which crosses the zone.

On December 31, 1930, there were 1,541 miles of main roads and 1,140 miles of secondary roads in the French Zone; about 931 miles of road are tarred. The Spanish Zone has about 350 miles of good roads suitable for traffic. The roads in the Tangier Zone have been considerably improved since the coming into force of the Statute. There are now about 65 miles of urban and rural roads.

There are a daily aeroplane service between Toulouse and Casablanca via Tangier and Rabat, and a weekly service between Casablanca and Dakar. A British company now operates a daily air service between Tangier and Gibraltar, with two trips per day in each direction.

A Sherifian postal service under French management exists in the French and Tangier zones. European mails are conveyed by steamer services from Marseilles and Bordeaux, overland through Spain, and by daily steamers between Algeciras and Tangier and increasingly by air from Toulouse. The Sherifian service in 1929 received 30,975,278 letters, 1,565,809 registered letters, 699,784 parcels, and 8,181,464 printed papers and samples; and despatched 32,595,820 letters, 2,132,199 registered letters, 53,518 parcels and 4,291,783 printed papers and samples. The Spanish authorities maintain the ordinary postal service in the Spanish Zone. Spain retains a post-office in Tangier, and Great Britain maintains the only foreign postal service still existing in Morocco as a whole, with offices at Rabat, Casablanca, Mazagan, Saffi, Mogador, Marrakesh, Fez, Tetuan, Larache, and head office at Tangier.

The total length of telegraph lines open to the public in the French Zone on December 31, 1931, was 2,347 miles, length of wire 3,119 miles. In 1931, 1,258,760 telegrams were received and 1,144,917 despatched, exclusive of 167,821 received and 129,972 despatched free of charge (official, etc.). All important centres in the Spanish Zone are connected by land lines. Communication between Morocco and Europe is maintained by cables between Casablanca and Brest, Tangier-Oran-Marseilles, Tangier-Gibraltar, Tangier-Cadiz, Larache-Cadiz via Algeciras. The French Protectorate administration maintains wireless stations at various places in the French Zone and also at Tangier.

Telephone systems exist in all the principal towns of the French Zone and there is a complete inter-urban connection. In 1929 there were in the Zone 8,764 subscribers and 11,084,102 messages sent. Urban services exist in the principal towns of the Spanish Zone and at Tangier. An inter-zonal system is being studied. Ceuta is now connected with the European system.

Currency, Weights, and Measures.

Since the withdrawal of the Hassani currency in 1920 the franc has been the sole currency in the French Zone. Measures were taken later to protect the note-issue of the Moroccan State Bank from the competition of Algerian and French notes, and steps were taken at the end of 1924 to make those measures really effective. The Moroccan franc (State Bank notes of all denominations from frs. 5 upwards) was in 1928 placed on the same gold basis as the French franc. It is also proposed to mint silver coins of frs. 10 and frs. 20 for use in the hinterland, where paper money is still not very popular.

On December 31, 1930, the value of State bank-notes in circulation was 581,421,495 francs, as compared with 603,833,395 francs at the end of 1929.

Spanish currency circulates in the Spanish Zone together with the old Hassani silver currency. The latter has undergone many vicissitudes since it was the legal currency (concurrently under the Act of Algeciras of 1906 with Spanish money) for the whole of Morocco. It is now relatively stable at an exchange of Pesetas Hassani 50 to the £ stg.

Moroccan francs and Spanish money are legal tender in the Tangier Zone. The Peseta Hassani continues to circulate freely.

The metric system of weights and measures became in 1923 the sole legal system in the French Zone.

The principal native measures still in current use are :—

Weight.—1 Kantar = 100 Rotls. 1 Rotl = 16 ookeyas. The Rotl varies widely round about 2 lbs. Capacity.—The mudd, which varies by locality. Length.—1 Kama = 50 inches. 1 Dra = 20 inches. 1 Kala = 22 inches.

NEPÁL.

AN independent Kingdom in the Himálayas, between  $26^{\circ} 25'$  and  $30^{\circ} 17' N.$  lat., and between  $80^{\circ} 6'$  and  $88^{\circ} 14'$  of E. long.; its greatest length 500 miles; its greatest breadth about 150; bounded on the north by Tibet, on the east by Sikkim, on the south and west by British India.

The sovereign is His Majesty Mahárájádhirája Tribhubana Bir Bikram Jung Bahádúr Shah Bahádúr Shumshere Jung, who was born on June 30, 1906, and succeeded his father on December 11, 1911. The Prince-Royal and Heir-apparent was born on June 11, 1920. The government of Nepál is a military oligarchy. All power is in the hands of the Prime Minister, to whom it was permanently delegated by the Mahárájádhirája Surendra Bikram Shah under pressure of the Bharadárs or nobles of the State in 1867. The present Prime Minister is Major-General Sir Bhim Shamsher Jang Rána, K.C.V.O., K.C.S.I., who was appointed on November 25, 1929. The office of Prime Minister is always held by a member of his family, the succession being determined by special rules.

The Gurkhas, a Rájput race originally from Udaipur in Rajputana, who had settled in the province of Gorkha in Nepál, overran the whole country during the latter half of the eighteenth century, and have maintained their supremacy ever since. A commercial treaty between India and Nepál was signed in 1792, and a British Resident was sent to reside at Káthmándu, but was recalled two years later. A frontier outrage, in 1814, compelled the Indian Government to declare war; and a British force advanced to within three marches of the capital. Peace was concluded and the Treaty of Sagauli signed in December 1815. Since then the relations of the British with Nepál have been friendly. In 1854 hostilities broke out between the Nepalese and Tibetans, and in 1856 a Treaty was concluded between the Nepalese and Tibetan Governments by which the Tibetans bound themselves to pay an annual sum of Rs.10,000 to Nepál, to encourage trade between the two countries, and that the Nepalese Representative at Lhasa should be of high rank. Besides, trade agents are maintained at Gyantse, Kuti, Kerrong, and other trade marts in Tibet.

In accordance with the treaty of Sagauli, which amongst other things provides that accredited ministers of each shall reside at the Court of the other, a British Envoy, with a small escort of Indian sepoys lives at the capital; but he does not interfere in the internal affairs of the State.

A fresh treaty was signed on December 21, 1923. By it all previous treaties, agreements and engagements since and including the Treaty of Sagauli were confirmed, and the British and Nepalese Governments acknowledged one another's independence, internal and external.

Area and Population.—Area about 54,000 square miles; population estimated at about 5,600,000. The estimated gross revenue is 15,000,000 rupees. The races of Nepál, besides the dominant Gurkhas, include earlier inhabitants of Tartar origin, such as Magars, Gurungs, and Bhotias. The Newars, who came from Southern India, live in the valley or adjacent to it.

Capital, Káthmándu, 75 miles from the Indian frontier; population about 80,000, and of the surrounding valley 300,000.

Religion.—Hinduism of an early type is the religion of the Gurkhas, and is gradually but steadily overlaying the Buddhism of the primitive inhabitants.

Defence.—The Army consist of about 45,000 men, mainly infantry, of whom about 20,000 are regulars. The armament comprises about 15,000 magazine 303 rifles, 25,000 Martini-Henry rifles, 110 machine or Lewis guns, 30 modern, 12 fairly modern and about 240 old-fashioned guns.

Trade.—The principal articles of export are cattle, hides and skins, opium and other drugs, gums, resins and dyes, jute, wheat, pulse, rice and other grains, clarified butter, oil seeds, spices, tobacco, timber, saltpetre. The chief imports are cattle, sheep and goats, salt, spices, sugar, tobacco, drugs and dyes, petroleum, leather, brass, iron and copper wares, raw cotton, twist and yarn, silk, cotton and woollen piece goods. Nepál possesses very valuable forests in the southern part of the country.

Slavery was entirely abolished in the country by the Maharaja in 1924-6.

A telephone connects the capital with Birganj near the southern frontier. In February, 1927, the first railway into Nepál (metre gauge), from Raxaul on the Bengal & North-Western Railway to Amlekhganj, a distance of 25 miles, was opened. A ropeway was opened at about the same time for the carriage of goods over the last 14 miles of the road from Raxaul into the Kathmandu valley. A topographical survey of the country by Indian personnel of the Government of India was completed in 1927.

The silver mohar is valued at 6 annas and 8 pies of British Indian currency. Copper pice, of which 50 go to a silver mohar, are also coined. The Indian rupee passes current throughout Nepál.

NETHERLANDS (THE).

(KONINKRIJK DER NEDERLANDEN.)

Reigning Sovereign.

Wilhelmina Helena Pauline Maria, born August 31, 1880, daughter of the late King Willem III., and of his second wife, Princess

Emma, born August 2, 1858, daughter of Prince George Victor of Waldeck ; succeeded to the throne on the death of her father, November 23, 1890 ; came of age August 31, 1898, and was crowned September 6 of that year ; married to Prince Henry of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, February 7, 1901. Offspring : Princess Juliana Louise Emma Marie, Wilhelmina, born April 30, 1909.

The royal family of the Netherlands, known as the House of Orange, descends from a German Count Walram, who lived in the eleventh century. Through the marriage of Count Engelbrecht, of the branch of Otto, Count of Nassau, with Jane of Polanen, in 1404, the family acquired the barony of Breda, and thereby became settled in the Netherlands. The alliance with another heiress, only sister of the childless Prince of Orange and Count of Châlons, brought to the house a rich province in the south of France ; and a third matrimonial union, that of Prince Willem III. of Orange with a daughter of King James II., led to the transfer of the crown of Great Britain to that prince. Previous to this period, the members of the family had acquired great influence in the United Provinces of the Netherlands under the name of 'stadhouders,' or governors. The dignity was formally declared to be hereditary in 1747, in Willem IV. ; but his successor, Willem V., had to fly to England, in 1795, at the invasion of the French republican army. The family did not return till November, 1813, when the United Provinces were freed from French domination. After various diplomatic negotiations, the Belgian provinces, subject before the French revolution to the House of Austria, were ordered by the Congress of Vienna to be joined to the Northern Netherlands, and the whole to be erected into a kingdom, with the son of the last stadhouder, Willem V., as hereditary sovereign. In consequence, the latter was proclaimed King of the Netherlands at The Hague on the 16th of March, 1815, and recognised as sovereign by all the Powers of Europe. The union thus established between the northern and southern Netherlands was dissolved by the Belgian revolution of 1830, and their political relations were not readjusted until the signing of the treaty of London, April 19, 1839, which constituted Belgium an independent kingdom. King Willem I. abdicated in 1840, bequeathing the crown to his son Willem II., who, after a reign of nine years, left it to his heir, Willem III. This king reigned 41 years, and died in 1890 ; in default of male heirs, he was succeeded by his only daughter Wilhelmina.

The Sovereign has a civil list of 1,200,000 guilders. There is also a large revenue from domains, and in addition an allowance of 100,000 guilders for the maintenance of the royal palaces. The family of Orange is, besides, in the possession of a very large private fortune, acquired in greater part by King Willem I. in the prosecution of vast enterprises tending to raise the commerce of the Netherlands.

Government and Constitution.

I. CENTRAL GOVERNMENT.

The first Constitution of the Netherlands after its reconstruction as a Sovereign State was promulgated in 1814, and was revised in 1815 (after the addition of the Belgian provinces, and the assumption by the Sovereign of the title of King) ; in 1840 (after the secession of the Belgian provinces) ; in 1848, 1884, 1887, 1917, and 1922. According to this charter the Netherlands form a constitutional and hereditary monarchy. The royal succession is in the direct male line in the order of primogeniture : in default of male heirs, the female line ascends the throne. In default of a legal heir, the successor to the throne is designated by the Sovereign and a joint meeting of both the Houses of Parliament (each containing twice the usual number of members), and by this assembly alone if the case occurs after the Sovereign's death. The age of majority of the Sovereign is 18 years. During his minority the royal power is vested in a Regent—designated by law—and in some cases in the State Council.

The executive power of the State belongs exclusively to the Sovereign, while the whole legislative authority rests conjointly in the Sovereign and Parliament, the latter—called the States-General—consisting of two Chambers. The Upper or First Chamber is composed of 50 members, elected by the Provincial States. Members of the First Chamber not residing in the Hague, where the Parliament meets, are allowed 10 guilders (16s. 8d.) a day during the Session of the States-General. The Second Chamber of the States-General numbers 100 deputies, who are elected directly. Members are allowed 5,000 florins (420*l.*) annually, with travelling expenses. Members of the States-General must be Dutch subjects, men or women, and recognised as such.

First chamber (elected July 26, 1929): 16 Catholics, 6 Anti-Revolutionists, 7 Protestant Party, 6 Liberty Union, 4 Democrats and 11 Social Democrats.

Second chamber (elected July 3, 1929): Catholics, 30; Social Democrats, 24; Anti-Revolutionists, 12; Christian Historicals, 11; Liberty Union, 8; Democrats, 7; other parties, 8.

The Electoral Reform Act, passed December 12, 1917, provides for universal suffrage and proportional representation. The Members of the Second Chamber are, according to the Electoral Reform Act, directly elected by citizens of both sexes who are Dutch subjects not under 25 years. Criminals, lunatics, and certain others are excluded; for certain crimes and misdemeanours there may be temporary exclusion. The electoral body numbered April 1, 1931, 3,957,530 voters, i.e. 98·0 per cent. of the number of citizens of 25 years and older.

The members of the Second Chamber are elected for 4 years, and retire in a body, whereas the First Chamber is elected for 6 years, and every 3 years one half retire by rotation. The Sovereign has the power to dissolve both Chambers of Parliament, or one of them, being bound only to order new elections within 40 days, and to convoke the new meeting within two months.

The Government and the Second Chamber only may introduce new Bills; the functions of the Upper Chamber being restricted to approving or rejecting them without the power of inserting amendments. The meetings of both Chambers are public, though each of them, by the decision of the majority, may form itself into a private committee. The ministers may attend at the meetings of both Chambers, but they have only a deliberative vote unless they are members. Alterations in the Constitution can be made only by a Bill declaring that there is reason for introducing those alterations, followed by a dissolution of the Chambers and a second confirmation by the new States-General by two-thirds of the votes. Unless it is expressly declared, the laws concern only the realm in Europe, and not the Colonies. The executive authority, belonging to the Sovereign, is exercised by a responsible Council of Ministers. The names of the members of the Ministry are:—

1. President of the Council of Ministers, Minister of the Interior and of Agriculture.—Jonkheer Dr. Ch. J. M. Ruys de Beerenbrouck; appointed August 10, 1929.

2. The Minister of Foreign Affairs.—Jonkheer Dr. F. Beelaerts van Blokland; appointed March 30, 1927.

3. The Minister of Finance.—Jonkheer Dr. D. J. de Geer; appointed March 8, 1926.

4. The Minister of Justice.—Dr. J. Donner; appointed March 8, 1926.

5. The Minister of the Colonies.—S. de Graaf; appointed August 10, 1926.

6. The Minister of Defence.—Dr. L. N. Deckers; appointed August 10, 1929.

7. The Minister of Public Works (Waterstaat).—Dr. P. J. Reymer; appointed August 10, 1929.

8. The Minister of Labour, Commerce, and Industry.—Dr. J. Th. Verschuur; appointed August 10, 1929.

9. The Minister of Instruction, Science, and Arts.—Dr. J. Terpstra; appointed August 10, 1929.

Each of the above Ministers has an annual salary of 16,000 guilders, or 1,333l. The Minister of Foreign Affairs enjoys besides 10,000 guilders for representation.

There is a State Council—'Raad van State'—of 14 members, appointed by the Sovereign, of which the Sovereign is president, and which is consulted on all legislative and a great number of executive matters.

II. LOCAL GOVERNMENT

The territory is divided into 11 provinces and 1,077 communes (January 1, 1932). Each province has its own representative body, 'the Provincial States.' The members are elected for 4 years, directly from among the Dutch inhabitants of the province who are 25 years of age. Except that they must be inhabitants of the province, the electors are the same as for the Second Chamber. The members retire in a body and are subject to re-election. The number of members varies according to the population of the province, from 82 for Holland (South) to 35 for Drente. The Provincial States are entitled to make ordinances concerning the welfare of the province, and to raise taxes according to legal precepts. All provincial ordinances must be approved by the Crown. The Provincial States exercise a right of control over the municipalities. They also elect the members of the First Chamber of the States-General. They meet twice a year, as a rule in public. A permanent commission composed of 6 (in Drente 4) of their members, called the 'Deputed States,' is charged with the executive power in the province and the daily administration of its affairs. This committee has also to see the common law executed in the province. Both the Deputed as well as the Provincial States are presided over by a Commissioner of the Sovereign, who in the former assembly has a deciding vote, but in the latter named only a deliberative vote. He is the chief magistrate in the province. The Commissioner and the members of the Deputed States receive an allowance.

Each of the communes forms a Corporation with its own interests and rights, subject to the general law. In each commune is a Council, elected for four years directly, by the same voters as for the Provincial States, provided they inhabit the commune. All the Dutch inhabitants 23 years of age are eligible, the number of members varying from 7 to 45, according to the population. The Council has a right of making and enforcing bye-laws concerning the communal welfare. The Council may raise taxes according to rules prescribed by common law; besides, each commune receives from the State Treasury an allowance proportioned to the total number of its inhabitants and to the share which its non-contributing inhabitants have failed to pay towards local taxes. All bye-laws may be vetoed by the Sovereign. The Municipal Budget and the resolutions to alienate municipal property require the approbation of the Deputed States of the province.

The Council meets in public as often as may be necessary, and is presided over by a Mayor, appointed by the Sovereign for 6 years. The executive power is vested in a college formed by the Mayor and 2—6 Aldermen (wethouders), elected by and from the Council; this college is also charged with the execution of the public law. The Municipal Police is under the authority of the Mayor; as a State functionary the Mayor supervises the actions of the Council; he may suspend their resolutions for 30 days, but is bound to inform the Deputed States of the province.

Religion.

Entire liberty of conscience is granted to the members of all religious confessions. The royal family and a great part of the inhabitants belong to the Reformed Church. The State Budget (1931) contains allowances for the different churches: for Protestant Churches, about 1,704,000 guilders; for Roman Catholics, about 705,000; for Jansenists, about 15,500; and for Jews, about 16,400.

The number of adherents of the different Churches in the various provinces according to the census of 1920 was: Dutch Reformed Church, 2,826,633; Other Protestants, 832,164; Catholics, 2,444,583; Jansenists, 10,461; Jews, 115,223; and other creeds or those of none, 635,240; unknown, 1,010.

The government of the Reformed Church is Presbyterian. At the end of 1930 the Dutch Reformed, Walloon, English Presbyterian, and Scotch Churches had 1 Synod, 10 provincial districts, 44 classes, and 1,432 parishes. Their clergy numbered about 1,660. The Roman Catholic Church had one archbishop (of Utrecht), 4 bishops, and 1,333 parishes. The Old Catholics had 1 archbishop, 2 bishops, and 27 parishes. The Jews had 145 communities.

Education.

Public instruction (primary) is given in all places where needed, religious convictions being respected. Instruction was made obligatory by the Act of 1900; the school age is from 7–13.

In 1806, and more expressly in 1848, secular instruction was separated from religious or sectarian instruction. The law on the point of the year 1879 is still in force. By a modification of the Act of 1887 public instruction is diminished and a greater share in education is left to private instruction, if approved as efficient by the State, in which case it is paid for out of public funds. The cost of public primary instruction is borne jointly by the State and the communes, the State contributing to the salaries of the teachers and being responsible for 25 per cent. of the costs of founding or purchasing schools.

The Secondary Education Act dates from the year 1863, but it has repeatedly been modified since. Superior instruction is given in the larger communities in public or private schools. Private schools may be endowed by the State, private professional schools also by the province and the community. The Higher Education Act dates from the year 1876, but it has repeatedly been modified since. Higher education is given at Universities, in high schools, and grammar schools, either public or private. Private institutions may be endowed by the State. Tuition in Kindergartens has not been regulated by law.

The following table is taken from the Government returns for 1928-29 :—

Besides the schools named in the table, there is a great number of special schools, mostly technical. Since 1908 there is also a Government school to train functionaries of the colonial service for superior posts.

Expenditure for education in guilders :—

1927	114,777,000	274,000	50,534,000
1928	117,867,000	200,000	56,867,000

Of the conscripts called out in 1930, 0·19 per cent. could neither read nor write, the percentage being highest in Groningen, 0·54. Of the persons married in 1918, 0·22 per cent. of the males and 0·41 per cent. of the females could not sign the marriage certificate. Of the convicts in 1911, 4 per cent. could neither read nor write. Of the total number of children from 7 to 13 years (school age) on January 1, 1922, 4.29 per cent. received no elementary instruction.

Justice and Crime.

Justice is administered by the High Court of the Netherlands (Court of Cassation), by 5 courts of justice (Courts of Appeal), by 21 district tribunals, and by 101 cantonal courts; trial by jury is unknown in Holland. The Cantonal Court, which deals with minor offences, is formed by a single judge; the more serious cases are tried by the district tribunals, formed as a rule by 3 judges (in some cases one judge is sufficient); the courts are constituted of 3 and the High Court of 5 judges. All Judges are appointed for life by the Sovereign (the Judges of the High Court from a list prepared by the Second Chamber). They can be removed only by a decision of the High Court.

Juvenile courts were called into existence in 1922. The juvenile court is formed by a single judge specially appointed to try children's civil cases, at the same time charged with the administration of justice for criminal actions committed by young persons who are not yet 18 years old, unless imprisonment of six months or more ought to be inflicted, in which case the judge of the juvenile court acts as judge-examiner.

The number of persons convicted was:—

Year	By the Cantonal Courts		By the District Tribunals
	Male	Female	Male	Female
1927	168,971	18,984	18,180	2,207
1928	177,829	16,192	18,244	2,139
1929	165,190	14,761	17,644	1,975
1930	173,160	13,639	18,299	1,959

The number of inmates in the prisons during the years 1928, 1929, and 1930 was respectively, 6,948, 6,055, and 5,977 males, and 281, 232, and 195 females; in the houses of detention, 13,360, 12,646, and 14,109 males, and 551, 553, and 401 females. There are also 4 State-work establishments; the numbers of inmates of these establishments were respectively in the years 1928, 1929, and 1930, 2,780, 2,556, and 2,577 males, and 21, 19, and 15 females.

In 1901 an Act was passed reforming State reformatories for the education of juvenile criminals and establishing disciplinary schools for juvenile criminals. The number of inmates during the years 1928, 1929, and 1930 in the State reformatories was: 785, 667, and 650 boys, 121, 100, and 117 girls; in the disciplinary schools: 450, 366, and 432 boys, 83, 82, and 91 girls.

There are both State and municipal police. The State police consists of field-constables and cavalry. The former are spread over the country, the latter guard the frontiers (eastern and southern). The cavalry police (maréchaussée) numbers about 22 officers and 1,150 men. There are about 1,339 field-constables—appointed and paid by the Government—divided into numerous brigades. Besides each commune has its own field-constables or police force.

I. FRONTIER.

The Netherlands are bordered on the south by Belgium, on the east by Germany. On the former side the country is quite level, on the latter more hilly; the land frontier is open all round. The frontiers are defended by few fortresses. The scheme of defence adopted in 1874 contemplated the concentration of the defensive forces in a restricted area, known as the 'Holland Fortress.' This comprises the provinces of North and South Holland, with parts of Zealand and Utrecht. Two-thirds of the area is surrounded by the sea. On the land side, to the East and South, are lines of more or less permanent works, which can be rendered very difficult of attack by inundations. There are also strong works on the coast, notably the Helder group, barring access to the Zuiderzee, and the Hollandsch Diep and Volkerak position, while the entrances to the Amsterdam and Rotterdam ship canals are defended by powerful forts. The citadel of the whole is Amsterdam, which is well fortified. Here also inundations would almost preclude a successful attack. The coast defences are in good order and are to be further strengthened, but the defences on the land side, except the position of Amsterdam, have of late years been neglected. Moreover, the control of the inundations is not entirely in military hands.

Apart from the Holland Fortress are the works on the Western Schelde. These have hitherto been unimportant, but a plan has been adopted to augment them by entirely new works at Flushing.

Defence.

I. FRONTIER.

The Netherlands are bordered on the south by Belgium, on the east by Germany. On the former side the country is quite level, on the latter more hilly; the land frontier is open all round. The frontiers are defended by few fortresses. The scheme of defence adopted in 1874 contemplated the concentration of the defensive forces in a restricted area, known as the 'Holland Fortress.' The coast defences are in good order and are to be further strengthened, but the defences on the land side, except the position of Amsterdam, have of late years been neglected. Moreover, the control of the inundations is not entirely in military hands.

Apart from the Holland Fortress are the works on the Western Schelde. These have hitherto been unimportant, but a plan has been adopted to augment them by entirely new works at Flushing.

II. ARMY.

According to an Act of 1922, service in the army is partly voluntary and partly compulsory; the voluntary enlistments bear a small proportion to the compulsory. Every Dutch citizen and, in certain circumstances, every other resident in the Netherlands, is liable to personal service in the army (or navy) from the age of 19 up to 40. The maximum strength of the annual contingent is fixed at 19,500 (including 1,000 for the sea service). The average effective strength of the home army in 1931 was 1,568 officers and 16,293 other ranks. Budget for Army and Navy, 1932, 99,135,809 florins.

The first training lasts for: (a) 5½ months at the longest for men not belonging to the mounted corps, with the exception of those under (b) and (c); (b) 9 months at the longest for men not belonging to the mounted corps who after enlistment are being trained as subalterns; (c) 12 months at the longest for men not belonging to the mounted corps who after enlistment are being trained as officers, for infirm men, for conscripts of the air service, and for men of the mounted artillery troops; (d) 15 months at the longest for the cavalry; (e) 8 months at the longest for the navy. The time for further training is at the lowest 40 days for all conscripts, with the exception of infirm men and air-service men, who are exempted.

The Dutch garrison of the East Indies is organised in 2 divisions with a strength, in 1931, of 1,115 officers and 38,669 other ranks.

The Netherlands infantry is armed with the Mannlicher magazine rifle, model 95. Cavalry and engineers carry the Mannlicher carbine. The field artillery, including the horse batteries, is armed with a shielded Q.F. Krupp gun of 7.5 cm.

III. NAVY.

The Navy is maintained for a double purpose—viz. the protection of the Dutch waters and coast, and the defence of the East Indian possessions. These latter contribute to the maintenance of that division of it known as the Indian Marine. The majority of the vessels recently added to the Navy are intended mainly for the defence of the Dutch East Indies.

Following is a list of the principal ships of the Dutch Navy.

Name	Displacement, Tons	Armour water line	Max. Armour on guns	Principal Armament	Torpedo Tubes	Indicated Horse-power	Nominal Speed Knots	Laid down

There are also 3 armoured gunboats; 3 sloops; 8 destroyers of 1,316 tons; 8 seagoing torpedo boats; 22 submarines; 2 submarine depot ships and 12 mine layers. Nine submarines and some other small craft are under construction. The Zeven Provinciën and the cruisers Java and Sumatra are assigned to the East Indies Fleet, as are the destroyers, 4 older torpedo-boats, 12 of the submarines, and many of the other vessels mentioned. The construction of a new cruiser has been deferred on financial grounds.

Production and Industry.

In 1930 the private mines produced 5,223,120 tons, and the State mines, 6,987,966 tons. There is one salt mine at Boekelo, production 1929, 44,914 tons; 1930, 49,807 tons; 1931, 56,414 tons.

There are no official returns of all the manufacturing industries. According to the last reports there were, in 1930: 2·0 distilleries, 10 sugar refineries, 7 beet-sugar factories, 11 salt works, 148 breweries, and 2,919 tobacco factories.

Internal Communications.

I. CANALS AND RAILWAYS.

The total extent of rivers and navigable canals is about 4,660 miles; of roads about 3,000 miles.

In 1929 the total length of the principal tramway lines was 1,916 miles; 362,845,000 passengers were carried, and 3,279,407,000 kilogrammes of goods. Their revenue amounted to 47,229,000 guilders.

In 1930 the 2 principal railways had a length of 2,287 miles. The breadth of the railway gauge is 1.50 metres, or 4 ft. 11 in. In 1930 59,038,000 passengers were carried on the railways. The total revenue was 171,876,000 guilders. All railway companies are private; there is a State railway company, only so named because the road is owned by the State. A project is on foot for bringing the railway companies under one control.

II. POST AND TELEGRAPHS.

The postal traffic was as follows in 2 years :—

—	Letters	Post Cards	Newspapers and Printed Matter	Parcels	Letters with Money Orders 1929
Internal .	219,647,000	104,552,656	536,023,000	7,706,785	222,327

Foreign .	87,343,000	19,205,250	61,815,000	2,027,434	208,903

The receipts of the Post Office in 1930 were 48,905,000 guilders, the expenditure in 1930, 46,886,000 guilders.

There are several private telegraph lines, but most of the lines are owned by the State. The length of State lines on Jan. 1, 1931, was 999 miles, the length of wires on Jan. 1, 1931, 16,368 miles. The number of State offices was, on Jan. 1, 1931, 1,990. The number of paid messages by State and private lines in 1929 was 7,191,400. The receipts of the State amounted in the same year to 13,757,000 guilders, and the ordinary expenses in 1930 to 15,049,000 guilders.

In 1921 the interurban and international telephone system had 2,512 miles of line and on December 31, 1930, 294,891 miles of wire, and is administered by the State; 23,729,375 interurban and 2,296,413 international conversations were held in 1930. The receipts were in the same year for interurban and international intercourse 16,130,000 guilders, and the total expenses 12,666,000 guilders.

II. AIR TRAFFIC.

There is a regular civil aeroplane service subsidised by the Government between Amsterdam and London, Amsterdam, Brussels and Paris, Amsterdam and Hamburg, Rotterdam and Berlin, and between Amsterdam and Malmö. In 1929, 75 tons of postal matter, 695 tons of goods and 14,269 passengers were carried; in 1930, resp. 65 tons, 684 tons and 10,152 passengers.

Banking and Credit.

The money in general circulation is chiefly silver. Before 1875 the Netherlands had the silver standard; but a Bill which passed the States-General in the session of 1875 allowed an unrestricted coinage of ten-guilder pieces in gold, whereas the coinage of silver was suspended for an unlimited time.

Value of money minted during the following years (in thousands of guilders):—

Year	Gold	Silver	Copper and Nickel	For the East and West India Colonies	Total value	Total number of pieces
1881-1900	8,564	13,710	1,310	10,834	34,418	452,342,090
1901-1920	95,123	108,370	4,362	58,152	265,907	1,370,652,000
1921-1929	55,000	92,270	2,131	19,912	169,913	597,920,000
1930	—	54,750	165	3,250	58,165	88,500,000

The Bank of the Netherlands is a private institution, but it is the only one which has the right of issuing bank-notes. This right, granted in 1863 for 25 years, was prolonged in 1888 for 15 years, and prolonged again for the same term in 1903, with some alterations in the conditions; e.g. all the paper money is to be issued by the Bank. In 1918 the Charter was once more prolonged for a further 15 years. The Bank does the same business as other banks, only with more guarantees. Two-fifths of the paper money in circulation must be covered. It has agencies in all places of importance.

Year	Value of the notes in Circulation, March 31	Total Exchanges years ending March 31	Stock of Gold, March 31	Stock of Silver, March 31

1931	859,975,000	1,719,238,750	446,018	33,778

The capital amounts to 20,000,000 guilders, the reserve fund on March 31, 1931 to 7,563,206 guilders. The Bank keeps the State-Treasury and the cash of the State Postal Savings-Bank and of other institutions. The Bank receives  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. of the capital; the remainder, with deduction of some reserves, is divided between the State and the Bank in proportion of 3 : 1.

There are many savings-banks, all private. Besides these there is a State postal savings-bank, established in 1881. The following table gives some particulars :—

Year	Number of Savings Banks	Amount deposited (in 1,000 gldrs.)	Amount withdrawn (in 1,000 gldrs.)	Total Deposits at end of year (in 1,000 gldrs.)	Number of Depositors at end of year	Amount per inhabitant. Gldrs.

Colonies.

The colonial possessions of the Netherlands, situated in the East Indies and the West Indies, embrace an area of about 788,000 English square miles, with a total population of 60,960,630 in 1931.

NETHERLANDS EAST INDIES.

The Dutch possessions in Asia, forming the territory of Netherlands India (Nederlandsch Indie), are situated between 6° N. and 11° S. latitude, and between 95° and 141° E. longitude.

In 1602 the Dutch created their East India Company. This Company conquered successively the Dutch East Indies, and ruled them during nearly two centuries. After the dissolution of the Company in 1798 the Dutch possessions were governed by the mother-country.

Government and Constitution.

Politically, the territory, which is under the sovereignty of the Netherlands, is divided into (1) Lands under direct government; (2) Subject native States.

The administration and executive authority of the East Indies rest in the hands of a Governor-General. He is assisted by a Council of seven members of an advisory character. The members of the Council, however, have no share in the executive. The Governor-General and the members of the Council are nominated by the Queen. In 1918 a 'Volksraad' was installed to discuss the budget, and to advise the Government on matters of general importance as a first step towards the development of self-government in the colony. Some of the members are appointed by the Government, some are elected by the local councils, and the Chairman is appointed by the Crown. It includes Europeans, natives and foreign Orientals (Chinese, Arabs). By the Netherlands India Constitution of 1925, the Netherlands East Indies are granted a measure of self-government in internal affairs under supervision of the Home Government, the legislative powers being shared between the Volksraad and the Governor-General.

The provinces, divided into residencies, are governed by Governors; the residencies by Residents, assisted by Assistant-Residents and a member of subordinate European officials. Local government is almost entirely exercised by native civil servants, headed by Regents. The Resident, however, remains responsible for governing in his division.

Governor-General.—Jhr. Dr. B. C. de Jonge, appointed May 8, 1931.

The population of Java and Madura on October 7, 1930 (Census), consisted of 20,428,932 males and 21,290,592 females; 193,618 were Europeans, 40,890,244 natives, and 635,662 other Orientals, chiefly Chinese and Arabs (583,360 Chinese). The population of the outer provinces (census 1930) was 19,011,501 (included an estimate of 135,350), with 9,581,893 males and 9,294,258 females; 48,754 were Europeans, 18,253,531 Natives, 650,496 Chinese, and 58,720 other Asiatics.

The whole population of the colony is legally divided into Europeans, Natives and foreign Orientals. The former generally live under the same laws as the inhabitants of the mother-country, while in the government of the latter the Indian customs and institutions are considered. The Governor-General, however, is, in agreement with the Council, authorised to make individual exceptions to this rule.

Religion.

Entire liberty is granted to all religious denominations. The Protestant Church counted, in 1930, 41 ministers and 27 preachers and assistant-preachers paid by the Government, the Roman Catholic 37 curates and 235 priests, not salaried out of the public funds. During 1930, 89 missionaries of 38 societies were allowed to practise their missionary work.

The bulk of the natives are Mohammedans; there are also some millions of converted Christians and Animists, and a small number of Buddhists.

Education.

There are public (Government and municipal) primary schools, where instruction is given through the medium of the Dutch language, for (1) Europeans and persons assimilated with them (a 7 years' course); (2) Chinese ('Dutch-Chinese schools,' with a 7 years' course); (3) Natives ('Dutch-Native schools,' with a 7 years' course); and (4) link-schools (with a 5 years' course). Public schools where instruction is given through the medium of a native tongue are (1) the 'second class' schools (with a 5 or 6 years' course); and (2) village schools (with a 3 years' course of extremely elementary instruction). Besides, there are schools with an extended primary instruction (in the Dutch language) with a 3 years' course (Mulo-schools) open to all certificated pupils of the primary schools with a 7 years' course, without distinction of race. Side by side with the public schools, there are various private schools.

For secondary education there are public secondary schools with 5- and 3-year courses in connection with the primary schools, and also with 8-year courses in connection with the extended primary school. In addition to the Government institutions there are 6 private secondary schools for girls with a 3 years' course and 1 with a 5 years' course. Higher education is given at the Technical High School at Bandoeng, erected in 1920. Furthermore, a High School for Law opened in 1924, and a Medical High School, erected in 1927, both at Batavia.

The following table shows the number of schools, the school attendance, the teaching staff, and the expenditure on education in 1980:—

Defence.

The Dutch forces in the East Indies constitute a colonial army which is entirely separate from the home army. The colonial army in 1931 comprised 6 regiments of field infantry, each regiment consisting of 3 battalions and 1 machine-gun company, 2 battalions of light infantry, 13 garrison battalions and 2 garrison companies, and the light infantry corps at Atchin. There were further 3 dépôt battalions of infantry, 1 position machine-gun company, 1 company of cyclist-soldiers, 6 squadrons, 1 dépôt squadron of cavalry, 5 field batteries, 6 mountain batteries, 2 motor batteries, 1 company of position-artillery, 1 dépôt battery of artillery, 2 field companies of sappers and miners, 1 motor-car company, 1 technical company and 1 dépôt company of engineering troops; and a flying corps consisting of 1 wing (8 flights of 6 aeroplanes). In 1918 compulsory service was introduced in the militia for Europeans between 19 and 32 years of age, and in the landstorm between the ages of 31 and 45. On December 31, 1930, there were 15,008 militia-men.

In most battalions there are 3 companies composed either of Europeans or of Natives; the greater part of the officers, and a proportion of the non-commissioned officers, are Europeans. The artillery has European and Native gunners and Native drivers. The Europeans (except the militia) and Natives are recruited by volunteers. The strength of the colonial army in 1930 was 1,282 officers, 37,219 volunteers, of whom 6,989 were Europeans and 30,230 Natives. Besides the Army there are different armed troops, viz.: (1) The Legion of the Native Prince Mangkoe Negara, consisting of infantry, numbering about 960 men. In case of war this Legion would be placed at the disposal of the Commander-in-Chief. (2) The Barisan, being a native infantry of Madura, consisting of 3 battalions, numbering 1,652 men, designed to maintain peace in the island and to participate in campaigns in case of war.

The expenditure for defence (army and navy) estimated for 1932 amounts to about 91,758,000 guilders.

DUTCH WEST INDIES.

The Dutch possessions in the West Indies are (a) Surinam, or Dutch Guiana, and (b) Curaçao.

Surinam or Dutch Guiana.

Dutch Guiana or Surinam is situated on the north coast of S. America between 2 and 6° N. latitude, and 53° 50' and 58° 20' W. longitude, and bounded on the north by the Atlantic Ocean, on the east by the river Marowijne, which separates it from French Guiana, on the west by the river Corantijn, which separates it from British Guiana, and on the south by inaccessible forests and savannas to the Tumac-Humac Mountains, which separates it from Brazil.

At the peace of Breda, in 1667, between England and the United Netherlands, Surinam was assured to the Netherlands in exchange for the colony of New Netherlands in North America, and this was confirmed by the treaty of Westminster of February, 1674. Since then Surinam has been twice in the possession of England, 1799 till 1802, when it was restored at the peace of Amiens, and in 1804 to 1816, when it was returned according to the Convention of London of August 13, 1814, confirmed at the peace of Paris of November 20, 1815, with the other Dutch colonies, except Berbice, Demerara, Essequibo, and the Cape of Good Hope.

The administration and executive authority are in the hands of a governor assisted by an advisory council consisting of the governor as president, a vice-president and three members, all nominated by the Queen of the Netherlands. The Colonial States form the representative body of the colony. The members (13) are elected for 6 years.

NICARAGUA.

(REPÚBLICA DE NICARAGUA.)

Constitution and Government.

THE Constitution of the Republic of Nicaragua came into operation on April 5th, 1913. It vests the legislative power in a Congress of two houses consisting of 43 deputies, elected for 4 years by universal suffrage, and 24 Senators elected for 6 years. The President is elected for 4 years.

President.—General Don José Maria Moncada (elected November 4, 1928; assumed office January 1, 1929).

The President exercises his functions through a council of responsible ministers, composed of the heads of the departments. He may form, when occasion requires, a Council of State to advise on public contracts and other matters.

The Republic is divided into 13 'departments' and 2 'comarcas,' each of which is under a political head, who has supervision of finance, instruction and other matters, and is also military commandant. The Mosquito Reserve now forms a department named Bluefields.

By an agreement reached in 1911 between the Government and the British bondholders, modified and extended in 1917 and 1920, customs receipts and certain other revenues are collected by the Collector-General of Customs (who must be an American) and applied by a High Commission of 3 members (2 of whom must be Americans) to the payment of the external debt, the balance being turned over to the Government.

On February 18, 1916, the Bryan-Chamorro treaty between Nicaragua and the United States was signed, under which the United States in return for 3 million dollars acquired the option for a canal route through Nicaragua and also a naval base in the Bay of Fonseca on the Pacific coast and Corn Island on the Atlantic coast. It was ratified by Nicaragua on April 7, 1916, and by the United States on June 24, 1916. American Army engineers reported to the U.S. Congress in 1931 that a Nicaraguan canal would cost 700,000,000 dollars, whereas a third set of locks on the Panama Canal could be constructed for 140,000,000 dollars.

Area and Population.

Area estimated at 51,660 English square miles, with a coastline of about 300 miles on the Atlantic and 200 miles on the Pacific. The population according to the census of 1920 was 638,119. Estimated population in 1930, based on registration of voters, 750,000. This is the most thinly populated of the Central American republics. At least 75 per cent. of the inhabitants live in the western half of the country. The two halves of the Republic differ greatly in many respects and there is little communication between them, the journey by trail and river being slow and difficult.

The people of the western half of the Republic are principally of mixed Spanish and Indian extraction, though there are a considerable number of pure Spanish descent and many Indians. The population of the eastern half is composed mainly of Mosquito and Zambo Indians and Negroes from Jamaica and other islands of the Caribbean, with some Americans and a comparatively small number of Nicaraguans from the western part of the Republic.

There are 105 municipalities of which 28 have from 2,000 to 30,000 inhabitants. The capital is Managua, situated on the lake of the same name, with (1926) 32,536 inhabitants; it was almost totally destroyed by earthquake on March 31, 1931, but is being rebuilt. León, formerly the capital, had a population of 23,565; Granada, 18,066; Matagalpa, 10,271; Masaya, 13,763; Jinotega, 6,990; Chinandega, 10,307; Rivas, 4,081; Esteli, 4,583; Matapa, 4,561; Somoto, 6,182; Boaco, 4,342; Jinotepe, 6,317; Diriamba, 6,151; Bluefields, 4,706. Other towns are Corinto, 2,307; Cabo-Gracias; and San Juan del Sur on the Pacific.

Religion, Education and Justice.

The prevailing form of religion is Roman Catholic. In 1914 the Republic constituted one archbishopric and ecclesiastical province (Nicaragua). The Seat of the Archbishop is Managua. There are three bishoprics, León, Granada and Matagalpa.

There were (1931) 187 state elementary schools, 12 secondary schools, 5 professional schools, 408 mixed (urban and rural) schools and 233 other schools. The total number of teachers is 1,856. The number of illiterate persons, of all ages, is about 60 per cent. of the population. Secondary education is neither obligatory nor free, the secondary schools being carried on by private individuals. Nicaragua has three universities, in the cities of Managua, León, and Granada.

The judicial power is vested in a supreme Court of Justice at Managua, three chambers of second instance, and judges of inferior tribunals.

Finance.

Revenue and expenditure for 5 years in córdobas (4.86 córdobas = £1; 1 córdoba = 1 U.S. dollar):—

—	1926	1927	1928	1929	1930
	Córdobas	Córdobas	Córdobas	Córdobas	Córdobas
Revenue . . .	4,443,630	4,871,427	5,987,583	6,553,094	4,623,419
Expenditure . .	4,442,168	4,918,295	5,845,826	6,450,711	5,000,000

Customs duties provide from 50 to 60 per cent. of total revenues.

Total public debt on February 28, 1931, was estimated at 21,943,746 córdobas, divided into: Sterling bonds of 1909 outstanding, 2,580,996 córdobas; guaranteed customs bonds of 1918, 1,362,750 córdobas; claims arising out of the revolution, 18,000,000 córdobas. But last-named will be considerably scaled down, probably, it is stated, to 2,000,000 córdobas. Service of internal and external debt took 618,796 córdobas in 1930. U.S. Department of Commerce (1931) estimates American investments in Nicaragua at 13,000,000 dollars, principally in fruit, lumber and mining industries. All other foreign investments are believed to be less than 20,000,000 dollars.

Defence.

The army was disbanded on May 10, 1927. With few exceptions, all arms, etc., have been delivered into the custody of the National Guard, which numbers about 2,000 men, including 180 American officers. Period of enlistment, 3 years; during period of enlistment, soldiers cannot vote. A force of U.S. marines has been retained in the country since 1927 to assist in maintaining order; it was withdrawn in June, 1931, except for a Legation guard. A coastguard boat patrols the east coast to prevent smuggling.

Production and Industry.

The agricultural, timber and mining industries are the principal sources of national wealth. The area of cultivation in Nicaragua has extended in recent years and would probably extend still further but for the scarcity of labour. The banana, grown on 41,000 acres, is the principal agricultural product of the eastern part of the Republic; output is shipped to New Orleans; exports, 1930, 3,861,073 stems. Cocoanuts are also of some importance, and a few plantains, oranges, and pineapples, and some yucca are raised. The products of the western half are much more varied, the most important being coffee, sugar cane, cacao, corn, and beans. Sugar producers have a combine, under government control, which fixes the price for export; profits are made on domestic consumption; exports, 1930, 6,887 metric tons. Rice is grown to a small extent, and some wheat in the hilly Nueva Segovia district, while tobacco is cultivated round Masaya. The annual average coffee crop, from 104,000 acres, is estimated at 36,000,000 lbs. Exports (in pounds) were, 1930, 15,302,708; 1929, 29,145,842; 1928, 38,509,799; in value, coffee exports constitute from 45 to 65 per cent. of total exports. With the exception of bananas, plantains, and yucca or cassava, the greater part of the food supply of the eastern section is imported from the United States. The western half of the country produces much of its own food.

The forests contain mahogany and cedar, which were formerly largely exported, three varieties of rose-woods, guayacan (lignum vitæ), dye-woods, gums, and medicinal plants. Wild rubber is abundant in the virgin forests on the Atlantic water-shed, but there are very few rubber plantations owing to the labour shortage. Exports of dyewoods, 1930, 2,219,818 board feet.

There are several gold mines, worked by American and British companies, one having also silver. Exports of gold, 1930, 424,773 dollars. Copper and precious stones are also found.

Commerce.

The foreign trade of Nicaragua, in córdobas, was as follows in 5 years (1 córdoba = 1 U.S. dollar):—

—	1926	1927	1928	1929	1930
	Córdobas	Córdobas	Córdobas	Córdobas	Córdobas
Imports . .	10,254,512	10,208,242	13,850,431	11,797,440	8 172,360
Exports . .	13,028,726	9,025,677	11,693,212	10,872,526	8,843,358

The customs receipts in 1929 were 3,917,553 córdobas; in 1928, 4,146,066 córdobas.

In 1930 the value of the principal imports (in córdobas or dollars) was:—

Cotton goods, 1,297,938; iron and steel, 578,113; chemicals, drugs, and medicines, 352,567; flour, 388,057. The principal countries of import in 1930 were (values in dollars):—United States, 5,023,615 (61·5 per cent.); Great Britain, 798,599 (9·8 per cent.); and Germany, 736,281 (9 per cent.).

In 1930 the value of the principal exports (in córdobas or dollars) was:—Coffee, 3,792,217; bananas, 2,239,421; sugar, 366,416; timber, 534,797. The principal countries of export, in values exported (in córdobas or dollars), were: United States, 4,150,183; France, 1,128,279; Germany, 972,276; Holland, 623,224; and Great Britain, 290,067.

Total trade between Nicaragua and United Kingdom (Board of Trade Returns) for 5 years:—

—	1927	1928	1929	1930	1931
	£	£	£	£	£
Imports from Nicaragua to U.K.	153,998	73,625	81,080	104,614	213,353
Exports to Nicaragua from U.K.	255,742	250,071	263,582	145,709	107,607
Re-Exports to Nicaragua from U.K.	2,478	2,715	4,007	1,152	1,260

Shipping and Communications.

Western Nicaragua has two seaports, Corinto (the larger) and San Juan del Sur, through which pass approximately 80 per cent. of the imports and exports of the Republic. The eastern ports are Bluefields (the chief), Cabo Gracias, Puerto Cabezas, and San Juan del Norte (Greytown). In 1930, approximately 2,400 vessels entered and cleared the ports of Nicaragua.

Most of the roads of the country are mere tracks over which ox-carts alone can travel in the wet season, but highways have been or are being constructed between the following places: Managua-Matagalpa-Jinotega, 104 miles; León-Matagalpa, 80 miles; Puerto Diaz-Juigalpa-La Libertad, 50 miles; Masaya to Tipitapa, 25 miles. There is a fairly good road from Managua to Granada via Masaya, with a branch to Diriamba. There are 150 miles of motor roads and 200 miles of cart roads, but the east coast is practically shut off from the west coast.

The Pacific Railroad of Nicaragua, owned by the Government and the principal line in the republic, has a total length of 159 miles, all single-track. The line runs from Corinto to León, Managua, Granada, and Diriamba. An extension is under construction from León to El Sauce, about 55 miles; a line from San Jorge to San Juan del Sur in the district of Rivas was opened in 1930.

There are 2,819 miles of telegraph wire, and 100 offices; also 3,190 miles of telephone wire and 64 telephone stations serving 1,242 instruments. Telephone service is good along the line of the Pacific Railway, but unreliable elsewhere. There are 116 post offices, and good service between the chief towns of the western section, but service into the interior and to the east coast is irregular and inadequate. All-America Cable Co. connects with New York.

The Tropical Radio Telegraph Company maintains a powerful station at Managua, and branch stations at Bluefields and Cabo Gracias. Other companies maintain stations at Bragman's Bluff, El Gallo and Rio Grande.

Money and Banking.

Since 1912 the monetary unit has been the gold córdoba, equivalent to the American dollar, containing 1·672 gr. of gold nine-tenths fine, and divided into 100 equal parts. Banknotes based on the córdoba are issued by the National Bank of Nicaragua, which maintains deposits in New York equal to 60 per cent. of the circulation. Other gold coins provided for by law are 10, 5 and 2½ córdobas, but no gold coins have ever been struck. National banknotes, of which there were on August 31, 1931, 2,585,796 córdobas in circulation, form the great part of the currency; silver, nickel, and copper coins in circulation July 31, 1931, amounted to 419,362 córdobas. United States notes and silver also circulate.

The National Bank of Nicaragua at Managua was incorporated under the laws of the State of Connecticut; it is now owned by the Government and is the sole bank of issue. It has a capital of 300,000 dollars, and surplus, reserves and undivided profits (June 30, 1931) of 554,208 córdobas; on December 29, 1930, 130,000 córdobas were withdrawn from undivided profits to form part of the initial capital of the Mortgage Bank of Nicaragua. Assets on June 30, 1931 included 216,932 córdobas in cash and 1,261,692 due from foreign banks. It has branches at Bluefields, León and Granada. Other banks are the Anglo-South American Bank, Ltd., and the Anglo-Central American Commercial Bank, Ltd.

Since January 7, 1893, the metric system of weights and measures has been in use.

NORWAY.

(NORGE.)

Reigning King.

Haakon VII, born August 3, 1872; the second son, Carl, of Frederik VIII, King of Denmark, elected King of Norway by the Storting, November 18, 1905; accepted the crown through his grandfather, the late King Christian of Denmark, November 18, 1905; landed in Norway November 25, 1905; married, July 22, 1896, to Princess Maud, born November 26, 1869, the third daughter of the late Edward VII, King of Great Britain and Ireland.

Son.—Prince Olaf, Crown Prince, born July 2, 1903, married on March 21, 1929, to Princess Märtha of Sweden. Offspring: Princess Ragnhild Alexandra, born June 9, 1930; Princess Astrid Maud Ingeborg, born February 12, 1932.

According to the Constitution, Norway is a constitutional and hereditary monarchy. The royal succession is in direct male line in the order of primogeniture. In default of male heirs the King may propose a successor to the Storting, but this assembly has the right to nominate another, if it does not agree with the proposal.

By the Treaty of January 14, 1814, Norway was ceded to the King of Sweden by the King of Denmark, but the Norwegian people declared themselves independent and elected Prince Christian Frederick of Denmark as their King. The foreign Powers refused to recognise this election, and on August 14 a convention was made proclaiming the independence of Norway in union with Sweden. This was followed on November 4 by the election of Karl XIII. as King of Norway. Norway declared this union dissolved, June 7, 1905, and after some months' negotiation, a mutual agreement for the repeal of the union was signed, October 26, 1905. The throne of Norway was offered to a prince of the reigning house of Sweden, but declined, and, after a plébiscite, Prince Carl of Denmark was formally elected King. In November, 1907, a treaty guaranteeing the integrity of Norwegian territory was signed at Kristiania (Oslo) by the representatives of Norway, Great Britain, France, Germany, and Russia, and on January 8, 1908, received the unanimous approval of the Storting. The treaty was denounced January 8, 1924.

The following is a list of the Sovereigns of Norway since the year 1204, with the date of their accession.

Inge Baardsson . . . . .	1204	Erik af Pommern . . . . .	1389
Haakon Haakonsson . . . . .	1217	Kristofer af Bayern . . . . .	1442
Magnus Lagabøter . . . . .	1263	Karl Knutsson . . . . .	1449
Erik Magnusson . . . . .	1280	Same Sovereigns as in Denmark
Haakon V. Magnusson . . . . .	1299		1450-1814
Magnus Eriksson . . . . .	1319	Kristian Fredrik . . . . .	1814

The King has a civil list of 700,000 kroner, the Crown Prince 100,000 kroner.

Constitution and Government.

The Constitution of Norway, called the Grundlov, bears date May 17, 1814, with several modifications passed at various times. It vests the legislative power of the realm in the Storting, the representative of the sovereign people. Only the Storting can vote supplies and has the power of the purse. The royal veto may be exercised twice; but if the same Bill pass three Stortings formed by separate and subsequent elections, it becomes the law of the land without the assent of the sovereign. The King has the command of the land and sea forces, and makes all appointments, but except in a few cases, is not allowed to nominate any but Norwegians to public offices under the crown.

The Storting assembles every year. The meetings take place suo jure, and not by any writ from the King or the executive. They begin on the first weekday after January 10 each year, and the Storting remains assembled as long as it may find it necessary. Every Norwegian subject of twenty-three years of age (provided that he resides and has resided for five years in the country) is entitled to elect, unless he is disqualified from a special cause. Women are, since 1913, entitled to vote under the same conditions as men. The mode of election is direct, and the method of election is proportional. Every third year the people choose their representatives, the total number being 150. The country is divided into districts, each electing from three to eight representatives. Representatives must not be less than thirty years of age, must have resided in Norway for ten years, and be voters in the district from which they are chosen. Former members of the Cabinet can be elected representatives of any district of the Kingdom without regard to their residence.

At the elections for the Storting held in November, 1930, the following parties were elected for the period 1931–1933: Labour Party 47, Conservatives and Moderate Liberals 44, Liberals 34, Agricultural Party 25.

The Storting, when assembled, divides itself into two sections, the ‘Lagting’ and the ‘Odelsting.’ The former is composed of one-fourth of the members of the Storting, and the other of the remaining three-fourths. The Ting nominates its own presidents. Questions relating to laws must be considered by each section separately. The inspection of public accounts and the revision of the Government, and impeachment before the Rigsret, belong exclusively to the Odelsting. All other matters are settled by both sections in common sitting. The Storting elects five delegates, whose duty it is to revise the public accounts. All new laws must first be laid before the Odelsting, from which they pass into the Lagting to be either accepted or rejected. If the Odelsting and Lagting do not agree, the two sections assemble in common sitting to deliberate, and the final decision is given by a majority of two-thirds of the voters. The same majority is required for alterations of the Constitution. The Lagting and the ordinary members of the supreme court of justice (Höiesteret) form a High Court of the Realm (the Rigsret) for the impeachment and trial of Ministers, members of the Höiesteret, and members of the Storting. Every member of the Storting has a salary of six thousand kroner per annum, besides travelling expenses.

The executive is represented by the King, who exercises his authority through a Cabinet called a Council of State (Statsraad), composed of a Prime Minister or Minister of State (Statsminister), and at least seven ministers (Statsraader). The ministers are entitled to be present in the Storting and to take part in the discussions, but without a vote. The following are the members of the Cabinet, appointed May 12, 1931, and reconstituted on March 14, 1932.

Prime Minister and Minister of Agriculture.—Jens Hundseid.

Minister for Education and Ecclesiastical Affairs.—Dean Traedal.

II. LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

The administrative division of the country is into twenty districts, each governed by a chief executive functionary (Fylkesmann), viz., the town of Oslo and Bergen, and 18 Fylker (counties). There are 43 towns, 24 'Ladesteder' (ports), and 681 rural communes (Herreder), mostly parishes or sub-parishes (wards). The government of the Herred is vested in a body of representatives (from 12 to 48), and a council (Formannskap), elected by and from among the representatives, who are four times the number of the 'Formannskap.' The representatives elect conjointly every third year from among the 'Formannskap' a chairman and a deputy chairman. All the chairmen of the rural communes of a Fylke form with the Fylkesmann the Fylkesting (county diet), which meets yearly to settle the budget of the Fylke. The towns and the ports form 65 communes, also governed by a council (5 to 21), and representatives (four times the size of the council). The members of the local governing bodies are elected under the same conditions as those of the Storting. Since 1910 women are entitled to vote and to be elected, under the same conditions as men.

Religion and Education.

The evangelical Lutheran religion is the national Church and the only one endowed by the State. Its clergy are nominated by the King. All religions (except Jesuits) are tolerated. Ecclesiastically Norway is divided into 7 Bispedømmer (bishoprics), 91 Prostier (provostships or archdeaconries), and 517 Prestegjeld (clerical districts). In 1920 there were 71,062 dissenters, including 2,612 Roman Catholics, 11,455 Methodists, 7,214 Baptists, 464 Mormons, 73 Quakers. The Roman Catholics are under a Vicar Apostolic resident at Oslo.

Education is compulsory, the school age being from six and a half in towns and seven in the country to fourteen. In 1928-29 (the latest date for which there are statistics) there were in the country 5,823 public elementary schools with 301,820 pupils, and in towns 3,265 classes with 97,601 pupils; the amount expended on both being 65,979,000 kroner, of which 30,143,000 kroner were granted by the State, the rest being provided locally. The 13 normal schools (Teachers' Seminaries) had in 1929-30 no students. There were in 1928-29, 189 secondary schools—17 public, 92 communal, and 9 private entitled to give certificates and 71 private not having this right, with respectively 5,180, 16,067, 931, and 2,050 pupils in April, 1929. Most of the secondary schools are mixed. Norway has one University, viz. at Oslo (founded 1811), attended in 1930 by 3,476 students. There is a technical high school at Nidaros (Trondhjem), attended in 1930 by 703 students, one agricultural high school in Aas, with 102 students, a Teachers' Training College at Lade with 61 students, a military high school with no students in 1930, a dentist high school with 150 students, and the State academy of arts with 47 students. There are also several special schools, particularly continuation schools for young people between 15 and 18, and industrial, crafts, technical, and arts schools for both sexes.

There are 25 schools for defective children, deaf, blind, feeble-minded children with defect of speech, and crippled, also 10 reformatory schools for neglected children. The number of children in reformatories in 1928-29 was 359 boys and 120 girls; in the schools for defective children in 1929-30, 851 boys and 868 girls. There are, besides, 6 communal compulsory schools, established mainly for children neglecting the ordinary school (97 boys, 30 girls in 1928-29).

Norwegian is an independent language side by side with Danish and Swedish. As to the written language, there exist two idioms ('bokmaal' and 'landsmaal') and both may be officially used.

Justice and Crime.

For civil justice Norway is divided into 110 districts, each with an inferior court. There are 3 superior courts, having each one chief justice and two other justices, and one supreme court for the whole kingdom (Höiesteret), consisting of 1 president and 22 other justices. There is a court of mediation (Forlikssraad) in each town and Herred (district), consisting of three men chosen by the representatives (see above under Local Government), before which, as a rule, civil cases must first be brought.

According to the law of criminal procedure of July 1, 1887, all criminal cases (not military, or coming under the Rigsret—the court for impeachments) shall be tried either by jury (Lagmandsret), or by the lower court. The Lagmandsret consists of three judges and 10 jurors. The Kingdom is divided into 4 jury districts (Lagdømmer), each having its chief judge. Each district is divided into circuits, in which courts are held at fixed times. The lower courts consist of the judge and 2 assistant judges (not professional) summoned for each case. The Lagmandsret takes cognisance of the more serious classes of offences, and is also a court of appeal. The lower courts are for the trial of other offences as courts of first instance.

There are three convict prisons; inmates, June 30, 1931, 487 males and 17 females. There are 41 local prisons, in which were detained, June 30, 1930, 719 males and 52 females.

Pauperism.

The relief of the poor is mostly provided for by local taxation by the Communes. The number of persons receiving relief amounted to 110,100 in 1930.

Defence.

The most important fortresses of Norway are Oscarsborg, Tonsberg, Bergen, and Agdenes. (The fortress of Kristiansand is in reserve.) The old fortresses, Karljohansvaern, Akershus in Oslo, Bergenhus in Bergen, Munkholmen near Trondhjem, and Vardøyhus, are of no importance.

ARMY.

The army of Norway is a national militia. Service is universal and compulsory, liability commencing at the age of 18, and continuing till the age of 55. The men are called out at 21, and for the first 12 years belong to the line. Men from 18 to 21 and from 45 to 55 belong to the landstorm, which can be called out in a national emergency, and from 33 to 43 to the landvaern. The initial training is carried out in recruits' schools; it lasts for 60 days in the infantry and in the garrison artillery, 60 in the mountain artillery, 60 in the engineers, 90 days in the field artillery, and 90 in the cavalry. Further, the men have to go through 'regimentsamlinger' or other similar training courses lasting at least 48 days and carried out in two periods of 24 days each. These are to be served either in the 1st and 3rd or in the 2nd and 4th years of service. The strength of the permanent forces in 1931 was 893 officers and 4,838 other ranks; the numbers trained in that year were approximately 10,000.

The Norwegian infantry is armed with the Krag-Jørgensen rifle of 6·5 mm. The field artillery has Erhardt Q.F. guns of 7·5 cm.

The budget proposal for the army for 1931-32 is 27,066,400 kroner.

NAVY.

The principal vessels are:—

Laid down	Name	Displacement	Armour		Principal Armament	H.P.	Max. Speed
			Belt	Big Guns
1896	{Harald Haarfagre . . . . .}	3,900	7	8	2 8in.; 6 4·7in. . . . .	4,500	17
	{Tordenskjold . . . . .}
1899	{Norge . . . . .}	4,200	6	8	2 8in.; 6 6in. . . . .	5,200	17
	{Eidsvold . . . . .}

None of the above possesses any other than local value. The whole navy is designed for coast-defence duties.

There are also 3 destroyers, 3 first-class torpedo boats and 14 others, 9 submarines and 3 mine-layers. There are now about 36 seaplanes and 20 other planes.

The navy numbers about 700 officers, warrant officers and men, on the permanent establishment, and about 1,000 men conscripted annually. All seafaring men between the ages of 20 and 44 are enrolled on the lists of the active fleet, and are liable to the maritime conscription. The conscripts have to go through a training of at least 6 months.

The budget proposal for naval expenditure, 1931-32, amounted to 11,802,000 kroner.

Production and Industry.

I. AGRICULTURE.

Norway is a barren and mountainous country. The arable soil is found in comparatively narrow strips, gathered in deep and narrow valleys and around fjords and lakes. Large continuous tracts fit for cultivation do not exist. Of the total area, 72·2 per cent. is unproductive, 24·2 per cent. forest, and 3·6 per cent. under cultivation and other used soils.

The acreage and products of the principal crops for 3 years were as follows :

Crops	Acreage			Produce (quarters)
	1929	1930	1931	1929	1930	1931

In 1931 the country possessed live-stock as follows:—Horses, 176,823; cattle, 1,309,655; sheep, 1,692,406; goats, 344,352; swine, 317,343.

II. FORESTRY.

The forests are one of the chief natural sources of wealth. The total area covered with forests is estimated at 28,956 square miles, of which 70 per cent. is under pine trees. The State forests occupy about 4,100 square miles. The value of unwrought or partly wrought timber exported from Norway in 1929 and 1930 was respectively 39,639,300 and 32,767,000 kroner, and of wood pulp and paper 194,122,700 kroner in 1929 and 172,645,000 kroner in 1930.

III. MINERALS AND METALS.

Pyrites is the most important mineral product for both its sulphur and copper content. Iron-ore deposits occur in many places. The total value of mineral products in 1930 was 30,470,000 kroner.

The production and value of the chief ores, metals and alloys in 1930 are shown in the following table:—

Ores and Minerals	Tons	1,000 Kroner	Metals and Alloys	Tons	1,000 Kroner

IV. FISHERIES.

Fish and fish-products comprised in 1930, 25.9 per cent. of Norway's total export values. Value, 176,964,000 kroner. The number of persons in 1929 engaged in cod fishery was 74,180; in 1928, in summer-herring fishery, 30,791; and in mackerel fishery, 4,962.

The value of the sea fisheries (based on the prices paid at the fishing places) in kroner in 1929 was: Cod, 35,044,647; herring, 25,163,255; mackerel, 2,141,127; salmon and sea trout, 2,098,199; other fisheries, 23,286,943; lobsters, 1,171,564; total, 88,905,735.

Other fisheries are the whale, walrus, seal, and shark fisheries, which in 1929 produced a total of 111,312,000 kroner.

Whale-oil production: 615,000 barrels in 1925; 656,000 barrels in 1926; 689,000 barrels in 1927; 845,800 barrels in 1928; 1,210,000 barrels in 1929; and 1,796,000 barrels in 1930.

V. MANUFACTURES.

Industry is chiefly based on raw materials produced within the country (wood, fish, etc.), and on water power of which the country possesses an enormous amount. The pulp and paper industry, the canning industry and the electro-chemical and electro-metallurgical industries are the most important export manufactures. In the following table are given figures for all industrial establishments in 1929 occupying more than 5 workers. Electro-metallurgical, electrical plants, constructions and building industry excluded.

There is no Government paper money.

The 'Norges Bank' is a joint-stock bank, of which, however, a considerable part is owned by the State. The bank is, besides, governed by laws enacted by the State, and its directors are elected by the Storting except the president and vice-president of the head office, who are nominated by the King. It is the only bank in Norway that is authorised to issue bank notes for circulation. The balance-sheets of the bank for 1931 show the following figures at the end of the year—bullion, 118,100,000 kroner; gold abroad, 35,700,000 kroner; notes in circulation, 334,400,000 kroner (the issue of notes allowed was 368,100,000 kroner); deposits, 66,600,000 kroner; loans and discounts 255,800,000 kroner, balances held abroad, 15,800,000 kroner; foreign bonds, 6,100,000 kroner; domestic bonds, 31,700,000 kroner.

The 'Kongeriget Norges Hypothekbank' was established in 1852 by the State to meet the demand for loans on mortgage. The capital of the bank is mostly furnished by the State, and amounted to 63,000,000 kroner in 1930, and of reserve 3,881,000 kroner. At the end of 1930 the total amount of bonds issued was 478,063,000 kroner. The loans on mortgage amounted to 474,956,000 kroner.

The Norwegian 'Arbeiderbruk og Boligbank' was established in 1903 by the State to meet the demand for loans on mortgage from labourers and small proprietors. The capital of the bank is furnished by the State, and amounted to 7,200,000 kroner in 1930. On June 30, 1930, the total amount of bonds issued was 29,878,000 kroner. The loans on mortgage amounted to 27,584,000 kroner. This bank is in liquidation, its business is little by little being taken over by the 'Norske Stats Smaabruk og Boligbank,' which was established in 1917. Its capital amounted to 23,000,000 kroner in 1930; on June 30, 1930, the total amount of bonds issued was 114,651,000 kroner. The loans on mortgage amounted to 186,588,000 kroner.

Further, several private credit associations are authorised to meet the demand for loans on mortgage. In 1930, there were 6 such associations in operation. The total amount of bonds issued by these credit associations at the end of 1930 was 82,289,000 kroner, and the total amount of loans on mortgage was 79,485,000 kroner.

In the year 1922, Den Norske Stats Fisherbank (established by law 1919) started with the purpose of making loans to fishermen for fishing vessels and fishing outfits, etc. The capital of the bank is furnished by the State and amounted to 6,500,000 kroner in 1930. On June 30, 1930, the total amount of bonds issued was 10,340,000 kroner, and the total amount of loans was 6,870,000 kroner.

In the year 1926, the Norges Kommunalbank was established by law for the purpose of making loans to communities. The bank began its operations on September 1, 1927. On Dec. 31, 1930, the capital of the bank was 29,200,000 kroner, of which 25,893,000 were furnished by the State. The total amount of bonds issued was 132,500,000 kroner, and the total amount of loans was 122,634,000 kroner.

At the end of 1930, there were 151 private joint-stock banks reported, of which, however, 39 were in liquidation. The severe deflation period of 1921-23 caused several joint-stock banks to suspend their payments. In 1923, therefore, a new law was passed whereby banks in difficulties could continue their operations under administration by the State. The total amount of capital and funds possessed by joint-stock banks was 278,000,000 kroner (capital 201,400,000, funds 76,600,000), of which 276,700,000 kroner belonged to banks in free operation. Deposits amounted to 1,498,324,000 kroner, of which 132,018,000 kroner were deposits on demand, and 1,366,306,000 kroner deposits on time; 1,024,806,000 kroner of the total amount of deposits were deposited at banks in free operation.

The number of savings-banks at the end of 1930 was 627, of which 15 were in liquidation. The total amount of the funds of the savings-banks amounted to 196,357,000 kroner, and total deposits 2,234,355,000 kroner, of which 18,601,000 kroner were on demand, and 2,215,754,000 kroner on time. The number of depositors was 2,108,226.

As from January 1, 1925, all private joint-stock banks must be chartered by royal licence. Their operations are regulated, to a considerable extent, by the law, and controlled by the Ministry of Finance.

Money, Weights, and Measures.

By a treaty signed October 16, 1875, Norway adopted the same monetary system as Sweden and Denmark. The Norwegian krone, of 100 ore, is of the value of 1s. 1½d. at par, or about 18 kroner to the pound sterling. The gold 20-kroner piece weighs 8.960572 grammes, .900 fine containing 8.0645 grammes of fine gold. The standard of value is gold. National Bank notes of 5, 10, 50, 100, 500, and 1,000 kroner are legal means of payment, and the Bank is ordinarily bound to exchange them for gold on presentation.

The metric system of weights and measures is obligatory.

SPITZBERGEN, BEAR ISLAND, AND ADJACENT ISLANDS (SVALBARD).

An archipelago situated between 10° and 35° longitude east of Greenwich and between 74° and 81° latitude north. The distance from Norway to Bear Island is 240 miles, and to Spitzbergen (South Cape) 360 miles.

It is claimed that in all probability the archipelago was discovered by Norwegians in 1194 and re-discovered by the Dutch navigator Barents in 1596. The English explorer Henry Hudson visited Spitzbergen in 1607. In the 17th century a very lucrative whale-hunting was started and for some time there were Dutch, British, and Norwegian claims to sovereignty and quarrels about the hunting-places. But when in the 18th century the whale-hunting ended, the question of the sovereignty of Spitzbergen lost its actuality, and it was not until the beginning of this century that the question was again raised, owing to the discovery and exploitation of rich coalfields. It was settled by a Treaty, signed on February 9, 1920, at Paris, in which Norway's sovereignty over the archipelago was recognised. On August 14, 1925, the archipelago was officially taken possession of by Norway.

Total area about 24,294 square miles. The chief islands are West Spitzbergen or Mainland, North East Land (about half the former), Prince Charles Foreland, Edge Island, Barents Land, King Karl's Land, Hope Island, and Bear Island. The climate is essentially arctic, tempered by the Gulf Stream.

Coal is the principal product. There are six mining camps inhabited all the year round. The largest is Longyearbyen in Advent Bay, 550 inhabitants on December 1, 1930. In 1929, 239,719, in 1930, 195,530 tons of coal were exported.

JAN MAYEN ISLAND.

This is a bleak and desolate island between Greenland and Northern Norway, and about 300 miles north of Iceland. It is 34 miles long and its greatest breadth is 9 miles. It is of volcanic origin and is mountainous, Beerenberg in the north reaching a height of 8,350 ft. It is uninhabited, but is occasionally visited by seal hunters, whalers, and fishermen. In 1921 the Norwegian Meteorological Institute established a weather forecast station there, and the decision of the Norwegian Government to annex the island was largely due to this action.

The island was discovered by Henry Hudson in 1607, and it was first named Hudson's Tutches (Touches). It was again and again rediscovered and renamed. Its present name was taken from that of a Dutch navigator of the early 17th century, whose claim to have visited the island cannot be substantiated. For the period of a year (1882-83) an Austrian station for scientific observations was maintained there. On May 8, 1929, Jan Mayen Island was officially proclaimed as incorporated in the Norwegian State, and at the same time the manager of the meteorological station on the island was invested with magisterial authority. The final relation to Norway was settled by law of February 27, 1930. Norwegian sovereignty over the island has been officially recognised by the British Government.

BOUVET ISLAND.

This uninhabited island in the Southern Atlantic was discovered in 1739 by a Frenchman, Pierre Bouvet, but no flag was hoisted till, in 1825, Captain Norris raised the Union Jack. A neighbouring island, Thompson Island, has been reported but its existence is seriously doubted. In 1928 a diplomatic dispute arose between Great Britain as to the claim to Bouvet, particularly in connection with the occupation since December 1927, by a Norwegian whaling expedition, and the Norwegian decision to erect a wireless station on the island, and Great Britain decided in November 1928 to waive its claim. By law of February 27, 1930, it is stated that Bouvet Island belongs to Norway as a dependency.

PANAMA.

(REPÚBLICA DE PANAMA.)

Government.—Panama, formerly a department of the Republic of Colombia, asserted its independence on November 3, 1903, and the de facto Government was on November 13 recognised by the Government of the United States, and soon afterwards by the other Powers. In 1914 Colombia, in the Treaty of Bogota entered into with the United States, agreed to recognize the independence of Panama. This Treaty was ratified by the United States and Colombia in 1921. On May 8, 1924, a Protocol was signed at Washington by the Panama and Colombian Plenipotentiaries by which diplomatic relations between the two countries were established.

The Constitution, adopted February 13, 1904, and amended in 1918 and again in 1928, provides for a Chamber of Deputies of 46 members elected for four years (one for every 15,000 inhabitants), which meets biennially on September 1, and for a President of the Republic, elected by direct vote for 4 years, and not eligible for the succeeding term.

President of the Republic.—Dr. Ricardo J. Alfaro. Assumed office, January 15, 1931, after a revolution which overthrew the Government of President Arosemena.

There are three Vice-Presidents, chosen by the National Assembly, and a Cabinet of five Ministers.

A treaty for the demarcation of the boundary line between Panama and Costa Rica was signed on behalf of the respective Governments in 1910, and ratified by the congresses of both countries. By this treaty the question of what is the true boundary line was submitted to the arbitration of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, who gave his decision in 1914. Panama, however, refused to accept the award. The United States Government insisted upon the acceptance of the White Award, with the result that in September, 1921, the disputed region was occupied by Costa Rica. Panama, however, protested against the decision, and refused to recognize the occupation, as a result of which diplomatic relations between the two countries were broken off in 1921. On October 1, 1928, at the initiation of the Chilean Government, diplomatic relations between the two countries were resumed. The boundary dispute will probably be settled directly by negotiation.

Area and Population.—Extreme length is about 480 miles; breadth between 37 and 110 miles; coast line, 477 miles on the Atlantic and 767 on the Pacific; total area is 32,380 square miles; population according to the census of 1930 (excluding the Canal Zone), 467,459, of whom 52,000 were white, 86,000 Negroes, 33,500 Indians, 3,000 Orientals and 268,000 mestizos or mixed. There are approximately 40,000 British subjects in the Republic, chiefly coloured, from the West Indies. There are 9 provinces with populations (1930) as follows (the capitals in brackets):—Bocas del Toro (Bocas del Toro), 15,851; Coclé (Penonomé), 48,244; Colón (Colón), 57,161; Chiriquí (David), 76,918; Los Santos (Las Tablas), 41,218; Panama (Panama City), 114,103; and Veraguas (Santiago), 69,543; Herrera (Chitré), 31,030; Darien (La Palma), 13,391. The capital, Panama City, founded in 1518, on the Pacific coast, had (1930) 82,827 inhabitants, and Colón on the Atlantic coast (1930), 33,460. Smaller ports on the Pacific are Aguadulce, Pedregal, Montijo, Puerto Mutis, and Puerto Armuelles; on the Atlantic, Bocas del Toro, Portobello, and Mandinga.

Religion.—The religion of the country is Catholicism, but other denominations are represented and have a fair following. In the Canal Zone Protestantism chiefly prevails.

Education.—Elementary education is obligatory for all children from 7 to 15 years of age. The Government maintains 598 primary schools throughout the nine provinces and 57,592 children (excluding children enrolled in the Canal Zone public schools) received free instruction in 1929-30 from 1,688 teachers. Only 65 primary schools are in cities; the remaining 533 are in rural districts. The co-educational system has been adopted in all the schools of the Republic. Panama has a University (Instituto Nacional), with 626 students in 1930, a normal school for girls (576), and a school of arts and crafts or trades for boys from 14 years of age. Secondary, vocational and normal schools enrolled 2,175 students in 1929-30. In addition there are about 71 private institutions. Panama City is to be the site of the Bolivarian University, the formation of which was agreed upon in June 22, 1926, as an expression of Pan-American solidarity; it is to be supported by contributions from Colombia, Ecuador, Panama, Peru, and others.

Justice.—The laws were codified and promulgated in 1917 and 1918. These codes—civil, penal, commercial, judicial, administrative, fiscal, and mining—are designed to meet modern conditions, and replace the old Colombian laws formerly in use. The death penalty has been abolished. The Supreme Court consists of 5 justices appointed for 10 years.

Finance.—All the revenue collected on importations into the Republic belongs to the Panama Government, but the United States reserve the right to import supplies of all descriptions required for canal construction and for the use of their employees free of all taxes.

Expenditures and revenues are on a biennial basis, for two years ending June 30 through 1929-31, thereafter ending February 28. For recent years budget estimates have been as follows (1 balboa = 1 dollar U S):—

—	1923-25	1925-27	1927-29	1929-31	1931-33
	Balboas	Balboas	Balboas	Balboas	Balboas
Revenue . . .	16,475,400 <sup>1</sup>	12,258,700	14,302,488	17,031,908	19,961,353

The revenue includes an annual subsidy of 250,000 dollars from the United States so long as the latter maintains and operates the canal.

The Public Debt on June 30, 1930, amounted to 18,115,456 balboas or dollars. The foreign debt consists of bonds to the value of 15,936,000 dollars issued in the United States (about 2,000,000 dollars in Canada) for railway, road construction, and public works. The internal debt amounted to 2,179,456 dollars. Debt service in 1931-33 will take 3,840,000 dollars. Apart from these bonds, American direct investments (U.S. Department of Commerce) amounted to 28,709,000 dollars in 1931, chiefly in fruit plantations.

The Republic has no army or navy to support. The National Police Force numbers 60 officers and 630 men.

Production.—The soil of Panama is of great fertility. Of the whole area about five-eighths are unoccupied, and of the remainder only a small part is properly cultivated. Immigration of European settlers is encouraged, but, owing to the nature of the climate, this is not recommended. The most important product is bananas, the exports of which, chiefly to the United States, account for two-thirds of total exports; in 1930, 2,404,000 stems were exported. Other products are cocoa, coconuts, and ivory nuts. Caoutchouc (about 130 tons annually) is collected by the Indians of the Cordillera, or is obtained from trees planted by Europeans near the coast. Coffee (about 500,000 bushes) is grown in the province of Chiriqui, near the Costa Rican frontier. In the province of Coclé (Atlantic coast) there is one large agricultural undertaking, begun in 1894 with German capital. Here about 75,000 cocoa trees, 50,000 coffee bushes, and 25,000 caoutchouc trees have been planted and are now beginning to yield returns. Exports, 1930, 600,000 pounds. Other products of the soil of Panama are mahogany and other woods, copaiba, sarsaparilla and ipecacuanha. The country has great timber resources. Sugar (about 90,000 bags of 100 lbs. each produced annually) and tobacco growing are assuming importance. Cattle rearing (about 350,000 head in 1930) is carried on successfully, and hides form an important article of export.

Pearl fishing is carried on at the Pearl Islands in the Gulf of Panama. Turtle-shell is also exported to a considerable amount.

The country is believed to have considerable mineral resources; an English company, with a concession now covering 6,500 square miles, is prospecting for them, principally for gold, manganese, aluminium, coal, iron and asbestos; the company made its initial shipment of 20,287 ounces of gold to London in August, 1931.

Commerce, Shipping, Communications.—The imports and exports (excluding the Canal Zone) for 6 fiscal years ending June 30 are shown as follows (1 balboa = 1 dollar, U.S.) :—

Year	Imports	Exports	Year	Imports	Exports
	Balboas	Balboas		Balboas	Balboas
1924-25	14,605,962	3,530,800	1927-28	16,182,000	4,113,056
1925-26	14,289,000	3,438,936	1928-29	17,809,997	4,143,500
1926-27	14,516,000	3,785,660	1929-30	17,162,920	3,668,571

Of the total imports about 68 per cent. come from the United States (exclusive of canal materials) and 8 per cent. from Great Britain. The principal exports in 1929-30 were bananas (2,599,539 dollars), cacao (459,388 dollars), coconuts (260,064 dollars), hides, mother of pearl, ivory, nuts, gum, and tortoise shell.

The Isthmus on both sides is in communication with European and American countries by several lines of steamers. All the maritime traffic (international commerce) for Colón and Panama now runs through the Canal Zone ports of Cristobal and Balboa ; Bocas del Toro remains for the provincial trade. The Government (1930) appointed a commission to study the possibility of establishing free commercial zones, making Panama a general distribution centre for pan-American trade. The port of Puerto Armuelles, opened in 1928, provides an outlet for bananas from plantations in the neighbourhood. Shipping under Panamanian registry totalled (1928) 50 vessels of about 50,000 net tons.

The Panama Railroad, which connects Panama City on the Pacific with Colón on the Atlantic, is the principal railway in the country. It is 47·61 miles long and, with the exception of the termini at Panama and Colón, passes through Canal Zone territory. As there is no road across the Isthmus, and as most vessels unload their cargo at Cristobal (Colón), the greater portion of the merchandise destined for Panama City is brought by the Panama Railroad. In the Province of Chiriqui there is a narrow gauge railway, 32 miles long, connecting the port of Pedregal with Boquete, and passing through David, the capital. Between David and Concepcion there is a line 18 miles long, which has now been extended to the Port of Puerto Armuelles.

A central highway system from the capital, Panama City, west to the Costa Rican frontier is under construction ; the 315-mile section connecting Panama City with David, the capital of the Province of Chiriqui, was opened in March, 1931. Road building is handicapped by the extraordinary number of bridges required by the contour of the country.

Commercial aviation rapidly developed in Panama during 1929. Daily air service, in both directions, connects Colón and Panama, while air mail and passenger services exist between the Isthmus and countries of South, Central and North America.

There are telegraph cables from Panama to North American and South American ports, and from Colón to the United States and Europe. There are 189 Government telephone stations, 33 telegraph offices, and ten radio stations, seven of which are operated by the Navy Department of the United States.

Money and Credit.—In 1930, the old Panamanian silver currency to a value of approximately 272,000 dollars was withdrawn from circulation. A portion of these coins was used in minting new coins of half the weight and size of the old ones, but of twice the value. The present monetary unit is the Balboa which is of the same size and fineness as the United States silver dollar and is equivalent in value to that coin ; 200,000 of these coins were minted and placed in circulation in 1931. Other silver coins are the half-balboa (of 12·5 grammes ·900 fine, and equal to 50 cents., U.S.) ; the quarter and tenth of a balboa pieces ; and nickel coins of 5 and 2½ cents. There is no paper currency other than U.S. notes. Altogether 500,000 balboas of the new Panamanian silver currency have (1932) been placed in circulation.

Part of the 10,000,000 dollars (canal money) paid by the United States has been applied to the establishment of a real estate loan bank, part to public improvements in the several provinces, and 6,000,000 dollars have been invested in the United States, particularly in New York real estate.

English weights and measures are in general use as well as those of the metric system.

The Panama Canal and the Canal Zone.

On November 18, 1903, a treaty between the United States and Panama was signed, providing facilities for the construction and maintenance of the inter-oceanic Canal. In this treaty, Panama granted in perpetuity the use of a zone (Canal Zone) five miles wide on each side of the Canal route, and within this zone the exclusive control for police, judicial, sanitary and other purposes. For the needs of the Panama Canal other territory was ceded and, for defence, the coastline of the zone and the islands in Panama Bay were also ceded. The cities of Panama and Colón remain under the authority of Panama, but complete jurisdiction was granted to the United States in both the cities and in their harbours in all that relates to sanitation and quarantine. In return for these grants the United States paid 10,000,000 dollars and is paying 250,000 dollars yearly, beginning in 1913. The treaty was ratified on February 26, 1904, and in July, 1904, the agreement for the provisional delimitation of the boundaries of the United States territory on the Isthmus was signed. A treaty to cede further territory, particularly in Colón, to the Canal Zone, and to bind Panama to consider herself joint-belligerent with the United States in the event of war, was rejected by the National Assembly in 1927, but discussion of it has revived.

Governor of Canal Zone.—Colonel H. Burgess. Appointed October 16, 1928.

The area of the Canal Zone, including land and water, but not including the water area within the 3-mile limit from the Atlantic and Pacific ends, is 553·8 square miles. The area of Gatun Lake, when its surface is at its normal elevation of 85 feet above sea level, is 163·4 square miles.

The Canal has a summit elevation of 85 feet above the sea. It is 50·72 statute miles in length from deep water in the Caribbean Sea to deep water in the Pacific Ocean. The distance from deep water to the shore line in Limon Bay is about 5 miles, and from the Pacific shore line to deep water is about 5½ miles; hence the length of the Canal from shore to shore is approximately 40½ miles. The channel ranges in width from 300 to 1,000 feet. The average bottom width of the channel in this project is 649 feet, and the minimum width is 300 feet. The Canal has a minimum depth of 41 feet. The average time of passage through the Canal is from 7 to 8 hours. The record passage is 4 hours 10 minutes. The maximum traffic capacity of the Canal is estimated at 48 ships of usual size in a day or about 17,000 in a year.

The Gatun dam along the crest is 8,400 feet long, including the spillway, or over 1½ miles, and ½ mile wide at its greatest width. The crest of the dam is at an elevation of 105 feet above sea level, or 20 feet above the normal level of Gatun Lake, and 100 feet wide. The width of the dam at the normal water level of the lake, i.e., 85 feet above sea level, is about 388 feet. The length of the cut through the Continental divide (Culebra, now Gaillard Cut) is 8 statute miles. The minimum bottom width of the cut is 300 feet. The bottom is 40 feet above sea level, giving a normal depth of 45 feet.

The civil population of the Canal Zone in June, 1931, was 30,745, of whom 8,337 were Americans. Of this population, 2,702 Americans and 5,336 of other nationalities (chiefly British West Indian negroes) were employed by The Panama Canal and Railroad. The total force employed July 1, 1931, was 3,292 Americans and 11,181 coloured aliens, many of whom did not reside in the Canal Zone. No land in the Zone is privately owned and the Zone is, in effect, a Government owned reservation dedicated to the operation, maintenance and protection of the Canal and its appurtenances. However, building sites and agricultural lands are licensed to responsible companies and individuals.

The appropriations for the construction, operation and maintenance of the Canal to June 30, 1931, totalled 532,387,286 dollars, and the net revenues from tolls and other sources since it was opened to navigation have totalled 151,636,480 dollars. The current expenses of operation and maintenance, exclusive of depreciation and amortisations during the fiscal year 1930-31 were 9,150,670 dollars, and the gross Canal revenue was 24,990,581 dollars; gross business receipts, 17,774,467 dollars. Net profits, after fixed charges, were 7,060,494 dollars.

The Canal was informally opened to commerce by the passage of the 9,000 ton steamer Ancon on August 15, 1914, with specially invited guests. The journey was made without mishap in ten hours. It was formally opened to commerce by proclamation of the President of the United States on July 12, 1920. The Canal has been in use since 1914, except for various short periods in 1915, and from September 18, 1915, to April 15, 1916, when the channel was entirely blocked by slides in the banks of Gaillard Cut. There has been no interruption since January 11, 1917.

Particulars of the traffic through the Canal for the last 6 fiscal years are given as follows:—

Fiscal year ending June 30	Northbound (Pacific to Atlantic)		Southbound (Atlantic to Pacific)		Total		Tolls levied (in dollars)

Of the total number of commercial transits of the Canal during the year ended June 30, 1931, 2,417 were American, 1,390 British, 363 Norwegian, 369 German, 193 Japanese, 110 French, 111 Swedish, 125 Dutch, 120 Danish, and the remaining 331 of ten other nationalities. Total commercial transit, 5,529.

The postal address of the Canal administration is The Panama Canal, Balboa Heights, Canal Zone.

PARAGUAY.

(REPÚBLICA DEL PARAGUAY.)

Constitution and Government.

THE Republic of Paraguay gained its independence from Spanish rule in 1811, and after a short government by two consuls, the supreme power was seized, in 1815, by Dr. José Gaspar Rodríguez Francia, who exercised autocratic sway as dictator till his death, September 20, 1840. Subsequently, in 1844, a new Constitution was adopted providing for the election of a President. President Lopez, in 1864, began a dispute with the Government of Brazil, which resulted in the entry of a Brazilian army, united with forces of the Argentine Confederation and Uruguay, into the Republic, June, 1865. After a struggle of five years, in which Paraguay lost probably 500,000 men, Lopez was killed at Cerro Corá, March 1, 1870, in the last battle of the war.

The Constitution of 1870 provides for a Congress of two Houses, a Senate (now of 20 members) elected for six years (one-third every two years), and a Chamber of Deputies (now of 40), elected for four years (one-half every two years). Both are elected directly by the people, the former in the ratio of one representative per 3,000 to 12,000 inhabitants, and the latter one to 6,000 inhabitants, though in the case of the sparsely populated divisions a greater ratio is permitted. Voters are all males 18 years of age or older. A Permanent Committee of two senators and four deputies sits when Congress is not in session.

The President is elected for four years; he has a cabinet of five ministers, presiding over the departments of the Interior; of Finance; of Justice, Worship and Public Instruction; of War and Marine; and of Foreign Affairs. The President receives a salary of 30,000 pesos per month, and each of the ministers 15,000 pesos.

Provisional President of the Republic.—Dr. Emiliano González Navero. (Assumed office, as vice-president, on the deposing of President Guggiari on October 25, 1931.)

The country is divided into 2 sections: the 'Oriental,' east of Paraguay river, and the 'Occidental,' west of the same river. The Oriental section is divided into 12 departments, subdivided into 104 'partidos'; the Occidental section (the Chaco) is divided into 3 'comandancias militares.'

The 12 departments are: Concepción, San Pedro, Caragatatay, Villarrica, Yhú, Caazapa, Encarnación, San Ignacio, Quiyindy, Villeta, Paraguari and Pilar. The civil authority is exercised by a jefe político in each of the departments, who is subject to the control of Government delegados, or comisionados, 12 in number, among whom are included the military commanders of the five military zones. The capital, Asunción, forms a district subdivided into 'secciones policiales.'

Area and Population.

The approximate area of Paraguay proper or 'oriental section,' which is situated between the rivers Paraguay and Alto Paraná, is estimated at 159,834 square kilometres, or 61,647 square miles. An area officially stated to be 100,000 square miles in extent, lying between the rivers Paraguay and Pilcomayo, known as the Chaco, is claimed by Paraguay, whose rights, however, are disputed by Bolivia. Serious friction developed in December, 1928, and the two countries broke off diplomatic relations, which were not fully resumed until May, 1930, when a judicial body, chosen by the Pan-American Union, took up the dispute. Boundary with Brazil was determined by treaty in 1929.

In 1930 the total population was estimated at 851,564 (including 67,500 in the Chaco, of whom Indians are roughly estimated at 15,000), with a density of 5 per square mile. The population of Paraguay (oriental section) consists of people of mestizo (mixed white and Indian), Indian, and European (chiefly Spanish), blood, the latter largely predominating. There are practically no negroes in Paraguay. On December 31, 1930, the urban population of the capital, Asunción (founded 1537), was 90,003, or about one-sixth of the total population; including the surrounding district, it was 228,600 or nearly one-fourth; other towns, as estimated in 1926, are Villarrica, 26,000; Concepción, 11,000; Encarnación, 7,500; San Pedro, 8,700; Luque, 13,000; Carapeguá, 12,000; Paraguari, 10,000; Villa del Pilar, 6,000. These figures include the surrounding districts in each case, and are estimated.

Paraguayans are bi-lingual, speaking both Spanish and Guaraní, the language of the now extinct Guaraní Indians, who held the country at the time of the Spanish conquest.

Immigration from 1905 up to January, 1931, totals 16,784, including 3,000 Mennonite farmers from Canada, Russia and Poland. Most of the immigrants settle in the 27 state-aided colonies. Only 1,800 immigrants arrived in 1930. Very little land is now national property, most of it having been transferred to private ownership, much of it in very large tracts.

Religion, Education, and Justice.

The Roman Catholic Church is the established religion of the State, but the free exercise of other religions is permitted. The seat of the Paraguayan Archbishopric is Asunción. Roman Catholic and other religious marriage ceremonies are allowed, but the civil ceremony alone gives validity to a marriage.

Education is free and nominally compulsory, but schools are not everywhere available. In 1930 there were 766 Government primary schools with 108,222 pupils and 2,452 teachers; 44 private schools had (1929) 162 teachers and 4,651 pupils. Two National Colleges (i.e., high schools) at Asunción and Villarrica had (1930) 1,950 students. There is also a University which had in 1929, 435 students and 38 professors; complete autonomy in university affairs was granted in 1929 to a body including students, alumni and faculties. The 7 normal schools had 748 students, and the School of Commerce, 404 students.

Justice is administered by a Supreme Court, two courts of appeal (one for civil causes and another for commercial and criminal causes), a court of jurymen, 10 judges of First Instance, and (at the capital) 3 police magistrates. The functions of magistrates are exercised in the provinces by upwards of 100 jueces de paz (all laymen), who are at the same time registrars of births, deaths, and marriages.

Finance.

The estimated revenue and expenditure for six fiscal years, ending August 31, are given as follows (the gold peso, like the Argentine peso, equals 96·5 cents. (U.S.); roughly 5 gold pesos or 213 paper pesos = £1):—

Year	Revenue	Expenditure	Year	Revenue	Expenditure
	Gold pesos	Gold pesos		Gold pesos	Gold pesos
1925-26	5,340,204	5,844,809	1928-29	5,950,181	5,950,135
1926-27	6,108,888	6,108,753	1929-30	6,806,227	7,082,944
1927-28	5,187,469	5,147,668	1930-31	6,453,240	6,445,945

Internal revenue, 1929, amounted to 2,108,699 gold pesos (421,739*l.*); customs, 3,742,799 gold pesos (748,558*l.*).

On November 30, 1930, the external debt of Paraguay was 3,878,943 gold pesos; the consolidated internal debt was 3,130,902 gold pesos; the floating debt was 519,986 gold pesos. By an agreement reached September, 1924, Paraguay has resumed payment of interest on her sterling loan of 1871-72 (563,490*l.* in 1930), and of 4,315*l.* annually in reduction of the principal. Argentine investments in Paraguay are estimated at 30,000,000 dollars (U.S.), British investments (chiefly in railways) at from 3,000,000*l.* to 4,000,000*l.*, and American investments at 12,615,000 dollars.

Defence.

The small army of Paraguay is entrusted to a French military commission. Establishment (1928), 106 officers and 2,809 men, distributed at 5 centres. The permanent organisations comprise 4 regiments of infantry, 1 regiment of cavalry, and 2 batteries of artillery. In the event of war service is compulsory in the active army for 2 years between the ages of 18 and 20; between 20 and 29 in the reserve of active army; between 29 and 39 with national guard, and between 39 and 45 in the territorial guard. From 8,000 to 10,000 men were under arms during the imbroglio with Bolivia in 1929. The normal strength is about 3,000. The territory of the Republic is divided into 5 military zones.

The navy consists at present of a flotilla of 2 new armoured river gun-boats of 835 tons (built in Italy) and 3 small converted merchant vessels, river craft armed with modern guns. The largest of the latter is about 200 tons gross register. The budget expenditure on national defence in 1928-29 amounted to 67,891,000 paper pesos.

Production and Industry.

The soil of Paraguay is productive and the climatic conditions favourable to the cultivation of many sub-tropical products. Much of the country is admirably suited to pastoral purposes. It is estimated that there are about 4,000,000 head of cattle in the country. There are four packing plants, encouraged by the Government; hides, jerked beef, corned beef, and other animal products are exported. Yerba maté, or strong-flavoured Paraguay tea, which is a natural product of the virgin forests (covering from 25,000 to 30,000 square miles) as well as a plantation product, is one of the chief articles of export (6,268 metric tons in 1930). Tobacco is also grown (2,992 tons in 1930). Timber resources of excellent quality are enormous. Paraguay produces in the Chaco region quebracho logs, of which 1,017 tons were exported in 1930 and quebracho extract; exports, 41,325 tons in 1930. Fruit-growing, especially oranges, is general. Yaguaron is the chief source of petit-grain oil, distilled from the leaves of a bitter orange tree and used in the manufacture of many perfumes. It is exported chiefly to France and Germany. The total area devoted to sugar cultivation (largely for the manufacture of spirit) is about 35,000 acres; sugar production in 1930, 7,616,580 kilos.

There are 10 sugar factories in Paraguay, the most important of which is at Tebicuari. Some rice is grown—3,074 tons in 1929. Banana growing has started; in 1930 trees totalled 582,184. Roots (chiefly mandioca, sweet potatoes, and ground-nuts), &c., are grown for local consumption, but agriculture is primitive. About 87,450 acres are planted to maize; output about 64,000 tons. The cultivation of cotton of the American uplands type is encouraged by the authorities; it matures early and reaches the market when the American crop is scarce. Labour shortage is the main difficulty. In 1929-30 the acreage under cotton was 20,000 acres; production, 11,681,000 kilos; ginned cotton, 3,598 metric tons. Lace-making, of the 'spider-web' variety, is a thriving industry.

Iron, manganese, copper, and other minerals are encountered in abundance. The Ibicui iron mines were worked as early as 1863. The Quiquió and Ibicui manganese mines contain ore deposits estimated at 60,000,000 tons. Copper has also been found at San Miguel and Quiquió.

Commerce.

The following is the value, in gold pesos, of the imports and exports (5 gold pesos = £1):—

—	1926	1927	1928	1929	1930
	Gold pesos	Gold pesos	Gold pesos	Gold pesos	Gold pesos
Imports . . . . .	12,205,280	11,977,766	14,305,119	13,850,095	15,159,359
Exports . . . . .	15,497,504	14,282,040	15,886,208	13,459,766	14,176,453

The chief exports in 1930 were hides (326,063), corned beef (3,501 tons), meat extract (922 tons), yerba (6,263 tons), tobacco (2,955 tons), quebracho logs (1,017 metric tons), petit grain oil, the essential oil from the leaf of the bitter orange (81,564 kgs.), cotton (3,558 tons), and quebracho extract (41,325 tons). The most important imports are cotton and woollen textiles, wheat, flour, and petrol. Of the total exports in 1930, goods to the value of 12,940,376 gold pesos, or about 91 per cent. of the total, went to Argentina, whence goods to the value of 5,570,855 gold pesos were re-exported. Imports from Argentina, 1930, 4,360,267 gold pesos; United States, 2,410,294; British Empire, 2,070,149.

The trade between Paraguay and the United Kingdom (Board of Trade Returns) for 5 years:—

—	1927	1928	1929	1930	1931
	£	£	£	£	£
Imports from Paraguay to U.K. .	103,358	129,976	72,840	113,407	105,561

Re-exports to Paraguay from U.K.	1,972	8,345	1,960	2,655	994

Communications.

Asunción, the chief port, is 800 miles from the sea; the Paraguay river is navigable up to Villa Concepción for vessels of 12-foot draft. Smaller vessels navigate its 1,800 miles. In 1930, 3,054 vessels, with an aggregate tonnage of 364,755 tons, entered at the port of Asunción, and 3,028 with a tonnage of 340,249 cleared. The principal company engaged in the river service on the Paraguay and the Alto Paraná is the Argentine Navigation Company, Ltd., the controlling interest in which is British.

There is a British-owned railway (the Paraguay Central Railway) from Asunción to Encarnación, on the Rio Alto Paraná. This railway has a total main-track length of 232 miles. There is now a through train service without break of bulk from Asunción to Buenos Aires. El Ferrocarril del Norte, owned by a Paraguayan company, runs from Concepción as far as Horqueta, a distance of 33 miles. This road is projected to run as far as Pedro Juan Caballero on the Brazilian border. The Azucarera Paraguaya, in the Department of Ibytymi, has 15 miles of its line open to the public. Total length of railways, 659 miles. The country roads are in general mere bullock tracks, and transport is difficult. There is an air service to Europe from Asunción via Buenos Aires twice weekly, as well as to points in the interior.

There is a line of telegraph at the side of the railway. The national telegraph connects Asunción with Corrientes and Posadas in the Argentine Republic, and thus with the outside world. Asunción in 1931 established long-distance telephone communications with those cities. Wireless telegraph stations have been erected at Asunción, Concepción, and Paraguari. They are said to have a radius of 500 kilom. by day and 1,000 kilom. by night. Paraguay joined the postal union in 1881; the number of post offices is 154.

Money and Credit.

The unit of value is the gold peso, which is based on the Argentine gold peso; at par, it is equal to 96·5 cents. (U.S.). Actually there is no gold or silver current, and the paper peso, which is roughly equivalent to one English penny, is the only circulating medium with the exception of nickel coins which, in the shape of one peso, two pesos and fifty cents pieces, form a small part of the currency. One gold peso = 42·6 paper pesos. Business and governmental transactions are frequently stated in both gold and paper pesos. The total paper currency in circulation on December 31, 1930, was 206,249,966 paper pesos, guaranteed by Conversion Fund and deposits in other banks.

Since 1923, when finances were reorganized on the lines suggested by an American financial adviser, the State Bank's Exchange Office, with its separate capital of 1,000,000 gold pesos (Oficina de Cambios) has maintained the exchange at 18 75 Paraguayan paper pesos to the Argentine paper peso and 42·61 Paraguayan pesos to the Argentine gold peso.

The principal banks in Paraguay are a branch of the Bank of London and South America, Ltd.; the Banco Germanico de la America del Sud and the Banco Agrícola. The last mentioned is practically a department of the Government, charged with agricultural development. Some contraction in banking facilities is taking place; commercial banks which reported on December 31, 1930, combined capital and reserves of 1,019,481 gold pesos, had on March 31, 1931, capital and reserves of 940,063 gold pesos.

The metric system was officially adopted on January 1, 1901.

PERSIA.

(IRÂN.)

Reigning King (Shah).

ON October 31, 1925, the Majlis, 'in the name of the national welfare,' proclaimed the deposition of the Shah, Sultan Ahmad, and the overthrow of the Kajar dynasty. On December 13 the Constituent Assembly elected Riza Khan Pahlavi Shah of Persia, and made the Crown of Darius hereditary in his family. On December 15 the new Shah took the oath to defend the Constitution, and on December 16 he was publicly proclaimed. On Feb. 25, 1926, he appointed his eldest son, Shahpur Mohammed Riza, Valiahd (Crown Prince) of Persia. Riza Shah was crowned on April 25, 1926.

Constitution and Government.

The form of government in Persia up to the year 1906 was, in its most important features, similar to that of Turkey. The Shah, within the limitations imposed by the Moslem religion, was an absolute ruler, but had to reckon with the power of the leading doctors of law (Mujtahid), who resided at Najaf and Kerbela in Mesopotamia. Unlike the Sultan of Turkey he had no religious standing. In 1905, the Persian people demanded representative institutions, and in January, 1906, the Shah gave his consent to the establishment of a National Assembly, or 'Majlis,' which sat from October, 1906, to June, 1908, and drew up a 'Constitution' which received the Shah's approval on December 30, 1906. Each term of the Majlis lasts 2 years. The 8th Majlis was opened by the Shah on December 16, 1930.

The government of the country is in the hands of the Cabinet, composed as follows (March 1932):—

Prime Minister.—Mehdi Quli Khan Hedayat (Mokhber es Saltaneh).

Minister for Foreign Affairs.—Mirza Mohamed Ali Khan Farrughi (Zoka-ul-Mulk).

Minister of Interior.—Mirza Ali Khan Mansur.

Minister of Finance.—Mirza Seyed Hassan Khan Taqizadeh.

Minister of Roads and Communications—Seyed Bagher Khan Kazeml.

Minister of War.—Jaafar Gholi Khan Assad.

Minister of Justice.—Mirza Ali Akbar Khan Davar.

Minister of Education.—Yahya Khan Qaragozlou.

Minister of Post and Telegraphs.—Mirza Ghassem Khan Svr.

Ministry of National Economy (directed by three Directors General):—

Commerce.—Abdullah Khan Fessai.

Industry.—Seyed Mehdi Khan Farrukh.

Agriculture.—Ali Akber Khan Hakimi.

The country is divided into thirty-three provinces, which are governed by governors-general, who are directly responsible to the central Government. Governors-general and governors are generally called Hâkim, but the former usually have the title of Wâli. Each quarter of a town or parish, and every village, has a chief who is called Katkhuda. These officers are generally appointed by the governors, but sometimes elected by the citizens. The chiefs of nomad tribes are called Ilkhâni, Ilbegi, Wâli, Sirdâr, Sheikh.

Towns generally have a municipality, the director of which is nominated by the Central Government.

Area and Population.

Persia, which has an area of about 628,000 square miles, lies between 25° and 40° north latitude and between 44° and 63°30' east longitude. A vast portion of this area is an absolute desert, and the population is everywhere so scanty as to approximate, on the average, 16 inhabitants to the square mile.

The population is estimated at 10 millions, but all figures are largely conjectural. It is estimated that the country contains some three million nomads. Of these, 260,000 are Arabs, 720,000 Turks, 675,000 Kurds and Leks, 20,700 Baluchis and Gipsies, 234,000 Lurs. These figures, however, are merely round numbers, and estimates vary.

The principal cities of Persia are:—Teheran and district, with about 350,000 inhabitants; Tabriz, 180,000; Isfahan, 100,000; Meshed, 85,000; Resht, 80,000; Kerman, 30,000; Kermanshah, 40,000; Shiraz, 35,000; Yezd, 30,000; Barfurush, 30,000; Hamadan, 30,000; Kazvin, 30,000; Kum, 25,000; Sultanabad, 20,000; Kashan, 15,000; and Mohammerah, 10,000.

Religion.

Of the population about 7½ millions are Moslems of the Shi'a sect, and of that branch of it known as the Ithnd.'Ashariyya, who recognize twelve

Imâms or spiritual successors of the Prophet Mahomet; 850,000 are of the Sunnî sect; 10,000 are Parsîs (Gâbrs), 40,000 Jews, 50,000 Armenians, and 30,000 Nestorians; there are also many 'Bahais' and some Christians, whose number cannot, however, be estimated.

The Moslems of the sect called Shî'a differ to some extent in religious doctrine (especially in their rejection of the Sunna or traditional body of rules, as distinct from the actual text of the Koran), from the Moslems of the Turkish Empire, who are called Sunnî. The Persian priesthood (ulemâ) is very powerful. The highest authority, the chief priest of all, is the leading mujtahid, who resides at Najaf or Kerbela, near Baghdad, and some consider him the vicegerent of the Prophet, the representative of the Imâm. The Shah and the Government have no voice in the matter of appointing the mujtahids, but the Imâm-i-Jama, chief of the great mosque (Masjid-i-Jama) of a city, are appointed by Government. Under the Imâm-i-Jama are the pish namâz or khatib (leader of public prayers and reader of the Khutba, the Friday oration), the mu'azzin (crier for prayers), and sometimes the mutavali (guardian of the mosque); this latter, as well as the mu'azzin, need not necessarily be a priest. All mosques and shrines have some endowments (wakf), and out of the proceeds of these are provided the funds for the salaries of the priests attached to them. The shrines of some favourite saints are so richly endowed as to be able to keep an immense staff of priests, servants, and dependants.

The Gregorian National Armenians form two dioceses, each under a bishop, the one residing at Tabriz, and the other at Isfahan. There are also a few thousand Roman Catholic Armenians in Persia who have a bishop of their own rite at Isfahan, the bishop of the Latin rite residing at Urumia. There is a wide tolerance exercised towards Armenians and Nestorians, Jews, and Parsîs in cities where Europeans reside.

Education.

In recent years Public Instruction has made rapid strides; the old system of instruction, which was generally religious, has been practically entirely changed, and at present a tolerably adequate education can be obtained in general knowledge from native professors who have studied abroad, although, of course, the purely religious schools are still maintained in the Mosques, and the old 'Maktab'—street schools for the very young at which the mere rudiments of reading and writing are taught—still abound. In 1930 there were 127,000 children at school (18,170 girls); of these 25,000 attended Middle Schools and 4,600 High Schools.

The Government pays the whole budget of Government Schools and grants are paid to the public, private and foreign schools. Religious Schools are maintained from endowments. During 1929-30 more schools were opened and the total budget of the Ministry of Education for 1930-31 was 22,238,750 krans, of which 3,000,000 krans was set aside for students in Europe and 250,000 krans for the education of children amongst the tribes.

The Foreign Schools are maintained by funds from abroad supplied by The American Presbyterian Mission, The Church Missionary Society, The Alliance Israélite, and The French Roman Catholics Mission, and there are also schools run by the German and Russian Governments; all the above have schools for boys and for girls.

15 Professors for Secondary Schools have been engaged from France. Two new schools have been opened in Teheran. Teachers are now being trained in the Central University for Secondary Schools. The course of study in the School of Medicine has been extended by one year, and two French Professors have been engaged for that school. The course of study in the School of Law and Political Science is now four years, and four European Professors are engaged here. Moreover, 1,960 students have been sent to Europe to complete their studies at government expense and 100 will go every year.

Justice.

The judicial system of Persia is modelled on that of France. There are justices of the peace in villages and small towns, higher courts in the larger towns, police magistrates in all important places, courts of appeal in Teheran, Tabriz, Shiraz, Hamadan, Ispahan and Meshed, and a court of cassation, or supreme court, in Teheran. The courts are supervised by the Ministry of Justice. New Civil, Criminal and Commercial codes based on French and Swiss codes have been introduced into the Courts of Justice.

There are in most towns of Persia police magistrates, and in big towns tribunals which deal with cases coming within the sphere of public and criminal laws. There is a High Court of Appeal in Teheran which is similar to the Cour de Cassation in France.

Finance.

The most productive items of revenue in order of importance are Customs Receipts, Anglo Persian Oil Co. royalties, Sugar and Tea monopoly, and Land Tax and Road Tax. The incidence of taxation, which is mainly indirect, weighs most heavily on the labouring classes.

Approximate gross Customs receipts for three years were:—1927–28, £1,835,205; 1928–29, £2,325,565 and 1929–30, £2,119,917.

The budget estimates for 1931–32 are:—revenue, 321,759,399 krans and 859,000 pahlavis exclusive of the royalty of the Anglo-Persian Oil Co.; expenditure, 321,753,678 krans and 858,663 pahlavis. The royalties from the Anglo-Persian Oil Co. are deposited in London and regarded as a treasury reserve. According to the Persian Ministry of Finance, this fund amounted to 1,814,000*l.* on March 20, 1930.

On March 20, 1930, the recognised foreign debts of Persia were:—

Loans	Original Amount		Outstanding
	£	s. d.	£	s. d.
1911 Loan . . . . .	1,250,000	0 4	1,124,414	18 3
British Advances 1912–14 . . . . .	490,000	0 0	490,000	0 0

The debt incurred to Great Britain during and immediately after the war, which has been placed at 2,000,000*l.*, has not yet been funded. The total floating debt at the same date was 25,351,786 krans.

Defence.

The army consists of 40,000 men, exclusive of the Amniah (Gendarmerie). The latter number 8,000 and are used for the surveillance of roads and other armed police duties.

The army, air force and navy cost some 2,000,000*l.* annually. The organisation is a Central Garrison at Tehran, numbering some 12,000 men, two weak divisions based on Tabriz and Meshed, and nine independent brigades, of varying strength, based on Khureemabad, Senneh, Ahwaz, Kermanshah, Asterabad, Resht, Shiraz, Isfahan and Kerman.

The army has recently been re-armed and equipped at a cost of about 1,000,000*l.* with material bought in Czechoslovakia.

Military service became compulsory under the Conscription Act passed in 1924. This Law is now being generally enforced, except in certain tribal areas, and the supply of conscripts exceeds the numbers required.

The air force has seven or eight serviceable aircraft and about the same number capable of short flights only. The aircraft are of several types, chiefly De Havilland pattern aeroplanes manufactured in Russia with Liberty engines.

The navy is quite unimportant, most of its units being nominally maintained for customs purposes. There are 9 motor gunboats, built in Italy 1930-31, and three older gunboats. The Italian Government has lent the services of 2 naval officers as advisers, and Persian naval cadets are being trained in Italy.

Production and Industry.

Persia produces oil, wool, drugs, fruits, gums, rice, cotton, barley, wheat, &c.; attention is being paid to the silk industry. Production in 1928 was estimated as follows (in tons):—rice, 590,000; cotton, 45,000; tobacco, 26,000; wool, 15,000. The wool of Khurasan is famous. Persian carpets, of which there are many kinds, are all made by hand. The principal centres of the industry are Tabriz, Hamadan, Sultanabad, and Kerman.

The mineral deposits of Persia are considerable but undeveloped. They include iron, coal, copper, lead, manganese, marble, borax, nickel, and cobalt. Oil is being developed with much success. The turquoise mines of Nishapur are worked in a most primitive fashion but with profit, as also are the iron oxide and rock salt in the Persian Gulf.

The production of the Anglo-Persian Oil Company, which holds a concession for the whole of the country except the five northern provinces, was: 1926-27, 5,107,081 tons; 1927-28, 5,357,800 tons; 1928 (9 months), 4,289,733 tons; 1929 (12 months), 5,710,000 tons.

Commerce.

On February 25, 1931, the Government established a monopoly of foreign trade, operating through a system of Government permits.

The principal centres of commerce are Tabriz, Teheran, Hamadan, Meshed, and Isfahan; the principal ports, Bandar Abbas, Mohamerah, and Bushire on the Persian Gulf, and Astara, Enzeli, Meshed-i-sar, and Bandar Gaz on the Caspian.

According to the statistics published by the Minister of Finance the values of the imports and exports for six years were as follows:—

Banking and Credit.

The Shah in 1889 granted a concession to Baron Julius de Reuter for the formation of a State Bank of Persia, with head office at Teheran and branches in the chief cities. The bank was formed in the autumn of the same year, with the title 'The Imperial Bank of Persia,' and incorporated by Royal Charter, dated September 2, 1889. The bank has recently conceded its sole right of note issue to the Persian Government. There is also established at Teheran the Russian 'Banque d'Escompte,' formerly 'Banque des Prêts de Perse.' This Bank, with all its Concessions, was in March, 1921, handed over to the Persian Government by the Soviet authorities, and is now 'The Bank of Iran,' and forms part of the Ministry of Finance. The Ottoman Bank has also established branches in Teheran, Hamadan, and Kermanshah. Latterly the Russians started a bank, under the auspices of the Soviet Government, which has branches in both the northern and southern provinces. A Government Pawnbroking Establishment was founded in January, 1927, and a 'National Bank' in September, 1928. During the year 1929, the National Bank of which Dr. F. Lindenblatt, a German, is director, opened branches in all the chief provincial towns. There is also the Bank-i-Pahlevi with branches in the important towns in the north.

Communications.

Tonnage entered at Bushire, Lingah, Bandar Abbas, Mohammera, and several smaller ports was: in 1929-30, 7,828,699 tons, of which 6,512,975 were British and 263,434 German; the Persian total was 167,529 tons; at Caspian ports 697,267 tons, of which 572,099 (steam) were Russian and 5,634 (steam) Persian, and 50,211 tons (sail) Russian, and 69,323 tons (sail) Persian. The total number of vessels entered and cleared at Persian ports in 1929-30 was 16,319 compared with 16,533 in 1928-29.

During recent years the opening up of Persia by further road construction has been the policy of the Central Government. Whilst a good road, according to European standards, does not exist in Persia, except in the Anglo-Persian Oil Co.'s area, roads passable for motor traffic are general throughout the country. The traveller, however, has still much discomfort to contend with.

Taking Teheran, the capital, as the centre, the following main routes are available for all forms of motor traffic:—(i) Teheran to the Caspian Sea (Port Pahlevi) via Kasvin and Resht; (ii) Teheran to Tabriz; (iii) Teheran to Baghdad via Kasvin, Hamadan and Kermanshah; (iv) Teheran to Basra via Sultanabad, Burujird-Khurrumabad-Dizful-Ahwaz and Mohammerah; (v) Teheran to Bushire via Isfahan and Shiraz; (vi) Teheran to Bander Abbas via Isfahan and Kerman; (vii) Teheran to Meshed; (viii) Teheran to the Caspian Sea (Port Barder-i-Gaz) via Barfarush; (ix) Teheran to Duzdap (rail head for India via Quetta). Two routes: (a) via Meshed; (b) via Kerman. Several subsidiary roads exist, the most important being:—(i) The coastal road on the southern shore of the Caspian Sea from Port Pahlevi to Port Barder-i-Gaz; (ii) Hamadan to Isfahan via Sultanabad; (iii) Kermanshah to Burujird; (iv) Shiraz to Kerman via Niriz; and (v) Meshed to Askabad. A road is under construction to connect Tabriz with Nisibin via Rowanduz. Several of the above roads are blocked by snow for 3 or 4 days at a time between December 15 and April 1.

Total length of railways 231 miles, plus 80 miles at the northern end of the projected trunk line (see below), as follows:—Tabriz-Julfa, 85 miles; Sofian-Sharifkhareh, 30 miles; Mirjawa-Duzdap, 104 miles; Resht-Pir i Bazaar, 7 miles; and Teheran-Shah Abdul Azim, 5 miles. A new railway line, 910 miles in length, was contracted for in July, 1928. It will run from Khormusa, on the Persian Gulf, through Ahwaz, Dizful, Burujird, Hamadan, Kazvin, Teheran, Firuzkuh and thence to the Caspian Sea at Randar Shah. So far some 156 miles have been almost completed in the south by a German-American syndicate, while 80 miles in the north are already open to traffic, the Persian Government have now decided to complete the line themselves.

is served by some five tugs and 15 barges for the transport of goods and passengers. There is a weekly service. On the River Karun likewise, from Mohammerah to Ahwaz (Nasseri), a fortnightly service both ways is run by the Mesopotamia Persia Corp., Ltd., and some native firms, run daily trips by motor boat, for passengers and merchandise. By changing into lighter draught boats at Nasseri both can be taken up to Shallili near Shushtar.

The Junkers Company have a contract for civil air lines in Persia carrying mails and passengers. A weekly service is maintained between Teheran and Port Pahlavi on the Caspian which connects with a Russian air line to Moscow, and between Teheran and Bushire; between Teheran and Baghdad there is a bi-weekly service which connects with Imperial Airways.

The telegraph system attains a length of 7,964 miles with 13,829 miles of wire. In virtue of several conventions, dating from 1863, between the British and Persian Governments, the Indian Government constructed, and until March, 1931, maintained and worked with its own staffs: the Indo-European Telegraph Department line from Teheran-Kum-Kashan-Isfahan-Shiraz to Bushire, and thence to Fao and also Karachi; this line is 669 miles in length with 2,292 miles of wire and 7 stations; and the Central Persia Telegraphs from Teheran via Kashan-Yezd-Kerman-Bam to the Beluchistan frontier and thence to India with a mileage of 1,467 line and 4,183 wire and 10 stations. The Indo-European Telegraph Co. maintained communication between Teheran and Tabriz and on to Julfa, which connects with the European systems. Number of telegrams in 1929, 735,737 internal, 104,559 foreign.

The Indo-European Telegraph Company, as well as the Indo-European Telegraph Department, relinquished all their telegraph lines in Persia on February 28, 1931; thenceforward all these lines came under the direct control of the Persian Telegraph Administration with the exception of the land-line between Jaok and the Indian frontier near Gwadur, which is exploited by the Imperial and International Communications Company.

Wireless has been installed at Teheran, Tabriz, Meshed, Kermanshah, and Shiraz, and wireless stations are being completed in Kerman and Ahwaz. Teheran is in wireless communication with Europe via Tiflis and Beyrout.

The telephone system throughout the greater part of Persia is leased to the "Société Anonyme des Téléphones Persans." There are a number of small private companies as well.

In 1929, 6,199,800 letters and 256,700 post-cards were handled in the internal service; in the foreign service, 1,518,400 letters and 22,600 post-cards were received, and 1,197,400 letters and 124,200 post-cards despatched.

Money, Weights, and Measures.

Persia had a silver monetary standard, the unit of which was the kran, a silver coin weighing only 24 nakhods (71 grains) or somewhat less.

Accounts are reckoned in dinârs, an imaginary coin, the ten-thousandth part of a toman of ten krans. A krân therefore = 1,000 dinârs; one shâhî = 50 dinârs.

A law was passed on March 18, 1930, making the new standard of value the gold rial, containing 100 dinars. The new money will be: gold, 1 pahlavi, equivalent of an English £1 and worth 20 rials; and one-half pahlavi worth 10 rials; silver, 5, 2, 1,  $\frac{1}{2}$  rial pieces; nickel, 25, 10, 5 dinar pieces; copper, 2 and 1 dinar pieces. The rial is to be equivalent to 0.3661191 grammes of fine gold and will contain 4.5 grammes of pure silver. The pahlavi will contain 7·322382 grammes, 900 fine. The new coins are expected to be put into circulation in the spring of 1932.

The unit of weight is the miskâl (71·6 grains), subdivided into 24 nakhods (2·96 grains) of 4 gandum (·74 grain) each. Sixteen miskâls make a sir, and 40 sir=1 batman (Tabriz). Most articles are bought and sold by a weight called batman or man. The mans most frequently in use are :—

Man-i-Tabriz = 8 Abbâst	.	.	.	= 640 Miskâls	= 6·5464 lb.
Man-i-Noh Abbâst = 9 Abbâst	.	.	.	= 720	" = 7·30 "
Man-i-Kohne (the old man)	.	.	.	= 1,000	" = 10·14 "
Man-i-Shâh = 2 Tabriz Mans	.	.	.	= 1,280	" = 12·98 "
Man-i-Rey = 4 Tabriz Mans	.	.	.	= 2,560	" = 25·96 "
Man-i-Bandar Abbâst	.	.	.	= 840	" = 8·52 "
Man-i-Hâshemi = 16 Mans of	.	.	.	720	" = 116·80 "
Corn, straw, coal, &c., are sold by Kharvâr = 100 Tabriz Mans = 654·64 " 3½ Kharvâr = 1963 92 lbs. = 1 short ton (very nearly).

By a decree of the Persian Council of Ministers in February, 1929, the metric system was to be introduced as from March 22, 1929, but its introduction has been deferred.

The unit of measure is the zar or gaz ; of this standard several are in use. The most common is the one of 40·95 inches ; another, used in Azerbaijan, equals 44·09 inches. A farsakh theoretically = 6,000 zar of 40·95 inches = 3·87 miles. Some calculate the farsakh at 6,000 zar of 44·09 inches = 4·17 miles. It is about 3½ miles in South Persia and about 4 miles in the North.

The measure of surface is jerib = 1,000 to 1,066 square zar of 40·95 inches = 1,294 to 1,379 square yards.

PERU.

(REPUBLICA DEL PERÚ.)

Constitution and Government.

THE Republic of Peru, formerly the most important of the Spanish Viceroyalties in South America, issued its declaration of independence on July 28, 1821; but it was not till after a war, protracted till 1824, that the country gained its actual freedom from Spanish rule. According to the Constitution of January 18, 1920, the legislative power is vested in a Senate (35 members) and a House of Representatives (110 members), and renewed totally every five years. Both senators and deputies are elected by a direct vote. Congress normally meets annually on July 28, and sits for 90 to 120 days; a new Congress was elected October 11, 1931 to re-cast the Constitution. Voters are males, at least 21 years old, who are able to read and write.

The executive power, is entrusted to a President, elected for 5 years and eligible for re-election indefinitely (under a change in the constitution authorized in 1927). He receives 30,000 soles (nominally 3,000*l.*) a year.

President.—Colonel Luiz M. Sanchez Cerro. Elected October 11, 1931.

The President exercises his executive functions through a Cabinet of seven ministers, holding office at his pleasure. The ministers are those of the Interior, War, Marine, Foreign Affairs, Justice, with Worship and Instruction, Finance and Public Works. Each minister receives 16,800 soles (1,680*l.*) a year.

The 20 departments are divided into provinces (113 in all), and these are subdivided into 873 districts. Each department is administered by a Prefect, and each province by a Sub-Prefect. Municipal councillors are elected by direct vote, and foreigners are eligible.

Area and Population.

There has been no enumeration of the population in recent years. The census returns of 1862 showed a total population of 2,487,916; that of 1876 put the number at 2,699,106, of whom about 13·8 per cent. were white, 1·9 per cent. negroes, 57·6 per cent. Indian, 24·8 per cent. mestizos (Cholos and Zambos), and 1·9 per cent. Asiatic, chiefly Chinese. It is estimated (1930) that the population exceeds 4,500,000 of which 600,000 are white. The language is Spanish, but the Indian population has its own language, either Quechua or Aymara.

To promote the assimilation of the Indian population, estimated at 4,000,000, the Government in 1930 declared June 24 of each year to be a national holiday, 'day of the indigene,' to be celebrated with appropriate ceremonies. By a decree issued in 1927, the Indians were freed from the peonage system which existed in some regions.

The population of the capital, Lima, according to the official census of December 17, 1920, was 176,467 and of Callao 52,843. The estimated population in 1928 of the principal cities was as follows: Lima city 265,000; Lima and suburbs 316,000; Callao 77,000; Arequipa 65,000; Cuzco 40,000; Chiclayo 35,000; Ica 20,000; Trujillo 30,000; Chincha 20,000; Huancayo 20,000; Ayacucho 20,000; Iquitos 10,000; Huaráz 20,000; Piura 15,000.

The areas of the 20 departments and 3 provinces (Callao, Tumbes and Moquegua), according to estimates supplied by the Lima Geographical Society (1915), are given below with the population, according to the census returns of 1876 (the latest official one) and an official estimate for 1927. <sup>1</sup> Created in 1912.

The Peruvian Government encourages immigration of properly qualified persons and has opened up 3,246,325 acres to settlers, mostly through colonization companies; efforts, however, to encourage immigration of Europeans, including Germans, Austrians, Poles and Cossacks, have been only partially successful.

The long standing dispute with Chile over the provinces of Tacna and Arica (see STATESMAN'S YEAR BOOK for 1928, page 1198) reached an amicable stage in July, 1928, when the two countries resumed diplomatic relations and made a fresh attempt to settle the question by direct and friendly negotiations. On February 21, 1929, it was announced that a settlement had been reached, Tacna going to Peru and Arica to Chile. Demarcation and joint policing of the boundary were accomplished in August, 1930.

As to the boundary dispute with Bolivia an arrangement has been come to by direct negotiations between Bolivia and Peru. The frontier line between them was fixed from the mouth of the Heath to that of the Yaverija (1912), and is being finally demarcated by a joint commission. Those with Colombia and Ecuador (for the possession of over 100,000 square miles of land rich in rubber, timber, and probably gold, lying about the head waters of the Amazon) were referred to the mediation of the United States, Argentina, and Brazil. Direct negotiations may possibly be initiated between Peru and Ecuador. A Treaty establishing the boundary between Peru and Colombia was ratified by the former in 1927, and by Colombia in 1928. A definite arrangement has been made with Brazil as to boundary, favourable, on the whole, to Peru, and this was finally demarcated in 1927 by a joint commission.

The region north of the Marañon from the Pongo de Manseriche is claimed by Ecuador, Colombia and Peru.

Religion.

By the terms of the new Constitution there exists absolute political and religious liberty, but the Roman Catholic religion is the religion of the State, and in 1929, a decree was issued permitting only Roman Catholic religious instruction in schools, State or private. There is a Roman Catholic archbishopric (Lima, dating from 1545), 9 bishoprics, 2 Apostolic Vicarages, 2 Apostolic Prefectures, and about 2,048 priests. The churches and convents are the property of the State. The Junta of Government in October, 1930, decreed that all marriages must be civil, regardless of religion and preceded by medical examination; liberal divorce regulations, including divorce for 'absence without just cause for 50 days,' were also established. Divorcees may re-marry immediately.

Education and Justice.

Elementary education is compulsory for both sexes between the ages of 7 and 14, and is free. The system is highly centralized; all teaching appointments are made by the Ministry of Education. In 1930, there were in Peru 3,562 primary schools with about 6,200 teachers and 317,000 pupils; 36 secondary schools (excluding private schools under supervision) with 697 teachers and 11,826 pupils and 4 normal schools, with a registration of 1,610. Budget appropriations for education in 1929, Lp. 1,140,811. Special schools for the Indians enroll about 1,780. There are also 30 travelling schools. Higher education is provided at the central university in Lima, called 'Universidad de San Marcos,' founded by Charles V. in 1551; its autonomy, previously limited in 1928, was restored by the Junta in 1930; it had in 1929, 169 professors and 1,531 students in five faculties and two institutes. There are also universities at Arequipa (founded in 1827), with (1930) 366 students, Cuzco with 106 students, and Trujillo, 99 students; the Education Law of February 5, 1921, created the University of Technical Schools, which comprises advanced schools of engineering, agriculture, commerce, industrial arts, and a school of pedagogy. There are also State Colleges of Agriculture, Arts and Trades, and Engineering in Lima.

Justice is administered in the Supreme Court at Lima composed of 11 judges and 3 fiscals, and in Superior and Minor Courts at Lima and 12 other judicial districts. The judges of the Supreme Court are chosen by Congress from lists of names presented by the Government; those of the Superior Courts and of the Minor Courts are chosen by the Government from lists of names presented by the Supreme and Superior Courts, respectively.

Finance.

The revenue and expenditure for 5 years were as follows in soles (10 soles = the old Peruvian pound; 1 sol = 28 cents. U.S.):—

—	1928	1929	1930	1931	1932 <sup>1</sup>
	Soles	Soles	Soles	Soles	Soles
Revenue . . .	121,981,080	140,358,320	117,888,192	93,912,016	96,296,283
Expenditure . . .	120,611,640	140,204,550	129,672,755	104,111,961	96,296,283

For account of the old foreign debt of Peru and the arrangements reached regarding it with the Peruvian Corporation, see THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK for 1931, p. 1183.

The total debt of Peru (December 31, 1930) amounted to 401,628,181 soles, of which the internal debt amounted to 134,541,121 soles, and the foreign debt to 267,087,060 soles (at par). The latter included 9,000,000 dollars (U.S.) and 3,500,000*l.* sterling, at par, and is calculated at the old par value of the sol, 40 cents., U.S. External debt service in 1930 took Lp. 1,449,780, of which guano exploitation, railroads and docks furnished 85 per cent.; internal debt service took Lp. 354,919. But in May, 1931, Peru suspended payments on external debt until economic conditions improve. British investments (1930) amounted to 26,828,300L. of which about 75 per cent. (20,209,400L.) was represented by the Peruvian Corporation. American investments total 200,000,000 dollars of which (1931) holdings of Government bonds represented 75,000,000 dollars and direct interest in railways and industries represented 124,742,000 dollars.

Defence.

ARMY.

Military service is compulsory and universal, though only a limited number of the annual quota of conscripts is called up for active duty with the colours, the remainder being formed into local battalions, who receive instruction one day in the week (Sundays). The term of service is 2 years in the active army, 5 years in the first reserve, 5 in the second reserve, and 20 years in the National Guard.

The country is divided into 5 military districts, each furnishing a complete division. The division is made up of 2 regiments of infantry of 2 battalions each, with 1 machine gun company; 1 topographical section, 1 medical section, 1 commissariat section, 1 or 2 regiments of cavalry (2 squadrons), 1 regiment of mountain artillery.

The army at present is organized as follows: of infantry there are 20 regiments, of artillery 5 regiments, 5 mounted infantry companies, 5 battalions of engineers, 1 aviation squadron, and an independent commissariat corps.

The peace establishment of the army in 1929 was 1,118 officers and 7,020 other ranks. Police and gendarmerie amount also to about 8,000 including civil guards and mounted police. The civil guard has been reorganised into 11 cavalry regiments, 1 infantry regiment of 4 battalions, 1 independent battalion and 1 machine gun battalion. Rifle instruction is also given in Peruvian schools. There is a military academy and war college at Chorillos, near Lima. In May, 1927, the Peruvian army which for some years prior to 1924 had been in the hands of a French Military Mission, was entrusted to the technical direction of an ex-German general, who resigned in 1929.

The infantry is armed with the 1912 Peruvian model of the Mauser rifle, cavalry with carbine of the same type and model, artillery with the Schneider-Canet gun and machine gun battalion with Fiat guns.

Aviation, both military and civil, is controlled by a Director-General of Aviation, under the Ministry of Marine and Aviation.

Army, Navy and Aviation appropriations in the 1929 budget, Lp. 2,358,392.

NAVY.

The Peruvian Navy consists of the following units:—2 obsolete cruisers, Almirante Grau and Coronel Bolognisi, 3,200 tons, 24 knots speed, each with 2·6 inch and 12 lighter guns, built in 1906, and re-boilered and adapted for oil fuel in 1923-25; 4 submarines; 1 submarine tender, La Lima, 1 destroyer and a sailing training ship. In addition there are 3 river gun-boats on the Amazon. There is a naval school for cadets at La Punta, near Callao, and a submarine base on San Lorenzo Island, opposite Callao.

Agriculture and Industry.

The country may be divided into three zones: the coast strip, with an average width of 80 miles; the Sierra, or Uplands, lying between the coast range of mountains and the Andes proper; and the forest or wooded region, called the Montaña. In the arid coast region the government has brought under irrigation 62,400 acres during the last few years; large irrigation projects have been started in the Olmos desert near Pimentel in northern Peru, and near Arequipa in southern Peru.

About 80 per cent. of the population is dependent on agriculture, mainly with the help of irrigation. The chief agricultural productions of Peru are, in the order named, cotton, sugar, coffee, wool, hides, and skins. Cotton production in 1929 reached 130,641 metric tons or 49,731 tons of ginned cotton, of which 45,915 tons, valued at 51,545,190 soles, were exported; exports, 1930, 54,624 metric tons. The sugar industry is carried on chiefly by irrigation in the river valleys of the coast region and by sinking wells (1 lb. of sugar is estimated to require 500 gallons of water). Peru is a low-cost producer. About 50 large estates covering 128,000 acres raise 95 per cent. of the crop. In 1930, the production was about 400,000 tons, of which 338,785 tons were exported. The chief coffee-growing districts are those of Chanchamayo, Perené and Paucartambo in Central Peru, where the Peruvian Corporation has done much useful colonising work on about 2,750,000 acres. Cocoa cultivation is extending, especially in the Perené region. Wheat growing on the plateaus of the Andes is encouraged. Total area under wheat in 1929, 350,962 acres; production, 121,180 metric tons. Rice is extensively grown; the quality is excellent, but the quantity (104,171 tons in 1930) is insufficient to meet local wants. The gathering of wild rubber, once the most important industry in the Amazon region of Peru, where it was shipped from Iquitos, 2,000 miles down the Amazon to the Atlantic, has declined in importance with the competition of plantation rubber. Exports of balata from this region have taken its place, but as the trees are felled, not tapped, this too is declining. Tobacco (in Northern Peru), wines and spirits, olives, ramie, and maize are also produced. The manufacture, importation and sale of tobacco is a Government monopoly; it can only be grown under licence. Silk culture is being tried in the coast region. Coca is grown for the Indian population which chews the leaf, but cocaine is manufactured in Lima, Otuzco, and several other towns, principally for export to Japan; exports about 3,000 pounds. In addition there are dyes, cinchona, and other medicinal plants. Alpaca, sheep, and llama wool are exported. Peru produces 3,415 metric tons of wool per year from about 12,000,000 sheep, and 7,510 metric tons of alpaca.

The guano deposits on Huanillos, Punta Lobos, and Pabellon de Pica, amounting to 40 or 50 thousand tons, which had been granted to the Peruvian Corporation, reverted to the Peruvian Government on February 2, 1901; remaining deposits reverted to the Government in 1928. Output in 1930-31, 132,974 Spanish tons of 920 kgs.

Copper and petroleum are the chief minerals exploited. Peru furnishes between 2 and 3 per cent. of the world's production of copper. The chief mine, the Cerro de Pasco, has been operated for three centuries. Peru ranks third or fourth as a silver producer. It is the world's largest source of vanadium (furnishing 80 per cent. of world consumption) and perhaps the only country where vanadium is mined for itself alone. Gold is widely found, even in the rivers, but transport and labour difficulties hinder mining; present gold output is chiefly a by-product of copper and other mining. A decree of October 20, 1930, nationalized all gold deposits not already allocated. Nationals have priority in concessions. Iron deposits are large; the Government-owned field at Marcona has about 500,000,000 tons, it is estimated.

The following table shows the mineral production for two years (in soles, the new unit; 10 soles = the former Peruvian pound) :—

		1929		1930

Total mineral production, which is largely controlled by foreign interests, in 1930 was valued at 187,078,915 soles, a decrease of 119,189,705 over that of 1929. Mine workers number 25,700. Two smelters, both American-owned, and 2 petroleum refineries, 1 American and 1 Italian, are the largest industrial plants in Peru.

Shipping and Navigation.

In 1929, 11,937 vessels of 17,728,227 tons entered, and 11,907 of 17,685,158 tons cleared, the ports of the Republic. Since December, 1928, the coasting trade has been reserved for Peruvian-owned vessels with Peruvian crews; they number 184 of 746,922 tons.

Internal Communications.

In 1929 there were in the country 11,202 miles of road suitable for motor traffic, including 53 miles of concrete, and 1,116 miles of macadam. There are now two paved concrete highways between Lima and the port of Callao, and others between Lima and Chosica, and Lima and Chorrillos. In 1930, 8,455 passenger motor cars and 4,696 trucks were in use in Peru.

In 1930 the total working length of the Peruvian railways was 2,810 miles, including 2,163 miles privately owned and 642 miles retained by the State. These are standard gauge (4 ft. 8½ in.), with the exception of two small lines totalling 101 miles, which are 3 ft. gauge, and the North-Western Railway, Lima to Huacho and Sayan, 142 miles. American engineers started laying out a railroad from the coast across Peru to Yurimaguas on the Huallaga river, where it would connect with steamers ascending the Amazon and Huallaga rivers, a trans-continental route 200 miles south of the Equator, but the original concession was withdrawn in 1929, and negotiations were initiated with another group.

By an agreement (March, 1921) between the Peruvian Government and the Marconi Company, the latter undertook the administration of the posts, telegraphs, and wireless services for a period of 25 years. In 1929, the Company handled 44,768,868 pieces of correspondence.

There were 368 telegraph stations in 1929, and about 10,254 miles of telegraph lines; number of telegraphic and wireless messages 3,624,930. The telephone system, 1926, included about 11,000 instruments. Three submarine telegraph cables connect Peru and Chile, and one connects Peru and the Republics to the north. There are numerous wireless stations in Peru; broadcasting stations are at Lima and Arequipa. In 1928 an air mail and passenger service between Lima and different points in the Republic was introduced; bi-weekly mail and passenger service between Lima, New York and Buenos Aires has been established.

Money and Credit.

Peru's currency unit is the Peruvian gold sol (by law of April 18, 1930), equal to one-tenth of the old Peruvian libra or pound; the gold sol will not be minted but will contain, theoretically, 42.1264 centigrams of fine gold. Debts contracted in the old Peruvian libra, or pound, are payable in soles at the rate of 10 soles to the pound. The sol, formerly worth 40 cents, U.S. currency, is thus stabilized at 28 cents. Eventually gold 10-soles and 50-soles pieces will be minted. Silver is legal tender up to 20 soles. Silver coins are the sol, and half-sol, 5/10ths fine. Copper coins are 2 and 1 cent; and nickel coins 20, 10, and 5 cents. Peru has a paper currency issued by the Government of Lp. 10, Lp. 5, Lp. 1 and 5 sol denomination. Stock of money on December 31, 1930, included gold coin, 51,075,601 soles; silver, 17,743,416 soles; notes, 64,034,680 soles.

The Government bank of issue, known as the Banco de Reserva del Perú, was established March 9, 1922, and in September, 1931, was re-organized, on the advice of the Kemmerer Financial Mission, as the Central Reserve Bank with a thirty year charter and authorised capital of 30,000,000 soles. It is bound to hold not less than 50 per cent. of cover in gold, first-class bankers' acceptances and silver for the amount of notes in circulation. Note circulation, including residue of war-time issue of 'cheques circulaires,' on November 30, 1931, was 56,308,030 soles; capital and reserves stood at 16,354,560 soles. The stabilization of the sol at 28 cents, U.S. yielded the bank a profit of 22,333,513 soles; this was converted into bank stock and surrendered to the Government.

The Central Mortgage Bank of Peru was formed in 1923, with capital of Lp. 1,200,000, to extend credit to farmers at reasonable rates. A National Agricultural Bank was created in 1931, with capital of 20,000,000 soles, to furnish long-term loans, from 2 to 5 years. Banks, domestic and foreign, are supervised by the Superintendent of Banks. On August 31, 1930, the paid-up capital of all banks amounted to 52,567,127 soles, the reserves to 161,222,234 soles. Savings deposits on the same date amounted to 22,578,824 soles.

Weights and Measures.

The metric system of weights and measures was established by law in 1869, and is coming into general use, except for the customs tariff. It came into force in Lima and Callao on September 1, 1916. Spanish measures are still in use.

POLAND.

(RZECZPOSPOLITA POLSKA.)

POLAND was an independent State until the end of the eighteenth century. The Poles are Slavonic in race and Roman Catholic in religion.

During the seventeenth century the position of Poland rapidly declined, and eventually, by the three partitions of 1772, 1793, and 1795, the Polish Commonwealth, as it was then called, was divided between Prussia, Russia and Austria.

In 1807, Napoleon formed a part of the Old Commonwealth into a semi-independent State under the title of the Duchy of Warsaw and endowed it with a very liberal constitution, but in 1815, at the Congress of Vienna, this was undone, and Poland was re-partitioned between Prussia, Austria and Russia, except the small district of Cracow, which was constituted an independent republic and remained such until 1835, when it was annexed by Austria, despite a guarantee of neutrality by Prussia, Austria and Russia.

At the outbreak of the Great War in 1914, only Austrian Poland enjoyed autonomous government. It was governed by the Galician Diet at Lwów (Lemberg), under the control of the Central Government in Vienna.

During the war Russian-Poland was invaded by the Germans and Austrians, and by the end of 1915 the whole country was occupied by the Austro-German forces.

On November 5, 1916, the German and Austrian Emperors, in a joint manifesto, proclaimed the independence of Poland, but neither the boundaries nor the constitution of the State were defined. Shortly afterwards a Provisional Council of State, consisting of 25 members, all Poles, was summoned in order to draft the constitution of the new State, but this body did not exist for long. In September, 1917, a new Supreme Authority, the Regency Council, consisting of three members, was appointed, and under their auspices a Ministry was formed and a new Council of State summoned. It was composed partly of elected and partly of appointed members, 110 in all. In October, 1918, this Council of State was dissolved by the Regency Council and the convocation proclaimed a Constituent Assembly to determine the constitution of the Polish State and take over the supreme authority.

On November 9, 1918, the Independence of Poland was solemnly proclaimed. On November 14, General Pilsudski returned to Poland, assumed Supreme Power and convoked the Constituent Assembly (Sejm Ustawodawczy), which confirmed him in his office. On June 28, 1919, the Treaty of Versailles recognised the Independence of Poland. The same Treaty determined the western frontier of Poland from the sea to Upper Silesia. The fixing of the Polish-German frontier took place after the plebiscite in Upper Silesia and the territory east of the Vistula, according to the resolution of the Council of Ambassadors of August 12, 1920, and October 20, 1921. A resolution of the Council of Ambassadors has also fixed the Polish-Czechoslovakian frontier. Poland's eastern frontiers were determined by the Treaty of Riga, of March 18, 1921; the Allied Powers have acknowledged those frontiers, as also the frontiers with Lithuania fixed by the resolution of the Council of Ambassadors of March 15, 1923.

President.—Ignace Moscicki, born on December 1, 1867, in Mierzanów, near Plock, elected third President of the Polish Republic on June 1, 1926.

Constitution and Government.

The Constitution of the Polish Republic adopted by the Sejm (Parliament) on March 17, 1921, contains the following fundamental principles: The franchise is universal for both sexes, the voting age being 21 for the Sejm and 30 for the Senate. There are two chambers, a Diet (Sejm) and a Senate, both elected by general suffrage on the system of proportional representation. The President (Prezydent Rzeczypospolitej) convenes, opens, prorogues and closes the Sejm. By an amendment to the Constitution introduced in July 1926, the President is empowered to dissolve the Sejm on the advice of the Cabinet, and to issue decrees with the force of law between the dissolution of one Parliament and the meeting of the next, the elections for which must be held within ninety days. It is the President's duty to convene the Sejm for an ordinary session each year before the month of November. By the revised Constitution of July 1926, the Budget can only be discussed in the Sejm from September to January, and if it is not passed by the latter date, the proposals of the Government come automatically into force. The President is the Supreme Commander of the army, except in time of war. He is elected for a term of seven years by the Diet and Senate united in a National Assembly. He can make treaties with foreign Powers. In the case of the President's death, his duties are to be assumed by the Speaker of the House. Any Polish citizen of 41 years of age may be elected President. The President is not responsible either politically or personally, and therefore all his acts must be countersigned by Minister. Freedom of conscience is granted to all citizens; and all citizens are equal before the law. Every citizen also has the right of preserving his nationality and developing his mother tongue.

The law of July 28, 1922, divides Poland into 64 electoral districts for the Sejm and 17 for the Senate, returning 444 deputies and 111 Senators. At the elections held on November 16 and 23, 1930, the following parties were returned:—Lower House: Government bloc, 247; National Club, 62; Peasants, 48; Socialists, 24; Christian Democrats, 15; National Workmen's Party, 10; Ukrainians, 18; Jews, 6; Germans, 5; Communists, 5; Lesser Groups, 5.

Senate: Government bloc, 74; National Club, 12; Peasants, 6; Socialists, 5; National Workmen's Party, 6; Ukrainians, 4; Germans, 3; Unclassified, 1.

The Executive, called the Council of Ministers (Rada Ministrów), was appointed on May 27, 1931, and re-constituted on March 21, 1932, as follows:—

President of the Council of Ministers (Premier).—Alexander Prystor.

Minister of Military Affairs.—Joseph Pilsudski.

Minister of Foreign Affairs.—August Zaleski.

Minister of Finance.—John Pilsudski.

Minister of Justice.—Czeslaw Michalowski.

Minister of Posts and Telegraphs.—Ing Ignacy Boerner.

Minister without Portfolio.—M. Zawadzki.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

The Polish Constitution provides for the granting of a wide measure of autonomy to County Councils. The County of Silesia received a large measure of autonomy by the constitutional law of July 15, 1920. The Silesian Sejm (Diet), elected in November, 1930, consists of 48 deputies, 41 Polish and 7 German. The autonomous rights of the Counties of Lwów, Tarnopol and Stanisławów, were formulated in the law of September 26, 1922. A uniform system for all the remaining Counties of Poland is in course of elaboration.

By a law of July 31, 1924, the language rights of the Ruthenian, White Ruthenian and Lithuanian minorities were guaranteed.

Area and Population.

The territory of Poland (comprising Congress Poland, i.e. Poland as delimited and handed over to Russia by the Congress of Vienna, 1815), is made up of territories which after the three partitions of Poland in 1772, 1793 and 1795 belonged to Russia (262,166 sq. kilometres, or 101,196 sq. miles); to Prussia (17,808 sq. kilometres, or 6,973 sq. miles); and to Austria (80,089 sq. kilometres or 30,914 sq. miles).

The Republic is divided into the City of Warsaw and 17 counties (województwo), subdivided into 283 districts (powiaty), and self-governing cities (miasta wydzielone). It comprises an area of 139,868 sq. miles, and a total population of 31,927,773 (December 9, 1931).

The Counties of the Polish Republic are divided into the following groups: (1) Central Counties, i.e. the ancient Congress Kingdom and the district of Białystok (capital town Warsaw; counties: Warsaw, Łódź, Kielce, Lublin, and Białystok); (2) Eastern Counties (Wolyn, Polesie, Nowogródek, and Wilno); these two groups of counties belonged to Russia; (3) Meridional Counties (Kraków, Lwów, Stanisławów, and Tarnopol), which belonged to Austria; (4) Western Counties (Poznań, Pomorze, and Silesia), which belonged to Germany, with the exception of Teschen Silesia (Śląsk Cieszyński), which is a part of the County of Silesia, and till 1918 belonged to Austria.

The second census was taken in Poland on December 9, 1931, and the following table shows the area and population of the counties:—

Religion.

The great majority of the population profess the Roman Catholic faith, but there is no established church in Poland and all denominations enjoy equal rights, though Article 114 of the Constitution declares Roman Catholicism to be the dominant religion.

According to estimates for 1930 there were in Poland 23,025,000 (74·9 per cent.) Catholics ; 3,802,000 (2·4 per cent.) Russian Orthodox ; 2,978,000 (9·7 per cent.) Jews ; and 842,000 (2 per cent.) Protestants.

According to the Concordat between Poland and the Vatican, concluded in 1924, Poland is divided into 20 Dioceses, with 2 cardinals, 5 archbishops, 20 bishops, and 19 suffragan bishops. The Archbishop of Gnesen is the first ecclesiastic in Poland. The Greek Catholic Church has an Archbishopric in Lemberg and two Bishoprics, Przemyśl and Stanislawow. Since 1922 there is an Exarchate of the Russian Orthodox Church in Warsaw. The Armenian Catholic Church has an Archbishopric in Lwow.

The Roman Catholic Church has 5,965 churches and 8,373 priests ; the Greek Catholic Church, 3,275 churches and 2,144 priests ; the Greek Orthodox Church, 494 churches ; the Armenian Church, 12 churches and 27 priests ; the Protestants, 604 churches and 590 ministers.

Education.

All education is free, while elementary education is compulsory. The figures for the whole of the Republic for the year 1930-31, are as follows :— 26,540 Elementary schools, with 81,022 teachers and 3,961,885 pupils ; 743 Secondary schools, with 14,459 teachers and 204,992 pupils ; 230 Teachers' Colleges with 35,716 pupils, and 1,621 professional schools with 2,138 departments and 205,456 pupils (in 1929-30).

Justice and Crime.

By a decree of the President of the Polish Republic of November 6, 1928, providing for the organisation of general courts of justice as from January 1, 1929, unification of all judiciary organisations was introduced for the whole territory of Poland. This decree was subsequently modified by the Law of March 1929, and the decree of the President of the Polish Republic of November 1930. The highest judiciary instance in Poland, with 3 judges sitting, is the Supreme Court in Warsaw, divided into 3 chambers: (1) Civil for former Russian Poland; (2) Criminal; (3) Civil for both former Prussian Poland and Austrian Poland.

Minor cases are tried before County Courts. More serious cases are dealt with by the Circuit Courts which also act as instances of appeal for cases tried before County Courts. Courts of Appeal are instances for appeal for cases tried before Circuit Courts, and act as instances of cassation for cases tried before County Courts.

The Supreme Court is a Court of Cassation for cases dealt with by Circuit Court.

In 1930 there were 8 jurisdictions of Courts of Appeal; Warsaw, Lublin, Wilno, Cracow, Lwow, Poznan, Torun and Katowice.

In the Supreme Court, in 1930, were 87 judges and 43 public prosecutors; in the 51 jurisdictions of District Courts; 961 judges, 231 examining magistrates, 351 public prosecutors, and in the 568 Courts of Peace, 1,770 judges.

Social Insurance.

The types of Social Insurance in Poland are as follows:—

(1) Health Insurance (maternity included) for all industrial and office workers, and also for a large proportion of agricultural labourers; (2) Insurance against disablement (inability to work), of the aged and of widows and orphans, for manual workers (only in certain provinces); (3) Similar special insurance for miners and railwaymen; (4) Insurance of office workers against disability to work, of widows and orphans and of unemployment; (5) Insurance against accidents whilst at work, compulsory for all office, industrial and agricultural workers; (6) Insurance against unemployment of industrial workers.

Social Insurance in Poland has, with a few exceptions, been realised on the basis of the following principles: Compulsion, Territorial limitation, Autonomy, Universality and Centralisation, under the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare.

Most institutions dealing with long term insurance apply various systems of capitalisation guaranteeing to these institutions on the one hand, financial equilibrium for a considerable number of years and, on the other, allowing large reserves to be invested economically and to social advantage.

The dues paid to social insurance institutions, under the supervision of the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare amounted in 1929 to about 579 million zlotys, the total revenue to about 650 million zlotys, and the costs of benefits and allowances—to about 419 million zlotys.

The excess of assets over liabilities amounted to 600 million zlotys at the end of 1928.

In accordance with the existing legislation in Poland dealing with social welfare and assistance, social assistance is obligatory for all those who are temporarily or permanently unable to provide themselves with the means of subsistence and the obligation of administering and defraying the costs of social assistance rests on the local government institutions. The State provides for such persons as War veterans and disabled ex-soldiers, in addition, it exercises a general supervision over the administration of social assistance by public institutions and gives subsidies to existing communal and private institutions. Over 20 million zlotys were assigned for this purpose in the budget of 1930-31.

Apart from public action in the domain of social welfare, the action of private charitable organisations exists and continues to develop. These consist of boards of guardians and of associations and foundations, some of which conduct quite large institutions.

Service in the active army is for two years. The men then pass to the reserve, in which they remain for 18 years. At the age of forty they join the territorial army, in which they remain for 10 years.

In times of peace the Chief Command of the armed forces is exercised by the President of the Republic through the Minister of Military Affairs. The permanent collaborator of the latter is, in conformity with the Law of August 6, 1926, the Inspector General of the armed forces, who in case of war takes over the Chief Command. General questions relating to preparations for the defence of the country are examined by the Committee of National Defence, which, in virtue of the Law of October 25, 1926, is presided over by the President of the Republic. Members of this Committee are, the Prime Minister, the Minister of Military Affairs, the Minister of the Interior, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, the Minister of Finances and the Inspector General of the armed force.

The country is divided into 10 General Military Districts: Warsaw, Lublin, Torun, Lodz, Cracow, Lemberg, Posen, Grodno, Brzesc, and Przemyśl. The strength of the army in 1931 was 17,895 officers and 228,995 other ranks.

There are the following fortresses in Poland: in the west, Thorn and Posen; in the south, Cracow and Przemyśl and armed camps; in the east, Brest Litowsk, Grodno, Osowiec; in the interior, Warsaw, Modlin, Deblin.

Poland maintains on the Vistula 12 small gunboats, and two sea-going gunboats, Pilsudski and Haller, 500 tons, have been built in Finland. There are also 1 surveying vessel, 1 armed transport, 4 mine-sweepers, and 5 ex-German torpedo-boats for police service. Two destroyers and 3 submarines were recently completed in French yards. ## PORTUGAL.

(REPÚBLICA PORTUGUESA.)

PORTUGAL has been an independent State since the twelfth century; until 1910 it was a monarchy. The last King was Manoel II. of the house of Braganza-Coburg, born November 15, 1889, younger son of King Carlos I. and Queen Mary Amélie, daughter of Philippe Count of Paris. Manoel II. succeeded to the throne on the assassination of his father and elder brother, Prince Luiz Philip, February 1, 1908. On October 5, 1910, the republic was proclaimed, after a short revolution, and a provisional government established with Dr. Theophilo Braga as the Provisional President (October 5, 1910, to August 24, 1911). The first President of the Republic was Dr. Manoel de Arriaga (August 24, 1911, to May 27, 1915).

On August 20th, 1911, a new constitution was adopted. This provides that there shall be two Chambers. In the first, which is called the National Council, the members (164) shall be elected by direct suffrage for three years. The Second Chamber or Senate (71 members) shall be elected by all the Municipal Councils, and shall be renewable half at a time every three years. ### Religion

There is freedom of worship in Portugal; the predominant faith is the Roman Catholic. Portugal, including the Azores and Madeira, is divided into three ecclesiastical provinces, with their sees severally at Lisbon, Braga and Evora. The Archbishop of Lisbon (Patriarch since 1716) has seven suffragans, of whom only two are on the European mainland; while the Archbishop of Braga (the oldest see in Portugal) has five, and the Archbishop of Evora two. The Azores, Madeira, and the Portuguese colonial possessions of West Africa, continental and insular, with five episcopal sees, constitute part of the ecclesiastical province of Lisbon. In East Africa there is also the province of Mozambique. In Asia there is a province of Goa with four suffragan sees (Macao included).

Education.

According to the census of 1920, 54.7 per cent. of the Portuguese nation are still unable to read or write. Primary education is compulsory, and is rigorously enforced by a decree of the Provisional Government of March 29, 1911. In 1929-30 there were 7,729 public elementary schools with 367,330 pupils and 9,488 teachers, 37 secondary schools with 13,772 pupils and 788 teachers, and 5 primary normal schools with 806 pupils and 73 teachers. For higher education there are 3 Universities: at Lisbon (founded in 1858 and re-organised in 1911), Coimbra (founded 1290), and Oporto. In 1929-30 the number of students at the universities was: Lisbon, 2,198; Coimbra, 1,684; and Oporto, 1,060. There are also special colleges for music and art (Lisbon and Oporto), commercial, agricultural and veterinary schools, a military academy at Lisbon, and a naval school.

In 1930 there were 662 newspapers and periodicals published in Portugal—30 daily, 288 publications once or more than once weekly, and 344 other periodicals.

Justice and Crime.

The Republic is divided for judicial purposes into 157 comarcas; in every comarca there is a court of first instance. There are three courts of appeal (Tribunaes de Relação) at Lisbon, Coimbra, and Oporto, and a Supreme Court in Lisbon. There are also 7 municipal and 936 district courts.

Defence.

Military service is compulsory for every citizen from 17 years of age to 45. The terms of service are 4 years in the Active Service, 16 years in the Active Reserve, 5 years in the Territorial Reserve and 3 years in the recruiting Reserve. The recruits are enlisted from March 1 to March 5.

Portugal and the adjacent islands are divided into 4 Military Regions: Porto, Coimbra, Tomar and Evora, and 3 Military Governments: Lisbon, Azores and Madeira, including 22 recruiting and reserve districts.

The total peace strength in June, 1931, was 4,901 officers and 50,475 other ranks. The overseas garrisons comprise 382 officers and 10,286 other ranks.

The Republican Guard consists of 8 Infantry Battalions and 1 Cavalry Regiment, with a total of 215 officers and 5,412 other ranks.

The Fiscal Guard consists of 3 Battalions in the Continent and 4 Companies in the Islands, and its strength at the end of March 1931 was 5,285 officers and men.

The Portuguese Army is armed with rifles, Mauser-Vergueiro, 6·5 mm. and Lee-Enfield; Cavalry, Mannelicher, 6·5 mm. carbine; Artillery, 7·5 cm. Schneider-Canet gun, 7·5 cm. Krupps gun, 7 cm. Mountain Schneider-Canet gun, 11·4 cm. English howitzer, 15·2 cm. Vickers howitzer and 15 cm. Schneider-Canet du Bocage.

The military estimates for 1931-2 amounted to 329,039,226 escudos.

The navy of Portugal comprises:—4 cruisers, Vasco da Gama (ex-coast defence ironclad of 3,000 tons), Adamastor (1,757 tons); Republica and Carvalho Araujo (1,200 tons—ex-British sloops); a variety of gunboats (mainly employed in Colonial waters), a mine-layer, 4 transports, the surveying vessel, 5 de Outubro (1,365 tons), 2 destroyers, 4 torpedo boats, 3 submarines, 1 steamer for torpedo and mine service, a salvage vessel, and a sailing training ship. A programme for replacement of the older units of the fleet was approved in 1930, and orders for 15 of the new ships were placed in 1931, 6 being laid down in British yards. In eight years it is proposed to construct two cruisers, twelve sloops, twelve destroyers, twelve submarines, two gunboats, an aircraft carrier, and a submarine depot ship. A naval flying service was established in September 1917; on December 31, 1929, there were 30 machines. The naval personnel includes 1,689 officers and 5,670 other ranks.

Production and Industry.

According to an estimate of the Ministry of Agriculture the cultivated area of Portugal (not including the islands) in 1926 was 13,317,500 acres (59·6 per cent.); the uncultivated but productive area, 4,500,000 acres (20·4 per cent.); area suitable for cultivation but not cultivated, 3,502,350 acres (15·7 per cent.); area unfit for cultivation, 956,750 acres (4·3 per cent.). Of the whole area of continental Portugal 37·4 per cent. is annually cultivated under cereals, pulse, pasture, etc.; 5·4 per cent. is under vineyards; 6·2 per cent. under fruit trees; 26 per cent. under forest; 25 per cent. is waste.

In 1930 the wheat crop was estimated at 376,049 metric tons; maize, 415,800 tons; oats, 115,300 tons; barley, 122,800 tons; broad beans and French beans are also cultivated. Other products in 1930 were rice (24,744 metric tons) and potatoes (564,581 tons). Wine (127,263,402 gallons in 1930) and olive oil (748,115 hectolitres or 16,458,519 gallons in 1931-32) are also produced.

The live stock in continental Portugal in 1925 consisted of 30,078 horses, 236,300 asses, 88,410 mules, 767,904 cattle, 3,683,828 sheep, 1,557,743 goats, and 1,117,354 pigs. Wool production in 1930 was 2,739 metric tons.

The forests cover 26 per cent. of the total area of the country; pine extending to 2,795,020 acres; oak, 1,205,148 acres; cork, 1,382,378 acres; chestnut, 210,513 acres; other trees, 165,532 acres: total, 5,758,586 acres. Cork is also an important product; production was 130,948 metric tons in 1929, and 84,283 tons in 1930. Most of the product is exported in the crude condition; in 1930 exports were 100,416 metric tons of unmanufactured cork and only 5,445 tons of cork stoppers.

Portugal possesses considerable mineral wealth, but for want of fuel and cheap transport, valuable mines remain unworked. The total mineral production in 1930 amounted to 656,314 metric tons, of which anthracite accounted for 186,415 tons, bituminous coal for 25,784, lignite for 34,474, and cupriferous pyrites for 399,120 tons. Coal production is so unimportant that heavy imports are required. Tin, tungsten, radium, arsenical pyrites, lead, zinc and manganese are among the other minerals known to exist, but the extent of their deposits is unknown and production is small.

The fishing industry is of importance. In 1930 there were 53,956 men and boys employed, with 14,174 boats of 61,141 tons. In 1930, the sardine catch was 114,057 metric tons, valued at 112,331,706 escudos. Exports of tinned sardines amounted to 35,153 tons in 1930, valued at 173,738,312 escudos. The centre of the sardine industry is at Setubal, about 10 miles south of Lisbon. It is the second principal industry in the country.

The principal manufacturing industry is the production of textiles, which employs some 45,000 operatives—25,000 in cottons, and the remainder in woollens, silks and linen goods.

A characteristic industry of Portugal is the manufacture of azulejos or porcelain tiles. This was inherited from the Moors, and tiles are used extensively for interior and exterior decoration of public and private buildings. At Sacavem, near Lisbon, a large factory makes tiles and chinaware. In Peniche, an old fishing village on the north coast of Lisbon, there is a local pillow lace industry, and at Guimaraes famous embroidery is made.

On August 15, 1914, partial autonomy was granted by the Home Government to all Portuguese colonies, giving each the right to establish its own code of laws for civil and financial Government.

In August, 1929, the Portuguese Government approved the statutes of the Banco Nacional Ultramarino, which is now the sole bank of issue for the Colonies of Cape Verde, Guinea, S. Tomé e Príncipe, Mozambique, Portuguese India, Macao and Timor. The Bank's minimum capital is 135,000,000 escudos, of which a minimum of 35,000,000 escudos is set aside for operations in Mozambique. The paid-up capital at December 31, 1929, was 50,600,000 escudos.

The Cape Verde Islands consist of ten islands and four islets which are administered by a Governor, whose seat is at Praia, the capital. The islands are divided into two groups, named Barlavento (windward) and Sotavento (leeward); the prevailing wind being north-east. The former is constituted by the islands of São Vicente, Santo Antão, São Nicolau, Santa Luzia, Sal and Boa Vista, and the small islands named Branco and Raso. The latter is constituted by the islands of Sant' Iago, Maio, Fogo and Brava, and the small islands named Rei and Rombo. São Vicente is a coaling station which supplies all navigation to South America. The total area is 3,929 square kilometres (1,517 square miles). The population according to the census of 1928 is 150,160 (67,427 males and 82,733 females), including Europeans and foreigners. In 1930, 943 ships, including 530 British, entered the Porto Grande of São Vicente, the capital, which is a naturally-favoured coaling station. 317,849 tons of coal were imported in 1929, against 241,323 in 1928.

Portuguese Guinea, on the coast of Senegambia, is bounded by the limits fixed by the convention of May 12, 1886, with France, and is entirely enclosed on the land side by French possessions. It includes the adjacent archipelago of Bijagoz, with the island of Bolama, in which the capital of the same name is situated. Area is 36,125 square km. (22,000 square miles). The area is 1,259,252 square km. (486,071 square miles). The colony has belonged to the Portuguese since 1575, with the exception of the years 1641 to 1648, when it was held by the Dutch. Huambo is now called New Lisbon (Nova Lisboa). It is under a High Commissioner, who resides at Luanda, and is vested with large powers. By the Charter of October 15, 1926, it is divided into 8 administrative districts and 2 Intendencias. The important towns are S. Paulo de Loanda, Cabinda, Ambriz, Novo Redondo, Benguella, Mossamedes, and Porto Alexandre. The indigenous population numbered 2,487,488 on December 31, 1927 (1,223,353 males and 1,264,085 females), and is now estimated to include 40,000 Europeans, of whom 90 per cent. are Portuguese.

The sums due by the Colony to the Portuguese Government have been agreed at 5,000,000%, on which 3 per cent. interest is payable; and about 1,000,000%, on which 6 per cent. is to be paid. The capital sums are to be repaid in 50 years, starting in 1932.

The chief products are coffee, rubber, wax, sugar, maize, vegetable oils, coconuts, ivory, oxen and fish. Cotton-growing, formerly remunerative, has been neglected, but is now increasing; tobacco is grown and manufactured for local consumption; petroleum and asphalt are worked by a British syndicate. The province contains large quantities of malachite and copper, iron, petroleum, and salt. Gold and diamonds have also been found.

Imports, 1930, 245,632,206 angulares; exports, 233,963,548 angulares. The chief imports of the province are textiles, and the chief exports in 1930 were coffee (11,839 metric tons), maize (71,249 metric tons), diamonds (318,634 carats), sugar (11,994 metric tons), wax (941 metric tons), and coconut (5,968 metric tons). In July, 1918, the Government purchased the Trans-African railway. There are about 18,000 miles of roads. Angola is connected by cable with East, West, and South African telegraph systems. There are 5,790 miles of telegraph lines, 259 miles of telephone line, and 19 wireless stations.

As from July 1, 1928, the Angolan escudo has been superseded by a new unit the 'angolar,' 80 angulares being the equivalent of 100 Angolan escudos. A new coin has also been introduced, called a 'macuta,' equal to 5 centavos.

Governor-General.—José Dionisio Carneiro de Sousa e Faro.

Mozambique (Portuguese East Africa) is separated from British Central and South Africa by the limits of the arrangement between Great Britain and Portugal in June, 1891. It is separated from Tanganyika Territory, according to agreements of October and December, 1886, and July, 1890, by a line running from Cape Delgado at 10° 40' S. lat. till it meets the course of the Rovuma, which it follows to the point of its confluence with the 'Msinje, the boundary thence to Lake Nyasa being the parallel of latitude of this point. In accordance with the Treaty of Versailles the Peace Conference on September 23, 1919, allotted to Portugal 'as the original and rightful owner' the territory south of the Rovuma, known as the 'Kionga Triangle' (formerly part of German East Africa).

Portuguese East Africa, with an area of 287,756 square miles, comprises two distinct entities: (1) the territory administered by the State (235,700 square miles), and (2) the territory of Manica and Sofala under the Companhia de Moçambique (52,056 square miles). The first is divided into 6 districts: Lourenço Marques, Inhambane, Quelimane, Tete, Mozambique, and Cabo Delgado and Nyassa, each with its own Governor. The district of Cabo Delgado and Nyassa was formed from the former territories of the Companhia do Niassa (Nyassa Company) when its contract expired on October 27, 1929. Lourenço Marques (population 37,311 in 1928-29) is the capital of the Province. There is a Government Council composed of officials and elected representatives of the commercial, industrial and agricultural classes, and also an Executive Council. The existing organization of the Province is that which was established by decree of May 23, 1907, with some modifications introduced by the Law of October 9, 1922. The population of the colony (1930), including the chartered company, was 3,514,602 (17,842 Europeans). Revenue and expenditure for 1931-32 were estimated at 313,618,127 escudos each. The chief products of the Province are sugar, maize, cotton, copra, sisal and mining products. In 1928 there were 418,186 oxen, 71,311 goats, and 18,487 pigs. The principal ports are Mozambique, Beira, Porto Amelia. Quelimane, Chinde, Inhambane and Lourenço Marques. Imports in 1929 amounted to 14,001,545 escudos gold, and exports to 11,335,517 escudos gold. At the port of Lourenço Marques there entered, in 1930, 838 vessels of 3,887,669 tons; and cleared 833 vessels of 3,863,571 tons. Trade with United Kingdom (Board of Trade figures): exports to United Kingdom, 348,114% in 1930, 328,794% in 1931; imports from United Kingdom, 2,809,381% in 1930, 2,379,824% in 1931; re-exports from U.K., 63,964% in 1930, 58,632% in 1931. There are in the area administered by the Government 516 miles of 3ft. 6in. gauge railway owned by the State.

The military force of the Colony varies between 2,250 men (1,379 natives) and 3,904 men (2,468 natives).

The Manica and Sofala region is administered by the Mozambique Company, which has a royal charter granting sovereign rights for 50 years from 1891. The seat of the administration is Beira. Under the Company's administration the country on either side of the Beira Railway has become settled, there is convenient transport by rail and river, and facilities are granted for securing titles and working mines. The census population of the Mozambique Company's territory (1928-29) was 3,616 Europeans, 3,552 non-natives, and 306,759 natives, total 313,927. Imports into this territory amounted in 1928 to 6,336,000 escudos; exports, 1928, 2,436,000 escudos. Exports in 1928 included maize (19,162 metric tons), sugar (33,697 metric tons), and gold and silver (184,738 escudos in 1927). There entered at Beira in 1929, 432 vessels with a tonnage of 1,644,271; and cleared, 433 vessels with a tonnage of 1,645,192. 2,500 miles of roads are now available for motor traffic in the Company's territory.

The Delagoa Bay Railway has a length of 57 miles in Portuguese territory, and is continued for 290 miles to Pretoria. Till recently the commercial relations and transit of goods by this railway between the Portuguese and British possessions were regulated by the agreement signed April 1, 1909. A new agreement has been negotiated recently. A railway was constructed before the war to a point near the Swaziland border, 40 miles being open for traffic, but the linking up of this section with the South African Railways to provide a direct route from Lourenço Marques to Johannesburg has not yet been arranged. The Gaza Railway (2 ft. 6 in. gauge) from João Belo to Chikomo has 61 miles open for traffic.

The Beira Railway has a length of 200 miles in the territory administered by the Mozambique Co., and links up at the frontier with the Rhodesian Railway system. The Trans-Zambesia Railway, 175 miles in length, from Dondo, on the Beira Junction Railway, to Murraça, on the southern bank of the Zambesi, was opened for traffic on July 1, 1922. On the northern bank of the Zambesi, the Central Africa Railway (61 miles long, of which 45 miles are in Portuguese territory) connects at Port Herald with the Shiré Highlands Railway. When a bridge is constructed over the Zambesi these three railways will give a continuous connection between British Nyasaland and the port of Beira.

The Government has been working on a definite plan, and the finished scheme for the Province south of parallel 22, the southern boundary of the Mozambique Co.'s territories, embraces the following lines: Moamba to Xinavane, 55 miles (completed); Xinavane via Chissane to Chai-Chai, or via Chibuto to Chigomo, 70 miles (not yet begun); Chai-Chai via Manjacasse to Chigomo, 51 miles (completed); Chigomo via Jinagai to Inharrime, 51 miles (projected); Inharrime to Inhamitanga, 55 miles (completed). Activities north of the Mozambique Co. are represented by two lines of penetration, one from the port of Quelimane, which taps what is said to be the richest region on the whole coast and now extends to Mocuba on the river Lujella, and the other from Lumbo, on the mainland opposite the island and port of Mozambique, capital of the district of that name and formerly capital of the Province, to Moçimboa.

Beira is connected by telegraph with Salisbury in Mashonaland, and Lourenço Marques with the Transvaal system. Quelimane has telegraphic communication with Chiromo. In 1925 there were 7,452 miles of telegraph line. There are 12,400 miles of roads.

Since September 1, 1922, the escudo currency has been in vogue in Portuguese East Africa, but at Lourenço Marques and Beira, libra esterlina (sterling) notes used still to be issued by the local banks. This right was rescinded in 1926, and the sterling notes are to be withdrawn from circulation within ten years.

The metric system is used. Certain English weights and measures are also in current use.

Governor-General.—Colonel José Cabral.

Portuguese India consists of Gôa, containing the capital, Pangim, or Nova-Gôa, on the Malabar coast; Damão, on the coast about 100 miles north of Bombay; and Diu, a small island about 140 miles west of Damão. The total area of the colony is 3,783 square km. (1,461 square miles), with a population of 570,426. In 1929-30 there were 110 elementary schools with 9,681 pupils, 813 secondary school pupils, also a medical school (148 students) and a teacher's training college (37 students). In Gôa there are 501 salt works employing 1,968 men, the annual production amounting to about 12,200 tons. In Damão there are 11 salt works, and in Diu 5. In 1906 deposits of manganese were discovered near Mormugão and 6 concerns with 21 mines are at work. The military force consists of 44 officers and 1,406 other ranks. The Mormugão railway (51 miles) connects this port with the lines of British India. The estimated revenue of Gôa, &c., in 1930-31 was 6,409,255 rupees, and the expenditure 6,409,255 rupees. The trade is largely transit. In 1930 the imports by sea and land amounted to 17,427,806 rupees, the exports to 4,077,058 rupees. Chief exports are: coconuts, fish (fresh and salted), spices, caju-nuts, salt, and copra. There are in Portuguese India 46 telegraph offices and 262 miles of telegraph line and 75 miles of telephone line.

Governor-General.—General Graveiro Lopes.

Macao, in China, situated on an island of the same name at the mouth of the Canton River, forms with the two small adjacent islands of Taipa and Colôane a province, the city being divided into two wards, one inhabited by Chinese and the other by non-Chinese, each having its own administrator. The population, according to the census of 1927, is 157,175 (3,846 Portuguese, 152,738 Chinese and 591 of various nationalities). Estimated revenue in 1930-31, 4,769,535 patacas, and expenditure 4,758,243 patacas. The military force contains at least 488 men (164 natives). For education there are the Seminary of S. José, the Central College of Macao, and about 200 elementary schools. The trade, mostly transit, is in the hands of Chinese. Imports in 1930, 20,571,497 patacas (approximate value of the pataca is 2s.); exports, 11,014,782 patacas. The colony has 118 miles of telephone line and a wireless station. It is served by various British, Japanese and Dutch steamship lines.

Portuguese Timor consists of the eastern portion of the island of that name in the Malay Archipelago, with the territory of Ambeno and the neighbouring islands of Pulo Cambing and Pulo Jako, a total area of 7,300 square miles. By treaty of April 1859, ratified August 18, 1860, the island was divided between Portugal and Holland; by convention of October 1, 1904, ratified in 1908, a boundary arrangement was made between the two Governments, certain enclaves being exchanged and the possession of other territories settled. This possession, formerly administratively joined to Macao, was in 1896, confirmed in 1926, made an independent province. Population in 1926, 451,604. Estimated public revenue and expenditure for 1931-32 were 1,310,769 and 1,309,531 escudos respectively. Military force not less than 323 men (212 natives). Imports (1930) 742,637 patacas; exports, 1,348,089 patacas. Chief exports are: coffee, sandal-wood, sandal-root, copra, and wax. The port is Dilly, the capital. ## ROME, SEE AND CHURCH OF.

(CITTÀ DEL VATICANO)

FOR many ages until Pius IX.'s reign, with some comparatively short breaks, the Popes or Roman Pontiffs bore temporal sway over a territory stretching across Mid-Italy from sea to sea and comprising an area of some 16,000 square miles, with a population finally of some 3,125,000 souls. Of this dominion the whole has been incorporated with the Italian Kingdom. Furthermore, by an Italian law dated May 13, 1871, there was guaranteed to His Holiness and his successors for ever, besides possession of the Vatican and Lateran palaces and the villa of Castel Gandolfo, a yearly income of 3,225,000 lire, but this allowance remained unclaimed and unpaid until February 11, 1929, when a settlement of the 'Roman question' was arrived at by three treaties between the Italian Government and the Vatican. On that day there was signed (1) a Political Treaty, which recognized the full and independent sovereignty of the Holy See in the city of the Vatican; (2) a Concordat, to regulate the condition of religion and of the Church in Italy; and (3) a Financial Convention, in accordance with which the Holy See shall receive 750,000,000 lire in cash and 1,000,000,000 lire in Italian 5 per cent. State bonds. This sum is to be a definitive settlement of all the financial claims of the Holy See against Italy in consequence of the loss of its temporal power in 1870. The treaties were ratified and the sum of 750,000,000 lire paid on June 7, 1929.

The Pope exercises the Sovereignty and has full legal, executive and judicial powers. A Governor, directly and exclusively responsible to the Pope, exercises executive powers. The Judicial power is delegated to a tribunal in first instance, to the Sacra Romana Rota in appeal and to the Supreme Tribunal of the Segnatura, which is the ultimate authority where there is an appeal.

In its diplomatic relations with foreign countries, Città del Vaticano is represented by the Segreteria di Stato del Sommo Pontefice.

The area of the Vatican City is 44 hectares (108·7 acres). It includes the Piazza di San Pietro (St. Peter's Square), which is to remain normally open to the public and subject to the powers of the Italian police. It is to have its own railway station, postal facilities and radio. The official journal is the Acta Apostolicae Sedis. Thirteen buildings in Rome, although outside the Vatican City, enjoy extra-territorial rights. The new building of the Pontifical Gregorian University in Rome, under the direction of the Jesuits, was formally opened in November, 1930.

The census of the population of the Vatican City on December 31, 1930, showed 639 inhabitants, including: Italians, 495; Swiss, 118; French, 8; Germans, 8; Spanish, 3; Norwegian, 1; Austrian, 1; Dutch, 2; Abyssinian, 1; Native-born, 2.

Supreme Pontiff.—Pius XI. (Achilles Ratti), born at Desio, May 31, 1857; Archbishop of Milan and Cardinal, June 13, 1921; elected Supreme Pontiff, as successor of Benedict XV., February 6, 1922.

The election of a Pope ordinarily is by scrutiny. Each Cardinal in conclave writes on a ticket his own name with that of the Cardinal whom he chooses. These tickets, folded and sealed, are laid in a chalice which stands on the conclave altar; and each elector approaching the altar repeats a prescribed form of oath. Thereupon the tickets are taken from the chalice by scrutators appointed ad hoc from the electing body; the tickets are compared with the number of Cardinals present, and when it is found that any Cardinal has two-thirds of the votes in his favour he is declared elected.

From the accession of Innocent IX., 232nd in the usual list of Roman Pontiffs, to Pius XI., 261st, the Popes (all Italian) have been as follows:—

The Roman Pontiff (in orders a Bishop, but in jurisdiction held to be by divine right the centre of all Catholic unity, and consequently Pastor and Teacher of all Christians) has for advisers and coadjutors the Sacred College of Cardinals, consisting, when complete, of 70 members, namely, 6 Cardinal-Bishops (holders of the suburbicary sees), 50 Cardinal-Priests, and 14 Cardinal-Deacons. In practice, however, while the total number of Cardinals is never allowed to exceed 70, the number of Cardinal-Priests frequently exceeds 50, while there are usually many vacancies among the Cardinal-Deacons. In March, 1931, the Sacred College consisted of 4 Cardinal-Bishops, 50 Cardinal-Priests, and 4 Cardinal-Deacons.<sup>1</sup> The following list gives the names, dates, and offices of these 58 Cardinals:—

<sup>1</sup> The terms Cardinal-Priest and Cardinal-Deacon have for centuries ceased to imply severally the particular orders of priest or deacon. Nowadays in the Sacred College a presbyteral title is freely given to one in episcopal or diaconal orders, and a diaconry to a priest or even to a simple clerk.

Though primarily belonging to the local Roman Church, the Cardinals, drawn from every nation of Christendom, are now regarded as Princes of the Church at large. Originally they were simply the parish rectors of Rome, or the deacons of Roman deaneries. In 1586 their number was finally settled by Sixtus V. at seventy. The Cardinals compose the Pope's Senate or Council and the various Sacred Congregations, govern the Church while the Apostolic See is vacant, and elect the deceased Pontiff's successor. They received the distinction of the red hat under Innocent IV., during the first General Council of Lyons, in 1246; and the title of Eminence from Urban VIII., in 1630. In 1930 all Archbishops and Bishops of the Catholic Church had conferred upon them by the Pope the title of 'Excellency.'

The central administration of the Roman Catholic Church is carried on by a number of permanent committees called Sacred Congregations, composed of Cardinals, with Consultors and Officials. There are now eleven Sacred Congregations, viz., Holy Office, Consistorial, Discipline of the Sacraments, Council, Religious, Propaganda Fide, Rites, Ceremonial, Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs, Seminaries and Universities, and for the Oriental Church. Besides these there are several permanent Commissions, for example, one for Biblical Studies, another for Historical Studies, another for Preservation of the Faith in Rome, another for Codification of Canon Law. Furthermore, the Roman Curia contains three tribunals, to wit, the Apostolic Penitentiary, the Supreme Tribunal of the Apostolic Signature, and the Sacred Roman Rota; and, lastly, various offices, as the Apostolic Chancery, the Apostolic Datary, the Apostolic Chamber, the Secretariate of State, etc.

The States wherewith the Holy See maintains diplomatic relations are Austria, Bavaria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, France, Germany, Hungary, Yugoslavia, Monaco, the Netherlands, Poland, Portugal, Rumania, Russia, Spain, and the United Kingdom (1914), together with most of the American Republics, except the United States and Mexico.

In December, 1930, the issue of Papal coinage was resumed, after a lapse of 60 years. The new coins are eight in number, and will have the same fineness and value as the corresponding Italian coins. Two are of bronze and worth 5 and 10 centesimi respectively. There are two other coins in nickel, worth 20 and 50 centesimi, and three silver coins worth respectively 1, 5 and 10 lire. In addition, there is a gold piece of 100 lire. In virtue of a special convention between the Vatican City and the Italian Government (to remain in force for 10 years), each State allows the currency of the other to circulate in its territory. The Vatican City has, however, given an undertaking that the total value of the bronze, nickel and silver coins issued by it in any year will not exceed 1,000,000 lire.

Within the British Empire the present number of Roman Catholic residential sees is 252, viz., 40 archbishoprics and 125 bishoprics, besides 59 apostolic vicariates (mostly held by Bishops of titular sees), and 30 apostolic prefectures. While the Roman Catholic population subject to King George V. is estimated at 16,057,012 souls, of whom 4,240,557 are in Europe; 3,800,951 in Asia; 1,234,760 in Africa; 3,846,233 in British America; and 1,434,511 in Australasia. In the United States (including possessions) there were in 1931 29,603,538 Roman Catholics. Throughout the world the Roman Catholic population is reckoned (1929) at 334,664,791 souls, of whom 328,158,020 are of the Latin Rite (Catholic Directory, London).

RUMANIA.

(ROMÂNIA)

Reigning King.

Carol II, born October 16, 1893, son of the late King Ferdinand and Queen Marie, married March 10, 1921, Princess Helen, daughter of the late Constantine, King of the Hellenes (this marriage was dissolved June 21, 1928, when the Princess received the title of Princess of Rumania). On December 28, 1925, Prince Carol renounced his right of succession to the Throne; this was confirmed by Act of Parliament on January 4, 1926, when his son, Prince Mihai, was declared Heir to the Throne. On March 24, Prince Carol assumed the name of Carol Caraiman. On June 7, 1930, he returned to Rumania and was proclaimed King in virtue of an Act of Parliament on June 8, 1930.

Son of the King.—Prince Mihai (Michael), born October 25, 1921, proclaimed King in virtue of his father's renunciation of the succession on the death of his grandfather, King Ferdinand, July 20, 1927, under a Regency. Ceased to be King on his father's accession, June 8, 1930, when he received the title of Prince of Alba Julia.

Sisters and brother of the King.—(1) Elisabeth, born October 11, 1894, married February 27, 1921, to the Diadoch, afterwards George II., King of the Hellenes; (2) Marie, born January 8, 1900, married to Alexander, King of the Serb, Croat, and Slovene State, June 8, 1922; (3) Nicholas, born August 18, 1908; (4) Ileana, born January 5, 1909, married July 26, 1931, to the Archduke Anton of Austria-Tuscany.

The union of the two Principalities of Wallachia and Moldavia was publicly proclaimed at Bucharest and Jassy on Dec. 23, 1861, the present name being given to the united provinces. The first ruler of Rumania was Colonel Cuza, who had been elected 'Hospodar,' or Lord, of Wallachia and of Moldavia in 1859, and who assumed the government under the title of Prince Alexandru Joan I. A Palace conspiracy in February 1866 forced Prince Alexandru Joan to abdicate, and led to the election of Prince Carol I. The representatives of the people, assembled at Bucharest, proclaimed Rumania's independence from Turkey, May 21, 1877, which was confirmed by Art. 43 of the Congress of Berlin, signed July 13, 1878. King Carol I. of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen reigned as Prince from 1866 to 1881, and as King from 1881 to 1914. On April 11, 1918, Bessarabia was joined to Rumania; the Bukovina on November 28, 1918; and Transylvania on December 1, 1918.

Constitution and Government.

The Constitution of Rumania was adopted on March 28, 1923. According to this the subsoil and the forests are nationalized. The Senate consists of 170 members (Old Kingdom, 82; Transylvania, 45; Bessarabia, 24; and Bukovina, 19), including 4 for the Universities and 19 Bishops. The Heir to the Crown is also a Senator. All citizens of 21 years, paying taxes, are electors. Both Senators and Deputies receive 500 lei per each day of actual attendance, besides 2000 lei per month and free railway passes. The King has a suspensive veto over all laws passed by the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate. The executive is vested in a council of Ministers.

The European Commission of the Danube, called into being in 1856, consisted before the war of 8 delegates, one representing each of the following Powers: Austria-Hungary, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Rumania, Russia, and Turkey. By Article 346 of the Treaty of Versailles, only representatives of Great Britain, France, Italy and Rumania constitute the Commission at present. It has its seat at Galatz. Since November 24, 1904, it has existed, or will exist, for successive periods of 3 years unless denounced by one of the contracting Powers a year before the conclusion of any such period. By the operations of the Commission the Danube below Braila and along the Sulina branch has been deepened and corrected, so that at Sulina the depth has been increased from 9 ft. to 24 ft., and of the Sulina branch the minimum depth has been increased from 8 ft. to 18½ ft., while by canalisation and other works the navigation has been shortened from 45½ to 38½ nautical miles. The income of the Commission is derived entirely from taxes levied on shipping leaving the river. Receipts in 1929, 4,652,556 gold francs; expenditure 3,807,534 gold francs. The Commission has its own flag.

The tonnage cleared from the Danube ports in 1929 was 653 vessels of 1,325,394 tons; and at Constanza, 1,565 vessels of 3,841,555 tons.

Railway history in Rumania commenced in 1860. All the main railway lines are owned and operated by the State, but there are also several privately owned lines, mainly in Transylvania. The length of Rumanian State Railways at the close of 1930 was 6,913 miles. The quantity of freight carried in 1930 was 22,100,000 metric tons; number of passengers, 35,134,000; gross receipts, 11,464,000,000 lei. The State has, besides, under the general railway direction, a commercial navigation service on the Danube and Black Sea.

Within Rumania there were 66,212 miles of roads in 1931, of which 36,458 miles are of macadam, 5,912 miles gravel roads, and the remainder are classified as natural dirt roads.

The Compagnie Internationale de Navigation Aérienne runs a daily air service from April to October between Paris, Bucharest and Constantinople.

The reorganisation of the post-office under an autonomous regime took place on August 3, 1929, in accordance with the Law for the Commercialisation of State Enterprises. In 1929, 428,000,000 ordinary letters were handled by the post-office, of which 371,000,000 were inland letters and 57,000,000 foreign. In 1929 there were 33,506 miles of telegraph wire and cable for internal use and 3,863 miles for international connections. The number of telegrams sent was 8,100,000. In 1927 the telephone systems had 22,766 miles of line and 174,323 miles of wire. Number of conversations, 92,299,458. A concession of the public telephone system for a minimum period of 20 years was granted to the International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation of New York in July, 1930, and a Rumanian company called S. A. de Telefoane was formed and took over the whole of the system on January 1, 1931.

UNION OF SOCIALIST SOVIET REPUBLICS

(RUSSIA.)

ON March 12, 1917, a revolution broke out in Russia, as a result of which the Emperor Nicholas II abdicated. A Provisional Government under Prince George Lvoff was set up by the Duma, which held office until May 16, 1917, when it was reorganised. On August 6, 1917, a new Cabinet under M. Alexander Kerensky was formed. This too was reorganised on October 8, 1917, and maintained itself until November 7, 1917, when the Military Revolutionary Committee of the Petrograd Soviet seized the government authority, and handed it over the next day to the All-Russian Congress of Soviets.

The Constitution of the new State was adopted at the fifth All-Russian Congress of Soviets, on July 10, 1918, and additions or alterations were made at subsequent Soviet Congresses (December, 1920–23). On December 30, 1922, delegates from the four principal Soviet Republics met at Moscow and concluded a Treaty of Union, setting up a Union of Socialist Soviet Republics, covering Russia (R.S.F.S.R.), Ukraine (U.S.S.R.), White Russia (W.R.S.S.R.), and the Transcaucasian Federation (T.S.F.S.R.). In September, 1924, the Uzbek S.S.R. and the Turcoman S.S.R. were formed and joined the Union. On December 5, 1929, the seventh Republic, that of Tajikistan was formed. The Constitution of the Union was ratified by the Second Union Congress of Soviets, which met in January and February, 1924.

The Government of the Union consists of a Union Central Executive Committee and a Union Council of People's Commissaries. The former is elected by the Union Congress of Soviets, the supreme authority of the Union, and between Congresses is the sovereign legislative, administrative, and judicial authority of the Union. It is convened three times a year, and consists of two chambers—the Union Council, since March, 1931, consisting of 472 members elected on the principle of proportional representation of the seven constituent Republics, and the Council of Nationalities, since March, 1931, of 138 members, elected on the basis of 5 members for every independent and autonomous republic, and 1 member for every autonomous region. All legislation must be adopted by both chambers. The Presidium, or Standing Committee, which transacts current business, is composed of 27 members, 9 from each chamber and 9 elected at a joint meeting.

Chairmen of the Union Central Executive Committee.—MM. Kalinin (R.S.F.S.R.), Petrovsky (Ukraine), Cherviakov (White Russia), Musabekov (Transcaucasia), Aitakov (Turcoman S.S. Republic), Faizula-Khodzhaev (Uzbek S.S. Republic), Nusratula (Tajik S.S. Republic).

Subordinate legislative and executive authority is vested in the Union Council of People's Commissaries, or Cabinet. Each People's Commissary is the head of a 'collegium' or Board responsible for the work of the People's Commissariat or ministry under its care. Decisions of the Union Council of People's Commissaries may be revised by the Presidium of the Union Central Executive Committee. During the periods between the Sessions of the Central Executive Committee and those of the Congresses of the Soviets, the Presidium of the Central Executive Committee is the sovereign authority of the Union and, in accordance with Article 1 of the Constitution, it has among other rights the prerogative of carrying on diplomatic negotiations, of concluding political and other treaties with other Powers, of altering the external frontiers of the Union, of declaring war and concluding peace, and of ratifying international treaties. The Council of People's Commissaries is also responsible to the full Central Executive Committee and to the Union Congress of Soviets, to which it makes a report as a whole, in addition to the departmental reports.

The following is the constitution of the Union Council of People's Commissaries (January, 1932):—

President.—V. M. Molotov.

Vice-Presidents.—J. E. Rudzutak, V. V. Kuybyshev.

Foreign Affairs.—M. M. Litvinov.

War and Marine.—K. E. Voroshilov.

Home Supplies.—A. I. Mikoyan.

Foreign Trade.—A. Rosenholz.

Agriculture.—J. A. Yakovlev.

Land Transport.—A. A. Andreev.

Water Transport.—N. Yanson.

Posts and Telegraphs.—A. I. Rykov.

Workers' and Peasants' Inspection.—J. E. Rudzutak.

Heavy Industry.—G. K. Orjonikidze.

Light Industry.—I. E. Liubimov.

Timber Industry.—S. Lobov.

Labour.—A. M. Tsikhon.

Finance.—G. F. Grinko.

President of the State Planning Commission.—V. V. Kuybyshev.

In addition, the Procureur-General of the Republic enters the Council with a consultative voice, as does also the chairman of the State Political Department (G.P.U.).

A Commission of Execution under the presidency of Molotov (established December 25, 1930) has been charged with the task of verifying the actual carrying out of Government directions for Socialist construction by State institutions, and with the perfecting of the work of the Government machinery. As a step towards decentralization the Supreme Economic Council was reorganized in January, 1932, into the three commissariats of Heavy Industry, Light Industry, and Timber Industry.

Each of the seven constituent States of the Union—R.S.F.S.R., Ukraine, White Russia, Transcaucasia, Uzbekistan, Turkmenistan, and Tajikistan—retains its own Central Executive Committee and Council of People's Commissaries. Certain of the departments mentioned above are the exclusive prerogative of the Union Government. Others exist both in the Union Government and in the individual Republics, and a number exist only in the individual Republics.

The British Government recognised the Government of the U.S.S.R. de jure on February 1, 1924. Similar recognition has been given by Afghanistan, Austria, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Estonia, Finland, Germany, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Latvia, Lithuania, Norway, Persia, Poland, Sweden, Turkey, France, Japan, Mexico, and China.

Constitution and Government of the R.S.F.S.R. (Russia Proper).

The greater part of the former Russian Empire is under the rule of the Soviet Government. But a number of States have gradually evolved and are maintaining themselves on the borders of the old Empire. Five have received formal recognition by the Western Powers, viz., Finland, Poland, Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania. A number of other independent Republics, which have adopted the Soviet form of Government, are federated with the Government of Russia. These include: White Russia, the Ukraine, the Uzbek, Turcoman and Tajik S.S. Republics, Armenia, Georgia, Azerbaijan. (The last three constitute the Transcaucasian Federated Soviet Republic.) All the remaining territory of the former Russian Empire constitutes the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic (R.S.F.S.R.). This contains the provinces of Russia proper, autonomous republics (Kirghiz, Tartar, Bashkir, Dagestan, Yakutsk, Crimean, Karelian, German on the Volga, Chuvash, Buriat-Mongol, Kazak), and autonomous regions or areas (Komi, Mariiskaia, Votiak, Kalmyk, Karatchayev, Chechenian, Kabardino-Balkarsk, Northern Osetian, Ingushetian, Adygeisk, Oiratsk, Kara-Kalpak, Mordvinian, etc). The autonomous republics are governed by their own Central Executive Committee and Council of People's Commissaries: the regions and areas are governed by executive committees elected by the local Congress of Soviets.

So far as the Russian Socialist Federal Soviet Republic is concerned, a Constitution was adopted by the fifth All-Russian Soviet Congress, the text of which was published on July 19, 1918, and subsequently amplified, 1919-1925, and this remains the constitutional model for the other States of the Union. According to the Constitution, which has been declared a 'fundamental law' of the Republic, Russia is a Republic of Soviets (Councils) of Workers', Soldiers', and Peasants' Deputies; and all central and local authority is vested in these Soviets. Private property in land is abolished, all land being the common property of the people; all forests, mines, waters having a national importance and all livestock and fixtures, model estates and agricultural concerns are all national property. The State owns all factories, mines, railways, and other means of production and transport, but may lease them to private individuals, corporations, or State trusts.

The R.S.F.S.R. is a free Socialist community of all the labouring masses of Russia. Freedom of conscience, of opinion, of the Press, and of meeting is provided by the Constitution. In order to protect the conquests of the Revolution, universal military service is incumbent on all citizens. The privilege of defending the Revolution with arms is, however, reserved for the labouring classes only; the non-labouring sections of the population will discharge other military duties. The political rights of Russian citizenship will be granted without any formalities to foreigners residing on the territory of the Russian Republic for purposes of labour.

The highest authority in the State is the All-Russian Congress of Soviets, which consists of representatives of town Soviets on the basis of one delegate for every 25,000 electors, and of Provincial Congresses of Soviets on the basis of one delegate for every 125,000 inhabitants. The Congress elects an All-Russian Central Executive Committee, consisting of 400 members, which constitute the supreme legislative, administrative, and controlling body in the Republic, and meets not less frequently than once in four months, current affairs being administered by a Standing Committee (Presidium). The Central Executive Committee also forms a Council of People's Commissaries for the general administration of the affairs of the Republic, to consist of 11 People's Commissariats and the Chairman of the Council of People's Commissars.

The franchise is enjoyed irrespective of religion, nationality, residence, sex, etc., by all citizens over 18 years of age who earn their livelihood by productive labour, and soldiers and sailors (including the commanders) in the Red Army and Navy.

The following classes are deprived of the franchise: Those employing others for profit, or living on unearned income, monks and priests of all religions, agents and employees of the former police, secret service, etc., members of the former reigning dynasty, imbeciles and wards, and persons deprived of civic rights by the criminal courts.

In accordance with the latest decrees, however, persons employing hired labour, or enjoying unearned incomes or engaged in trade, may be granted the right to vote by the provincial election commissions, providing they can present a certificate from the local factory workshop committee, a local working peasant organisation, or local trade union committee, testifying that at the time of the election the given individual lives on an income derived from his own labour and does not exploit the labour of others.

Individuals engaged in agriculture and employing hired labour within the limits specified in the agricultural codes of the Constituent Republics of the Union are not deprived of their vote if they are otherwise eligible. Similarly the vote is enjoyed by people who are in receipt of interest from deposits in workers' savings banks, or from Government or municipal loan scrip, providing they are otherwise eligible.

Provision is also made in the Constitution for local government by means of local Soviets in villages and towns, with district and regional Congresses, which meet annually. Each Congress elects an Executive Committee, which administers the territory under its control until the next Congress.

Chairman of A.R.C.E.C.—M. Kalinin.

Secretary.—A. Kiselev.

R.S.F.S.R. Council of People's Commissaries.

Chairman.—D. Sulimov.

Agriculture.—A. I. Muralov.

Finance.—V. N. Yakovleva.

Labour.—M. M. Romanov.

Justice.—N. Krylenko.

Education.—A. S. Bubnov.

Health.—M. F. Vladimirovsky.

Workers' and Peasants' Inspection.—

N. I. Ilin.

Economic Council.—K. K. Stryevsky.

Supplies.—N. B. Eismont.

Collective Farming.—N. P. Komarov.

The People's Commissariat for the Interior was liquidated on January 1, 1931. Its functions were transferred to the Executive Committees of the Soviets and the organs of the People's Commissariat for Justice.

Religion.

By decree of Jan. 23, 1918, the Soviet Government disestablished the Church and appropriated certain categories of its property. From the time of the Revolution of March, 1917, till May, 1929, all religions might be freely professed in the Union. In May, 1929, a decree was issued which altered several paragraphs of the Constitution of the R.S.F.S.R. The new text raises atheism to the status of a State dogma by deleting from the Constitution the phrases hitherto granting all religious and atheism equal freedom, and by formally granting to atheists a monopoly of the right to teach their beliefs. The Soviet Government has instructed the Commissariat for Education to organize a special new 'Inspectorate of Anti-Religious Propaganda,' with branches in all district centres, to superintend the enforcement of the new law restricting the liberties of the Church and forbidding all religious propaganda. Before the revolution the prevailing religion of the country was the Græco-Russian, officially called the Orthodox Faith. The Holy Synod, the board of government of the Russian Church, was established in 1721. It is composed of the three metropolitans (Leningrad, Moscow, and Kiev), the archbishop of Georgia (Caucasus), and several bishops sitting in turn.

It is estimated that there are more than 12,000,000 dissenters in Great Russia alone. Roman Catholics are most numerous in the former Polish Provinces, Lutherans in those of the Baltic, and Mohammedans in Eastern and Southern Russia, while the Jews are almost entirely settled in the towns and larger villages of the western and south-western provinces. The Soviet authorities are now endeavouring to settle Jews who have lost their business or occupation as a result of the wars and revolution on the land—particularly in the Crimea. For colonizing Jews in the Far East the Soviet Government in 1928 allotted an area of 20,000 sq. kilometres in the district of Byro-Bidjan. In 1924, 76,000 Jews were engaged in agriculture; in 1927, 165,000; in 1931, 300,000.

Education.

Education in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics is conducted by the Commissariats for Education of the constituent and autonomous Republics of the Union. With regard to the autonomous republics, the higher educational institutions and also the scientific institutions situated in their territory are subordinated to the Commissariat for Education of the Union Republic of which they form an autonomous part.

The State Publishing Company, the Music Trust, the Sovkino, and the Trust for the Supply of School Equipment are independent economic units, over which the Commissariat for Education exercises only an ideological and methodological control.

Education is obligatory, and certain classes of private schools (under State control) are permitted. In the teaching year 1930-31, 82.5 per cent. of the whole juvenile population of the U.S.S.R. (from age 8 to 17) were included in the primary schools. Co-education has been adopted in all schools. The principle of 'labour' education is applied differently in the schools of each grade; in taking part in the self-government of the schools, the pupils are taught the art of self-government as citizens. Technical work is conducted as a part of the general industrial life of the country. School education is becoming increasingly technical in the U.S.S.R.

The following table shows the number of educational institutions and pupils in the Soviet Union on January 1, 1931:—

In 1929 there were also the following politico-educational institutions: courses for the education of workmen, 594; courses for juvenile workers, 82; courses for the peasants, 346; schools of an advanced type, 639; preparatory courses for the educational institutions of the higher type, 67; workmen's universities, 77; Soviet party schools, 934; schools for those who are in the first stages of literacy, 8,272; schools for the liquidation of illiteracy, 42,097; all kinds of politico-educational institutions, etc., 29,770.

In the beginning of 1929 there were in the U.S.S.R.: 29,006 libraries, 5,585 clubs, 21,941 cottage reading-rooms, 1,219 people's homes, 1,062 peasants' homes, 1,201 theatres, 37 concert halls, 38 circuses, 4,093 cinemas, 719 music halls, 44,774 red cosy corners.

Previous to the Revolution universities existed in the following places in the territory now included in the R.S.F.S.R. and administered by the People's Commissariat for Education: Moscow (2), Leningrad, Kazan, Saratov, Tomsk, Perm, Irkutsk. The Universities of Dorpat and Warsaw, evacuated during the war, were reorganised in 1918 as the Voronezh and Don Universities, and in the same year another was set up at Nizhni-Novgorod. In 1919 universities were established at Yaroslavl, Smolensk, Kostroma, Tambov, Astrakhan, Tashkent, Samara, Simbirsk, Orel; in 1920, at Ekaterinburg, Ekaterinodar, and Veliki Ustiug; and in 1929 four new Communistic Universities were proposed at Voronezh, Samara, Nizhni-Novgorod and Ivanovo-Voznesensk, for the training of Marxist propagandists.

Owing to the urgent need of specialists, a reorganization of the system of higher education was begun in 1929-30. Existing universities and institutes, which formerly had a more general character, were classified and given over to the control of corresponding economic institutions. Thus all institutions for higher education which prepared specialists for industry were taken over by the Supreme Economic Council (now divided into 3 Commissariats); those preparing agronomists to the Commissariat for Agriculture; and so on.

Justice and Crime.

The basis of the Judiciary System is the same throughout the whole of the Soviet Union, but the Constituent Republics have the right to introduce modifications and to make their own rules for the application of the code of laws. The Supreme Court of the U.S.S.R. is the chief Court and supervising organ for all Union Republics.

In accordance with the declaration by the Central Executive Committee of the U.S.S.R. on October 29, 1924, the fundamental objects of the judiciary system of the U.S.S.R. are to safeguard the conquest of the proletarian revolution and to protect the workers' and peasants' government and the laws laid down by the latter.

In the main, there is very little difference between the code of laws and their application in the separate republics. The legal system of the R.S.F.S.R., therefore, can be taken as an example of that in force in all the other Republics of the Union.

The Law Courts of the R.S.F.S.R. are divided into People's Courts and Special Courts. The People's Courts consist of the People's Judge and two Assessors, and their function is to examine as the First Instance, most of the civil and criminal cases, except the more important ones, some of which are tried at the Provincial Court, and those of the highest importance at the Supreme Court. The Provincial Courts supervise the activities of the People's Courts and also act as Courts of Appeal from the decisions of the People's Court. The Supreme Court exercises supervision over all the Courts of the Republic, and forms an Appeal Court from the Provincial Court.

The Judges of the People's Courts and the Presidents and Members of the Provincial Courts are selected for one year by the Provincial Executive Committee, from individuals who enjoy electoral rights and who have the necessary qualifications with regard to their public or legal work.

The People's Assessors are called upon for duty for six days in a year from lists of electors drawn up in the rural districts, industrial enterprises and army corps. The People's Assessors for the Provincial Court must have had at least two years' experience in public or trade union work. The list of Assessors for the Supreme Court is drawn up by the Central Executive Committee of the Republic.

In addition to the People's Courts there are the following Special Courts:—
(1) the Labour Section of the People's Court, whose duty it is to supervise the regulations relating to the working conditions and the protection of labour as well as to give decisions on conflicts arising between employers and employees, the violation of regulations; (2) Rural Commissions, which settle disputes concerning agrarian matters, such as claims relating to the use of the land, etc.; (3) Arbitration Committees, which settle disputes arising between separate State organs concerning property rights, with certain exceptions; (4) Military Tribunals, which deal with military offences, espionage, and other classes of crime, when there is no other Law Court on the spot but a military tribunal; (5) Disciplinary Courts, which deal with offences and neglect of official duties committed by members of the Central Executive Committee and similar State organs.

The People's Commissary for Justice is the State Chief Prosecutor, and in every province and district there is a Provincial Prosecutor who is immediately subordinate to the Chief Public Prosecutor of the Republics. The duties of the Public Prosecutors are the supervision of the correct application of the law by all State organs.

On September 1, 1917, the total indebtedness of Russia amounted to 32,300 million roubles, made up as follows:—Pre-war debt, 8,800 million roubles; seven internal war loans, 10,500 million roubles; loans contracted abroad, 8,000 million roubles; short-dated loans, 5,000 million roubles. According to an estimate made in 1924 the foreign loan was then reckoned at 15,858 million roubles. On March 31, 1921, the indebtedness of Russia to Great Britain was £561,402,000 (excluding interest since December 31, 1918). All these debts were cancelled by decree of January 28, 1918. The debt to the United States is 800 million dollars—250 million for war purchases, 150 million for former private loans, and 400 million advances by private American industrialists to the Soviet Government.

On July 1, 1931, the State debt was as follows (in millions of roubles):—(1) Lottery loans, 2,236·5; (2) Interest bearing loans, 1,724·7; (3) Current liabilities, 4·5. Total, 3,965·7.

Defence.

I. ARMY.

The military system of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics was reorganized in 1925.

The Red Army is now organized on a basis of universal military service. Service is divided into (a) preparatory; (b) service with the colours; (c) reserve service. Preparatory training is on a militia basis and begins at the age of 19: it consists of a preliminary course of 96 hours, lasting 1½ months, and a supplementary course of 280 hours, lasting 28 days, the whole spread over 2 years. The average number of men called up each year is 1,200,000. Of these 400,000 are freed from military service. Of the remaining 800,000, 260,000 go to regimental cadres; 200,000 are trained for territorial formations; and 340,000 are given extra-military training. The strength of the active army is about 562,000.

The whole territory of the U.S.S.R. is divided, for the purposes of the Army, into 10 military districts.

The Red Army is organized as follows: Infantry, consisting of 21 Rifle Corps, 26 Rifle Divisions, 45 Territorial Divisions, and 213 Regiments, or 639 Battalions in all. Cavalry, consisting of 13 Cavalry Divisions (including 4 territorial divisions), and 7 separate Cavalry Brigades; Artillery, 21 Regiments and 71 Light Artillery Regiments; Engineers, 29 Battalions.

On January 1, 1931, the total number of effectives was given as 562,000 (including 37,700 commanding personnel of middle and higher rank). Of these, 504,303 (including 30,354 of middle and higher rank) belonged to the land forces; 28,658 (including 4,946 of middle and higher rank) to the air forces; and 29,039 (including 2,397 of middle and higher rank) to the naval forces.

The formations organized on a military basis consisted of 28,150 Ogpu frontier guards, 17,240 Ogpu frontier troops stationed in the home country, and 13,200 escort troops. The land, sea and air forces possessed 750 aeroplanes.

Those on active service both in the Standing Army and the Territorial Forces, in the Navy, etc., whilst subject to the Rules and Regulations and Military Discipline, at the same time enjoy all the civic rights of Soviet citizens.

II. NAVY.

The proposed reconstruction of the Soviet Navy proceeds slowly, though it has been officially stated on more than one occasion that a complete reconstitution of the forces is contemplated. There are three battleships, the Parizhskaia-Kommuna, Oktiabrskaja-Revolutia, and Marat, of which only the first-named appears to have undergone any considerable refit.

Part of the Black Sea Fleet taken over by General Wrangel, and comprising one battleship, 10 destroyers, 4 submarines and other vessels are still at Bizerta under French protection, and have ceased to have any effective value as fighting units.

State dockyards were at Nevsky, New Admiralty and Galernyi Ostrov, Leningrad; Kronstadt, Sevastopol, and Vladivostok. Guns were made at the Putiloff steel works; 3 or 4 submarines are reported to be under construction at Leningrad, but otherwise very little work appears to be in hand.

The following table gives the principal ships at present in service. The former division into Baltic and Black Sea fleets may be considered to have lapsed, as ships now pass freely through the Dardanelles from one station to the other.

Date of Launch	Name	Displacement	Horse-power	Speed	Officers and Men	Main armament
Battleships.
1911	{ Oktiabrskaja- Revolutia . Parizhskaia- Kommuna . Marat . }	23,000	42,000	23	59—1,066	12 12in.; 16 4·7in.

1915	Profintern .	6,800	50,000	29·5	624	15 5·1in. ; 4 4in A.A.
1915	{ Tchervonaya Ukraina . }	7,600
1916	Krasnyi Kavkaz

These ships are the former Gangut, Sevastopol, Petrovavlovsk, and Poltava.

There remain not more than 24 destroyers of any fighting value. The modern submarines are about 8 in number. There are also 8 gunboats, several mine-layers and mine-sweeping trawlers, motor-boats, and surveying and training ships. The flying service includes 50 or 60 planes. A small force is at Vladivostok. There is a flotilla on the Dnieper, and a small force is in the Caspian. There are no naval vessels of any importance in the White Sea.

The total budgetary expenditure for the Red Forces (land, naval, and air) in 1931 was estimated at 1,290,000,000 roubles.

Production and Industry.

The Soviet Union, not long since predominantly agricultural in character, is becoming an industrial-agricultural country. In 1913 industrial production was 42.1% of the total, and agricultural production 57.9%. In 1929-30 industrial production was 58%, and agricultural production 42%.

The total area under cultivation (including single-owner peasant farms, Soviet farms and collective farms) was 118,500,000 hectares in 1929; 128,000,000 hectares in 1930; and 138,000,000 hectares in 1931. The total area of the single-owner peasant farms (excluding the Soviet farms and collective farms) was, for the years mentioned, in hectares, as follows:—1927, 112,452,400; 1928, 113,359,500; 1929, 112,000,000; 1930, 86,000,000; 1931, 45,800,000.

The area cultivated by the collective farms in 1929-30 was over 36,000,000 hectares, and in 1930-31, 80,900,000 hectares. On November 1, 1931, about fifteen million peasant farms, i.e., 60% of all peasant holdings, had been collectivized.

The following table shows the acreage and yield of the principal crops for three years:—

Of the whole of the forest land of the U.S.S.R., a large portion is administered and worked, or let out as concessions, by the State, and the other is granted for use to the peasantry free of charge, the latter being 72,900,000 acres in extent.

The Forest Lands of the U.S.S.R. are estimated to cover 2,040,330,000 acres, of which 1,984,547,500 acres are situated in the R.S.F.S.R. and 55,782,500 in the other constituent Republics of the Union. In European Russia alone, there are 405 million acres of forest land, most of it being in the North, some in the Centre, but very little in the South.

A large proportion of the forest lands of the U.S.S.R. lies in Asiatic Russia (some 300,000,000 acres in extent) where, owing to the absence of roads, it is not accessible for working. The forests of the Caucasus, on the other hand, are capable of furnishing the world's market with an inexhaustible supply of many valuable varieties of timber. A total of 18,600,000 acres in the Caucasus is covered by forest lands.

The Soviet Union is rich in minerals. The output of some of the principal ores was as follows :—

Ores	1926-27	1927-28	1928-29	1929-30
	Metric Tons	Metric Tons	Metric Tons	Metric Tons
Iron . . .	4,816,703	5,357,000	7,265,000	10,012,000

Copper . . .	509,400	647,000	772,600	1,080,000

The total gross output of coal in 1929-30 was 46,700,000 metric tons; in 1928-29 38,431,000 tons; in 1927-28, 34,840,000 tons.

The output of the State oil industry during the last three years was as follows (in metric tons):—1928-29, 13,700,000; 1929-30, 17,100,000; 1930-31, 23,128,500. The quantities of oil refined in the country were (in metric tons):—1929-30, 14,836,500; 1928-29, 10,721,000, and exports, 1929-30, 4,554,863; 1928-29, 3,642,114.

The organization of industry in Soviet Russia is based on State ownership and control, and is administered in accordance with the Decree of April 10, 1923, and subsequent slight modifications, by State Trusts and Combines. The Trusts in the large scale and middle sized State industries number over 600, but there are 291 big Trusts and these cover about 80 per cent. of the total State industries. A small number of Trusts, called Monopoly Trusts, combine all the enterprises of a given branch of industry in the whole Union. Such are, for instance, the Rubber Trust, Silk Trust, Urals Asbestos Trust, etc. In some industries there are several trusts. Thus the Oil, Cement and a few other industries have four trusts each, but in the vast majority of industries in the Soviet Union there are a number of separate Trusts in the various parts of the Union.

In 1930, the Syndicates in which some industries had been co-ordinated were dissolved, and their places taken by All-Union Combines, such as the All-Union Textile Combine, Electrical Industry Combine, Steel Combine, etc.

The following census figures show the value (measured in pre-war prices) of the output of Soviet industry (State, Co-operative and private) during the 5 years 1924-25 to 1928-29 :—

Year	Value million roubles at 1913 prices	Per cent. of 1913

The number of employees in the U.S.S.R. in 1927-28 was 11,456,000 ; in 1928-29, 12,150,000 ; in 1929-30, 13,684,000 ; in 1931, 17,000,000.

The following table shows the output programme in the five-year plan, and the actual realizations in 1928-29 and 1929-30, in the principal industries:—

Commerce.

The foreign trade of the U.S.S.R. is organized as a state monopoly. Importation and exportation of goods are effected by special licences issued by the Commissariat for Foreign Trade and its respective departments in pursuance of a plan annually sanctioned by the Government. The right of purchasing goods for importation, and that of selling Russian exports abroad is vested in the Trade Delegations of the U.S.S.R. in foreign countries. By special decrees respective Government Departments select those State and co-operative organizations which are authorized, under the control of the Trade Delegation, to engage in foreign trade.

For the purpose of encouraging the participation of foreign capital in the foreign trade of the country there have been formed in the U.S.S.R. 'Mixed Companies' in which shares are held by the Soviet Government and foreign concerns. Fourteen organizations have been set up for carrying on the export trade and ten for the import trade. The Co-operative Organizations which are granted the right of 'exit to the foreign markets' are Centrosoyus (Central Union of Co-operative Societies), Selskossyus and several other organizations.

The following table gives the value of imports and exports for five years:—

Money, Weights and Measures.

MONEY.

The monetary unit is the Chervontz, equal to 10 roubles of the pre-revolution gold coinage. It contains 7·74234 grammes of fine gold. Up to November, 1931, the par of exchange with the pound sterling was officially fixed at 9·458 roubles. Thereafter, owing to the abandonment of the gold standard by Great Britain, it was fixed at from 7 r. 30 k. to 7 r. 40 k.

The currency in circulation are (1) Chervontsi notes in denominations of 1, 2, 3, 5, 10, 25 and 50, issued by the State Bank against gold cover, but inconvertible at present; (2) Treasury Notes in denominations of 1, 3, and 5 gold roubles; (3) silver coins: either bank silver (90 per cent. silver and 10 per cent. copper) in denominations of 1 rouble and 50 kopecks; or change silver (50 per cent. silver and 50 per cent. copper) in denominations of 20, 15, and 10 kopecks; (4) copper coins in denominations of 1, 2, 3 and 5 kopecks and half kopecks; (5) bronze coins in denominations of 1, 2, 3, and 5 kopecks. Owing to the scarcity of silver a nickel coinage for certain denominations (the first ever to be used in Russia) was introduced in 1932.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

The metric system of weights and measures has been in use since January 1, 1927.

The old Russian weights and measures were as follows:—

- 1 Verst (500 sazhens) . . . = 3,500 ft., or two-thirds of a statute mile (0·662879).
- 1 Sazhen (3 arshins) . . . = 7 feet English.
- 1 Arshin (16 vershoks) . . . = 28 inches.
- 1 Square verst . . . = 0·439408 square mile = 281·221 acres.
- 1 Dessiatin . . . = 2·69972 English acres.

- 1 Pound (96 zlotniks = 32 lots) =  $\frac{1}{16}$  of a pound English (0·90288 lb.).
 1 Vedro (10 shloffs) . . . . . = 2½ imperial gallons (2·7056).
 1 Chetvert (8 chetveriks) . . . . . = 5·7719 imperial bushels.

The Soviet Government issued a decree adopting the Gregorian Calendar as from February 14, 1918. The five-day week was adopted in 1929; there are five days, all work days, in a week, and 6 weeks (30 days) in a month, and 12 months as before in a year. The remaining 5 days (or 6 in a leap year) are not counted in the months, but are Revolutionary festivals.

SOVIET CENTRAL ASIA.

Soviet Central Asia embraces the Uzbek Socialist Soviet Republic, the Turkoman Socialist Soviet Republic, the Tajik Socialist Soviet Republic, the Autonomous Regions of Kara-Kalpakia and Kirghizia (Kara-Kirghizia) as well as the regions to the north of Tashkent, which are now included in the Autonomous Kazak Republic.

Turkestan was conquered by the Russians about 60 years ago. In 1866 Tashkent was occupied and in 1868 Samarkand, and subsequently further territory was conquered and united with Russian Turkestan. In the '70's Bokhara was subjugated, the Emir, by the agreement of 1873 recognizing the suzerainty of Russia. In the same year Khiva became a Vassal State to Russia. Until 1917, Russian Central Asia was divided politically into the Khanate of Khiva, the Emirate of Bokhara, and the Governor-Generalship of Turkestan.

After the outbreak of the Revolution various political parties contended for power in Turkestan. In the summer of 1919 the authority of the Soviet Government became definitely established in these regions, and subsequently the native dynasties in Khiva and Bokhara were expelled. The Khan of Khiva was deposed in February 1920, and a People's Soviet Republic was set up, the mediæval name of Khorezm being revived. In August 1920 the Emir of Bokhara suffered the same fate, and a similar regime was set up in Bokhara. The former Governor-Generalship of Turkestan was formally constituted an Autonomous Socialist Soviet Republic within the R.S.F.S.R. on April 11, 1921.

In the autumn, 1924, a decision was accepted by the Congresses of the Soviets of Turkestan, Bokhara and Khiva Republics to redistribute the territories of these Republics on a national basis; at the same time Bokhara and Khiva became Socialist Republics. As a result of the redistribution completed in May, 1925, the New States of Uzbekistan, Turkmenistan and Tajikistan and several Autonomous Regions were established. The remaining districts of Turkestan populated by Kazaks (Kirghiz) were reunited to Kazakhstan.

The Autonomous Kazak Socialist Soviet Republic, comprising the Governments of Uralsk, Turgai, Akmolinsk and Semipalatinsk, had already been created within the R.S.F.S.R. (August 26, 1920). To this Republic were added the parts of the former Governorship of Turkestan inhabited by a majority of Kirghiz, and comprising the greater parts of the old Provinces of Sir-Darya and Semirechinsk, together with the eastern part of Ferghana and the foothills of the Pamirs. Area, 94,956 sq. miles. Within this Autonomous Kirghiz Republic, two Autonomous Regions were established, in the interests of distinct sub-groups of Kirghiz tribesmen, that of Kara-Kalpakia, extending south-east of the Sea of Aral, and Kirghizia, covering most of the old Semirechinsk Province. On March 7, 1927, Kirghizia was reorganized into an Autonomous Republic, formerly part of the R.S.F.S.R. The remaining parts of Russian Turkestan, with the territories of the old native states of Khiva and Bokhara and the Trans-Caspian Province, constitute the two Socialist Soviet Republics of Uzbekistan and Turkmenistan. In October 1924, the Central Executive Committee of the U.S.S.R. decided to admit these two Republics to membership of the Union, a decision which was confirmed by the Third Union Congress of Soviets in May 1925.

On May 1, 1930, the completed line of the Turkestan-Siberian railway was opened. The railway is 906 miles long.

TURKMENISTAN.

(TURKOMAN SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLIC.)

The Turkoman Soviet Socialist Republic was formed on October 27, 1924, and covers the territory of the former Trans-Caspian Region of Turkestan, the Charjiui vilayet of Bokhara, and a part of Khiva situated on the right bank of the Oxus. In May 1925 the Turkoman Republic entered the Soviet Union as one of its Constituent Republics. It is bounded on the north by the Autonomous Kazak Republic (Kazakstan), by Persia and Afghanistan on the south, by the Uzbek Republic on the east and the Caspian Sea on the west.

The principal Turkoman tribes are the Tekkés of Merv, and the Tekkés of the Attok, the Ersaris, Yomuds and Goklans. All speak closely related varieties of a Turkoman language (of the South-Western group of Turkish), and they are Sunni Mohammedans. The country passed under Russian control in 1881, after the fall of the Turkoman stronghold of Gök-Tépé.

The area of Turkmenistan is 491,216 square kilometres (189,603 sq. miles), and its population on January 1, 1931, was 1,137,900. The nationalities of the population are as follows: Turkoman, 72 per cent.; Uzbeks, 10·5 per cent.; Russians, 7·5 per cent.; others, 10 per cent.

The capital is Ashkhabad (Polterask), and other large towns are Merv, Leninsk, Kerki, Tashauz.

The main occupation of the people is agriculture, based on irrigation. Turkmenistan produces cotton, wool, Astrakan fur, etc. It is also famous for its carpets, and produces a certain special breed of Turkoman horses. It is fairly rich in mineral resources, producing ozokerite, oil, sulphates, common salt, sulphur, etc.

Motor communication has been established between Ashkerhabad and Meshed (Persia), and an air line runs between Leninsk and Tashauz. Turkmenistan (particularly the territory along the railway line) is connected by telegraph with the rest of the Union.

In 1929-30 the total area under cultivation was 390,000 hectares, of which 140,000 hectares were under cotton. On August 1, 1931, 59·7 per cent. of the total agricultural population had been collectivized.

The gross production of Turkoman industry in 1929-30 was valued at 54,000,000 roubles.

In 1930-31 the public educational system comprised 1,264 primary schools with 91,260 pupils; 77 middle and higher schools with 9,740 pupils; 4,088 political enlightenment institutions with 212,860 pupils; and 3,549 institutions for the liquidation of illiteracy with 109,000 pupils.

UZBEKISTAN.

(UZBEK SOVIET SOCIALIST REPUBLIC.)

The Uzbek Soviet Socialist Republic was formed on December 5, 1924, from lands formerly included in Turkestan, Bokhara and Khorezm. It includes a large part of the Samarkand region, the southern part of the Sir-Darya, Western Fergana, the Western Plains of Bokhara, and the Uzbek regions of Khorezm. In May 1925, Uzbekistan, by the decision of the Congress of Soviets of the U.S.S.R., was accepted as an equal member into the Soviet Union.

Uzbekistan lies between 36° 40' N. latitude and 59° 50'–75° E. longitude. It is bordered on the north by the Kazak Autonomous Republic, on the east by the Kirghiz Autonomous Republic and Chinese Turkestan, on the south by Afghanistan, and on the west by the Turkoman Soviet Socialist Republic.

The Uzbeks, who form the majority of the population over the area of the old States of Khiva and Bokhara, and the Provinces of Samarkand and Ferghana, were the ruling race in Central Asia, until the arrival of the Russians during the third quarter of the nineteenth century. The several native States over which Uzbek dynasties formerly ruled were founded in the fifteenth century upon the ruins of Tamerlane's empire. The Uzbeks speak Jagatai Turkish, which is clearly related to Osmanli and Azerbaijan Turkish, and are Sunni Mohammedans.

The area of Uzbekistan is 176,100 square kilometres. The population on January 1, 1931, of Uzbekistan (excluding Tajikistan) was 4,685,400, of whom about one-fifth lived in towns. The population is composed of: Uzbeks, 76 per cent.; Russians, 5·6 per cent.; Tajiks, 5·5 per cent.; others, 12·9 per cent. The capital of the Republic is Tashkent; other important cities are Bokhara, Khiva, Andijan, Kokand, Namangan, Samarkand.

Uzbekistan is a land of intensive farming, based on artificial irrigation. On August 1, 1931, 65·4 per cent. of the peasant farms had been collectivized. Cotton growing has been developed. In 1930 the area under cotton was 818,000 hectares. Uzbekistan also produces fruits, wool, and silk. Its industry consists of cotton spinning (51 factories), oil and coal-mining. In 1928-29 the gross production of heavy industry amounted to 70 million roubles. The gross production of all industry in 1929-30 was valued at 276,000,000 roubles.

In 1930-31 there was an important advance in compulsory primary education, 319,600 children, or 72·5 per cent. of the total child population of school age being enrolled in primary schools.

The total length of railway in 1930 was 1,789 kilometres, of which 734 kilometres (455 miles) form that part of the line which connects central Asia with Russia. From this main line branches lead to Karshe-Kitab, Kerki-Termez, Jalalabad, Namangan, Andijan and other centres. On the territory of the Republic there are 113 postal telegraph institutions, an air-line which serves all of Central Asia, and this air-line is most developed in Uzbekistan.

TAJIKISTAN.

(TAJIK SOCIALIST SOVIET REPUBLIC.)

The Tajik Soviet Socialist Republic was formed from the former regions of Bokhara and Turkestan where the population consisted mainly of Tajiks. Its equality with the other six republics of the Soviet Union was established on October 17, 1929.

Tajikistan is situated between 39°40 and 36°40 N. latitude and 67°20 and 75° E. longitude, north of the Oxus. On the west and north it is bordered by Uzbekistan and by the autonomous Republic of the Kirghiz; on the east by Chinese Turkestan and on the south by Afghanistan.

The Tajiks speak an Iranian dialect, little different from Persian, and they are considered to be the descendants of the original Aryan population of Turkestan. Unlike the Persians, the Tajiks are mostly Sunnis.

The area of the territory is 145,100 square kilometres (56,608 sq. miles), and the population on January 1, 1931, was 1,174,100, divided according to nationality as follows: Tajiks, 78·4 per cent.; Uzbeks, 17·9 per cent.; Russians, 0·8 per cent.; others, 2·9 per cent. The capital is Stalinabad (formerly Dushambe).

The occupations of the population are mainly farming and cattle-breeding. Gold, oil and coal are being produced, but by very primitive methods. Irrigation is being developed and cotton growing extended. In 1930 the area under cultivation was 890,000 hectares, of which 130,000 hectares were under cotton. On August 1, 1931, 28.3 per cent. of the peasant population had been collectivized.

In regard to roads, it is the poorest region in Central Asia. The only means of communication up to the time of the formation of the Republic were camel-tracks. A railway line has been completed between Termez and Stalinabad (about 200 kilometres—124 miles). Automobile transport roads are also being built, 2,500 kilometres (1,550 miles) of roads having already been completed. A steamship line on the Oxus runs between Termez Saraya and Jilikulam on the river Vakhsh. Stalinabad is connected by an air line with Termez and Kagan.

There were in 1930–31 in Tajikistan 517 schools for general education, with 24,200 pupils, and also 1,170 centres for combating illiteracy, with 30,000 pupils.

There are 12 post and telegraph offices.

OTHER ASIATIC TERRITORY OF THE SOVIET UNION.

The remainder of the Asiatic territory of the U.S.S.R. is divided as follows:—

Region	Area in sq. km.	Population, Jan. 1931	Region	Area in sq. km.	Population, Jan. 1931
Far Eastern Region			Western Siberian Region
Yakutsk Autonomous Republic	2,333,500	1,593,400	Eastern Siberian Region (exc. the Buriat-Mongol Autonomous Republic)	1,304,800	8,767,200
Buriat-Mongol Autonomous Republic	4,023,800	808,400
	389,100	575,000		3,179,400	2,568,400

The principal city of the Far Eastern Region is Habarovsk. The Kamchatka Peninsula makes up 40 per cent. of the area of the whole region. The population of Kamchatka, which is very sparse, derives its income mainly from fishing and hunting. Agriculture and cattle-breeding are being developed in Kamchatka. There are three big State farms, with over a thousand head of cattle, and of an area of about 100 hectares, and collective farms are being organized. The majority of the population in the Vladivostok area is engaged in agriculture, industry and transport. The forests constitute one of the most important of the natural resources. The total forested area is 900,000 square kilometres, of which at least one-half can be exploited. Nearly three million acres are under cultivation and many diverse crops are raised. The country is rich in fur-bearing animals of many varieties, and is an important fish-producing centre, being practically the only one in Siberia. Of the other industries of importance are wood-working and flour-milling. In addition to the vast mineral, timber, fur and fish resources, there is a comparatively good transport system, with a fairly well-developed railway system, and navigable rivers flowing into ice-free waters.

The two principal industries of the Yakutsk Republic are hunting and gold mining. The gold mining industry of the republic has shown steady development. The Soviet Trust Soyus-Zoloto and a number of individual prospectors are working the fields. Silver- and lead-bearing ores are worked, and coal. There is also some trade in salt. Added to the severe climate, which is a serious obstacle to the economic development of the republic, the absence of railways is another contributory cause. The newly-inaugurated air service between Irkutsk and the town Yakutsk, the capital of the republic, is being used to an increasing extent for the transportation of gold and valuable furs.

The Buriat-Mongol Republic is situated to the south of the Yakutsk Republic. There are a number of enterprises, principally in the leather and glass industries. Cattle breeding is, however, the principal occupation of the population. In 1930 there were the following head of cattle in the republic: horses, 309,600; sheep and goats, 1,387,000; pigs, 99,600.

Siberia is now divided into the Western Siberian Region, with capital at Novo-Sibirsk; and the Eastern Siberian Region, with capital at Irkutsk. Other large cities in this area are Omsk 161,475, Tomsk and Irkutsk with a population of approximately 100,000 each, Barnaul and Krasnoyarsk of 75,000 persons each, and Buisk 46,000 persons. The Siberian Region extends from the Arctic Ocean to the Mongolian border, and includes fertile agricultural districts and industrial sections in the south, while most of the northern territory is an unsettled forest and similar to the Yakutsk Republic. In 1930 the total area under cultivation in the whole of Siberia (including the Buriat-Mongol Republic) was 8,546,000 hectares. It produces a relatively high percentage of wheat, and its output is considerably above its own requirements, thus allowing a large proportion for export. The Siberian Region possesses some of the largest coal resources known. The Kuznetsk Basin is estimated to contain 400,000 million metric tons. There are other rich coal areas in Siberia, particularly the Chermkhov and Minusinsk Basins. Within the Kuznetsk Basin lie also the extensive iron ore deposits of Telbes. Siberia is rich in non-ferrous metal ores, especially copper, the resources of which are estimated to exceed 100 million metric tons. Many big industrial plants (such as those of the Kuznetsk Metal Combine, due to enter into service in 1931) are being built.

THE TRANS-CAUCASIAN SOCIALIST FEDERATED SOVIET REPUBLIC.

Trans-Caucasia has as natural boundaries—on the north, the Caucasian Mountains, separating it from Northern Caucasias; on the west, the Black Sea; on the south, mountains, steppes and rivers which divide it from Persia; and on the east the Caspian Sea. The area of the Trans-

Caucasian Republic is 184,492 square kilometres (71,255 sq. miles), or 0·8 per cent. of the whole Soviet territory. After the November revolution Trans-Caucasia became separated from the rest of Russia and split up into three separate Republics: Georgia, Armenia and Azerbaijan. In April 1920, Azerbaijan became a Soviet Republic. Towards the end of the same year, Armenia also became a Soviet Republic, and in 1921 a Soviet Government was established in Georgia. The three Republics, on March 12, 1922, concluded an agreement whereby they formed a Trans-Caucasian Federation, thus establishing the Trans-Caucasian Socialist Federated Soviet Republic. Its population on January 1, 1931, was 6,426,700, made up as follows: Georgians, 31 per cent.; Turko-Tartars, 28·5 per cent.; Armenians, 23 per cent.; Russians, 5·8 per cent.; others, 11·7 per cent.

In 1930 the total length of railway lines (not counting lines building) was over 2,300 kilometres. The main lines run from Batoum, through Tiflis to Baku and along the Caspian Sea through Derbent to the R.S.F.S.R. There is also a railway running from Tiflis to the south in Armenia. This line passes through the Allaverd copper mines and through Leninakan and Erivan to Persia. The railways in Trans-Caucasia, as in the rest of the Union, belong to the State.

The area under cotton in Trans-Caucasia in 1930 was 190,000 hectares.

ARMENIA.

(SOCIALIST SOVIET REPUBLIC OF ARMENIA.)

On April 2, 1921, Armenia was proclaimed a Soviet Republic. The Armenian Soviet Government, with the Russian Soviet Government, was a party to the Treaty of Kars (March 1921) which confirmed the Turkish possession of the former Government of Kars and of the Surmali District of the Government of Erivan.

Armenia (capital Erivan), which covers an area of 30,948 square kilometres (11,945 sq. miles), adopted the Soviet Constitution in November 1920. On January 1, 1931, the population was 1,032,700, made up as follows: Armenians, 84·7 per cent; Turko-Tartars, 8·8 per cent.; Russians, 2·2 per cent.; others, 4·3 per cent. The population of Erivan on October 1, 1929, was about 75,000. Armenia is essentially an agricultural country; in 1929-30 the aggregate cultivated area of Armenia amounted to about 1,000,000 acres, including over 44,000 acres under cotton. On August 1, 1931, 26 per cent. of peasant farms had been collectivized. Irrigation works have been constructed to a total length of 350 kilometres (187 miles). The principal of these is the Shirak Lenin Canal, 22 kilometres (13 miles) long, commenced in 1922 and completed in 1925. During the ten years of the existence of Soviet Armenia 6 large canals have been constructed, which have given to the peasants 40,000 hectares of new arable land.

In 1923 there were 1,376 industrial enterprises in the towns of Armenia. The production of the Armenian State industry in 1929-30 amounted to 49 million roubles.

In 1926 a new electric station was erected at Erivan and the construction of a number of powerful electric stations was started. In November 1928 work was started on another powerful electric station in Leninakan. There are now 10 new hydro-electric stations in Armenia.

Apart from schools for general education, with a total of 120,800 pupils, there are in Armenia 6 Educational Institutes of a higher type, 48 Technical Schools, and 9 Workers' Faculties.

AZERBAIJAN.

(AZERBAIJAN SOCIALIST SOVIET REPUBLIC.)

The 'Mussavet' (Nationalist) party who dominated the National Council or Constituent Assembly of the Tartars, declared the independence of Azerbaijan on May 28, 1918, with a capital, first at Ganja (Élizabetopol) and later at Baku. A Government of 12 ministers was formed, which the British Government recognized as a de facto administration in February 1920. On April 28, 1920, the 'Hummet' or Bolshevik Party overthrew the existing Government. On September 30, 1920, a military and economic treaty was concluded between Azerbaijan and Russia, and in the following year Azerbaijan was declared a Soviet Republic.

Azerbaijan covers an area of 84,679 square kilometres (32,686 sq. miles) and has a population (1926) of 2,313,172. Its capital is Baku, population 452,000. Azerbaijan includes the Nakhichevan Socialist Soviet Republic and the Nagorni Karabakh Autonomous Region. It has a temperate climate throughout the year. On January 1, 1931, the population of Azerbaijan was 2,510,800, made up as follows: Turko-Tatars, 63·3 per cent.; Armenians, 12·4 per cent.; Russians, 9·7 per cent.; others, 14·6 per cent. 77·6 per cent. of the total population live in the country districts.

Azerbaijan is in the main an agricultural country, the chief products being grain, cotton, vine, kitchen and garden produce, and to some extent also tobacco and silk. In the mountain regions the occupation of the people is cattle-breeding. The area under cultivation in 1929-30 was over 1,100,000 hectares (as compared to 961,000 hectares in 1913). In 1929-30 the area under cotton was 150,000 hectares. On August 1, 1931, 41·4 per cent. of peasant farms had been collectivized.

The most important industry is the oil industry, especially in the Baku Region. The total output of oil was: in 1927-28, 7,560,000 tons; in 1928-29, 8,802,000 tons; in 1929-30, 10,900,000. The number of men employed was (September 1, 1929), 46,700. All the oilfields have been electrified and are now connected with the town of Baku and, for the most part, with the new workers' settlements which have been constructed more or less on the American type. Amongst the other industries in Azerbaijan are copper, salt, textiles, and fishing industries. The total production of State industries other than oil in 1929-30 was valued at 75,900,000,000 roubles.

In 1929-30 there were 245,900 pupils in elementary and secondary schools.

GEORGIA.

(GEORGIAN SOCIALIST SOVIET REPUBLIC.)

The independence of the Georgian Social Democratic Republic was declared at Tiflis on May 26, 1918, by the representative body, the National Council, elected by the National Assembly of Georgia on November 22, 1917. The Act of Independence of Georgia was confirmed on March 12, 1919, by the Constituent Assembly, which had been elected on a basis of universal suffrage.

The Government, which was controlled by the Menshevik Party, received de jure recognition by the Allies on January 27, 1921. In February, 1921, however, a Soviet Government was set up.

Georgia occupies the whole of the western part of Trans-Caucasia and covers an area of 69,900 square kilometres. Its population on January 1, 1931, was 2,883,200, made up as follows: Georgians, 67·7 per cent.; Armenians, 11·6 per cent.; Turko-Tartars, 5·2 per cent.; Ossetians, 4·3 per cent.; Russians, 3·6 per cent.; others, 7·6 per cent. Georgia embraces the Abkhasian Socialist Soviet Republic, the Ajaristan Autonomous Soviet Republic and the Autonomous Region of Southern Ossetia. In 1930-31 there were 303,800 pupils in elementary and secondary schools. At the end of 1930 there were nine higher schools, nine workers' faculties, and 184 technical high schools. There is a State University, a polytechnic institute, a Trans-Caucasian Communist University, an Academy of Art and a Conservatoire.

Tiflis (population 293,000) is not only the capital of Georgia, it is also the capital of Trans-Caucasia. It is one of the oldest towns of Georgia, but it is now being to a certain extent rebuilt and modernised.

Agriculture is important; much work has been done in the drainage of land, and in the construction of irrigation works. On August 1, 1931, 38·8 per cent. of peasant farms had been collectivized. The gross production of Georgian industry in 1929-30 was valued at 159,500 million roubles. Georgia is very rich in forest lands where fine varieties of timber are grown. The most important mining industry of Georgia is the exploitation of the manganese deposits, the richest of which lie in the Chiatura region. Manganese deposits in Georgia are calculated at 250,000,000 tons, distributed over an area of 140 square kilometres. There are also coal seams, the most important of which are at Tkvargelskoe (deposits estimated at 250,000,000 tons), and Tkvibulskoe (deposits of 80,000,000 tons). The most powerful electric station in Trans-Caucasia is in Georgia on the River Kura, the Zemo-Avchal hydro-electric station of 36,000 horse power. The second most powerful station is the Abash Hydro Electrical Station; a number of other stations are either in the course of construction or are to be constructed shortly.

The railway system of Georgia extends to 570 miles. The trunk line leading from Batumi through Tiflis to Baku on the Caspian Sea has several narrow gauge branches on Georgian territory to the coal mines of Tkhibuli, to the port of Poti, to the manganese mines of Chiaturi, to the mineral springs of Borjomi and the health resort Bakuriani, to the towns Signakh and Telavi, in Kakhetia, and to the Armenian frontier, across the coal mine district of Alverdi. The last branch divides in Armenia, going on the one side to Tabriz in Persia, and on the other to Erzerum in Anatolia. All the railway lines on the territory of Georgia belong to the State.

A railway line from Akhal-Senaki along the Black Sea coast, through Sukhum to Tuapse, is being constructed.

SALVADOR.

(REPUBLICA DE EL SALVADOR.)

Constitution and Government.—In 1839 the Central American Federation, which had comprised the States of Guatemala, Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, and Costa Rica, was dissolved, and Salvador became an independent Republic. Its Constitution, proclaimed in 1824 under the Federation, and frequently modified down to 1886, vests the legislative power in a single Chamber of 42 Deputies, 3 for each department, elected for one year by universal suffrage.

The President is elected for four years. He has a Cabinet of four members in charge of the departments of:—Foreign Relations, Justice, and Instruction; War and Marine; Interior, Government and Agriculture; Finance, Charities, and Public Credit.

President.—General Maximiliano Martínez. Appointed December 4, 1931, confirmed by Congress February 7, 1932.

Area and Population.—Salvador is the smallest and most densely populated of the Central American States. Its area is 84,126 square kilometres, or 13,176 square miles, divided into 14 departments, each under a governor appointed for 4 years. Estimated population, 1930, based on the census of October 15, 1929, was 1,437,611. Aboriginal and mixed races constitute the bulk of the population, Ladinos or Mestizos being returned as numbering 1,307,200, and Indians 326,800. The language of the country is Spanish. The capital is San Salvador, with (1930) 95,692 inhabitants. Other towns are Santa Ana, population 75,796; San Miguel, 38,620; Zatacoluca, 34,456; San Vicente, 34,723; Sonsonate, 16,895.

The number of births in 1929 was 61,091, of which 42·6 per cent. were legitimate and 57·4 per cent. were illegitimate; the number of deaths, 24,689.

Religion, ducation and Justice.—The dominant religion is Roman Catholicism. There is an archbishop in San Salvador and a bishop at Santa Ana and San Miguel respectively. Education is free and obligatory; in 1929 the State took over control of all schools, public and private. There were in 1930 907 primary schools, with 1,613 teachers and 55,634 enrolled pupils. There are 10 travelling teachers for the rural districts. Secondary education is given (1930) at the National Institute (275 pupils) and at 17 recognized private Lyceums, of whom 11 furnish commercial instruction. Two normal schools, one for men and one for women, have a total enrolment of 119. There is a National University with 411 students in 1930. Expenditure on public instruction in 1929, 2,728,213 colones.

Justice is administered by the Supreme Court of Justice, one court of third instance (in the capital) and several courts of first and second instance, besides a number of minor courts. All judges of second and third instance are elected by the National Assembly for a term of 2 years, while the judges of first instance are appointed by the Supreme Court for a similar period.

Finance.—Revenue and expenditure for five years (2 colones = 1 dollar U.S.; 9·72 colones = 1*l.* sterling at par):—

	1928	1929	1930	1931 <sup>1</sup> (Estimates)	1932 <sup>1</sup> (Estimates)
Revenue . . . .	Colones 25,546,291	Colones 26,147,159	Colones 21,904,881	Colones 24,792,000	Colones 20,986,800
Expenditure . . .	25,867,254	27,219,238	23,048,451	25,189,146	20,977,084

<sup>1</sup> Revenue and expenditure are reported for the calendar year, but the budget is for the fiscal year ending June 30.

Of revenues in 1930, import duties furnished 9,914,711 colones; export duties, 3,922,325 colones; liquor taxes, 3,550,742 colones. Of expenditures in 1930, debt service took 7,096,402 colones; education, 2,138,458 colones; and war, navy and aviation, 3,780,168 colones.

The total outstanding debt on December 31, 1930, was 43,626,921 colones, of which 36,015,398 colones were external debt, and 7,611,528 colones internal debt. A loan of 2,000,000 colones from local banks was obtained in July, 1931. Debt service in 1932 requires 11,206,136 colones or 53 per cent. of total estimated revenues; postponement seems inevitable. American investments in Salvador (U.S. Department of Commerce, 1931) are estimated at 35,000,000 dollars, of which 29,466,000 dollars are direct investments, largely in the International Railways. British investors hold about £1,000,000 in Government securities and £800,000 in railway securities.

Defence.—The army is organized in 3 divisions of 12 infantry, 1 cavalry and 3 artillery regiments. In case of war, military service is compulsory from 18 to 50 years of age. The permanent armed force for 1929 was 3,000 men.

Production.—Salvador is predominantly agricultural. Eighty per cent. of its total area is under cultivation, probably the highest percentage in the world. But it is a one-crop country, coffee alone furnishing, in value, 88 per cent. of its exports in 1930. Total area devoted to coffee is about 203,600 acres, with some 118,800,000 trees; average output is 1,435,000 quintals, though the output varies considerably from year to year. Germany is the principal buyer. Exports in 1930, 58,622 metric tons. Other agricultural products are maize (averaging about 4,400,000 quintals), cacao, balsam (39,840 kilos exported in 1930), tobacco, indigo, henequén (913 metric tons exported in 1930), and sugar (exports, 1930, 5,762 tons). Livestock census of May, 1930, showed 43,133 horses, 23,236 asses and mules, 328,052 cattle, and 355,157 pigs. A little rubber is exported. In the national forests are found dye woods and such hard woods as mahogany, cedar, and walnut. Balsam trees also abound. The mineral wealth of the Republic includes gold, silver, coal, copper, iron, lead, zinc, sulphur and mercury, but mining operations languish.

Commerce.—The imports (subject to duty) and the exports have been as follows in five years (2 colones = 1 dollar, U.S.; 9·72 colones = 1£):—

—	1926	1927	1928	1929	1930
	Colones	Colones	Colones	Colones	Colones
Imports . . . .	51,515,598	23,570,000	37,804,000	34,681,000	24,872,000
Exports . . . .	49,272,232	28,304,337	48,927,719	36,831,000	27,313,000

The trade is chiefly with the United States, the United Kingdom, and France. Import figures include usually about 2,000,000 colones in coined gold from the United States. The chief imports are cottons, hardware, flour, drugs and chemical products. The chief exports are coffee, henequén, and balsam.

∴ Total trade between Salvador and the U.K. (Board of Trade Returns) for 5 years:—

—	1927	1928	1929	1930	1931
	£	£	£	£	£
Imports from Salvador to U. K. .	47,174	28,166	31,802	12,231	14,784
Exports to Salvador from U. K. .	376,319	503,232	480,294	340,573	223,012
Re-exports to Salvador from U. K.	4,056	4,129	3,409	3,644	1,428

Shipping and Communications.—Cutuco is the principal port, handling 57 per cent. of imports and 31 per cent. of the exports.

A British-owned railway connects the port of Acajutla with Santa Ana and La Ceiba; with this system San Salvador, the capital, is connected—a distance of 65 miles. Another line (the American-owned International Railways of Central America) runs from the eastern to the western boundary of Salvador, and extends into Guatemala to Guatemala City and Puerto Barrios on the north coast. The line from Mega to the capital with its extension has a total length of 156 miles. Another short railway connects the capital with Santa Tecla. Total length of railway open, about 330 miles, all of narrow gauge. There are 1,476 miles of national road in the Republic, including a fine highway completed in 1926 between San Salvador and La Libertad and one from Santa Ana to the Guatemalan frontier. Of these, 353 miles are suitable for motors. In 1928 an airplane service was established between San Salvador, Guatemala City and other Central American points.

In 1929, there were 202 post offices, which handled 1,525,593 letters and 148,372 post-cards in the internal service, and received from abroad 1,700,029 letters and 255,530 post-cards; and 256 telegraph offices, 275 telephone-exchanges and 3,701 instruments. A radio transmitting and receiving station at San Salvador maintains communications with Latin America. The All-America Cables maintain a station at San Salvador.

Money, Weights and Measures.

MONEY.

There are 3 banks of issue, the Banco Salvadoreño (paid-up capital, 4,000,000 colones), Banco Occidental (paid-up capital, 6,000,000 colones), and Banco Agricola Commercial (paid-up capital, 1,560,000 colones), making a total of 11,560,000 colones. On March 31, 1931, they had notes in circulation to the value of 11,633,694 colones, with a gold cover amounting to 3,573,563 colones. Under the law of July 30, 1928, their note circulation may be increased up to 25,631,000 colones, providing it is backed by 40 per cent. in gold and 60 per cent. in commercial paper approved by the Government.

According to the law of July 16, 1920, the monetary unit of Salvador is the colon, a coin containing 836 milligrams of gold .900 fine, and equal in value to 50 cents (United States currency). The colon, which represents 100 centavos, is issued in denominations of 5, 10, 20, and 40 colones. Auxiliary silver coins are minted in small denominations up to 12½, 20, 50, and 100 centavos each; the popular 12½ centavo piece is known as the 'real'; nickel coins in denominations of 1, 3, 5, and 10 centavos each are also issued. The coinage of silver is limited to 10 per cent of the total fiduciary circulation, and that of nickel to 5 per cent.

National gold coins and gold coins of the United States of all denominations are unlimited legal tender, the United States coins having a fixed value of 2 colones to the dollar. Other foreign money is not legal tender. National and United States silver coins are legal tender up to 10 per cent. of each payment, and national nickel coins in amounts up to 2 per cent. of each payment.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Quintal	.	= 104.3 lbs. av.		Fanega	.	= 1.5745 bushels.

The legislative power of the Republic is vested in the Grand Council of 60 members elected by popular vote, a third of whom are renewable every three years, and two of whom are appointed every six months to act as Regents (Capitani reggenti). The regents exercise executive power, assisted by various nominated congresses, viz., Congresso Economico di Stato, Congresso dei Legali, Congresso degli Studi, Congresso militare. The administration of justice is under magistrates, who are Italian citizens. There are several elementary schools and one high school, the diplomas of which are recognized by Italian universities.

The frontier line is 24 miles in length, area is 88 square miles, and population (December 1928) 13,013.

The revenue and expenditure for 1928-29 balanced at 4,053,072 lire, and the Financial Estimates for 1929-30 at 3,592,180 lire. There is no public debt. The militia consists of all able-bodied citizens between the ages of 16 and 55, with the exception of teachers and students. The chief exports are wine, cattle, and the building stone quarried on Mount Titano. Italian and Vatican City currency is in general use, but the Republic issues separate postage stamps. An electric railway from Rimini to the city of San Marino is under construction, and is expected to be completed by 1931.

SIAM.

(SAYAM, OR MUANG-THAI.)

SIAM is called by its inhabitants Thai, which means 'free,' or Muang-Thai, 'the land of the free.' The word Siam is probably identical with Shan, applied in Burma to the Lao race, as well as to the Shan proper and the Siamese.

Reigning King.

Prajadhipok, born November 8, 1893, succeeded to the throne on the death of his brother, Rama VI., on November 26, 1925, being the seventh monarch of the present reigning dynasty.

Government.

The Constitution of Siam is an absolute monarchy. In theory the King is the supreme power of the land. He appoints the Ministers of State and all high dignitaries who hold office at his pleasure. There is no party Government or parliament. The King is his own Prime Minister. In practice he consults the Supreme Council and the Cabinet.

The Supreme Council is an advisory body created by the present King at the beginning of his reign, and consists of persons of wide experience and high character who possess the confidence of the country. It is presided over by the King and meets once a week. Questions of general policy as well as matters which affect the King personally and the Royal Family are considered in the Council. The present members of the Supreme Council are:—H. R. H. the Prince of Nagara Svarga, H. R. H. Prince Narisra, H. R. H. Prince Damrong, H. R. H. the Prince of Kambaeng Bejra, and H. H. Prince Devawongs.

The Cabinet consists of the heads of the various departments of State. It is presided over by the King and also meets once a week. Questions of policy and legislation are considered in the Cabinet, the meetings of which are also attended by the members of the Supreme Council. The present members of the Cabinet are :—

Minister of the Interior.—H. R. H. the Prince of Nagara Svarga.

Minister of Commerce and Communications.—H. R. H. the Prince of Kamphaeng Bejra.

Minister of Defence.—H. R. H. the Prince of Sinha.

Minister of Foreign Affairs.—H. H. Prince Devawongs.

Minister of Public Instruction.—H. H. Prince Dhani.

Minister of Lands and Agriculture.—H. E. Chao Phya Bijayati.

Minister of the Royal Household.—H. E. Chao Phya Varabongs.

Minister of Justice.—H. E. Chao Phya Sridharina Dhibes.

Minister of Finance.—H. E. Phya Komarakul Montri.

In September, 1927, the old Privy Council Act of 1874 was repealed and a new Privy Council created. The purpose of the Privy Council is to give the King the benefit of the opinion and advice on matters of State of a considerable number of citizens of ability and experience.

All Privy Councillors are appointed by the King and hold office to the end of the reign and for a period of six months thereafter.

The advisory duties of the Privy Council are exercised through a special Committee of forty members appointed by the King. This Committee discusses and advises on all matters which the King submits to it for consideration. Any five members of the Committee may, through the President of the Committee, call the King's attention to any matter affecting the welfare of the country and request Royal permission for the matter to be discussed by the Committee.

Each member of the Committee has one vote, and all questions are decided by a majority vote.

The Siamese dominions are divided, as from April 1, 1926, into 14 circles (Monthons), of which 13 have each a Lord-Lieutenant, deriving authority direct from the King, and having under him subordinate governors over the various parts of his circle. The circle of Bangkok (which includes the capital) is under the control of a Lord Prefect. The 14 circles are subdivided into 79 provinces (Changwats), 406 districts (Ampurs), 58 sub-districts (King-Ampurs), and 5,045 communes (Tambons).

A treaty for a modification of British extra-territorial rights in Siam and for the cession of the Siamese tributary States of Kelantan, Trengannu and Kedah to Great Britain was signed at Bangkok on March 10, 1909. All the old commercial treaties which granted extra-territorial rights and imposed limitations upon customs tariffs have been revised. Siam now possesses full jurisdictional and fiscal autonomy, subject to certain temporary limitations. The list of these new treaties and the date of the ratifications are as follows : United States of America, September 1, 1921 ; Japan, December 29, 1924 ; France, January 12, 1926 ; Denmark, March 28, 1926 ; Great Britain, March 30, 1926 ; Spain, July 28, 1926 ; The Netherlands, August 24, 1926 ; Portugal, August 30, 1926 ; Sweden, October 25, 1926 ; Norway, February 9, 1927 ; Italy, March 18, 1927 ; Belgium-Luxemburg, March 25, 1927. A treaty of friendship and commerce between Germany and Siam was ratified on October 24, 1928. All the rights and obligations under this treaty are reciprocal and are on terms of equality.

Area and Population.

The area of Siam is 200,234 square miles, about 45,000 being in the Malay Peninsula. The first detailed census in Siam was taken in 1905, but included only 12 of the circles or Monthona. The first census of the whole country was taken in 1909.

The census taken on July 15, 1929, gave a population of 11,506,207 (as compared with 9,207,355 at the census taken on April 1, 1919), of whom 5,795,065 were males, and 5,711,142 females. Of the former, 2,909,750 were under 21 years of age. The estimated population on March 31, 1930, was 11,684,000 (5,888,000 males and 5,796,000 females). The following table gives the details of the last census for each circle:—

The population of Siam, according to the census for 1929, was made up as follows: Siamese, 10,493,304; Chinese, 445,274; Indians and Malays, 379,618; Cambodians, 60,668; Annamites, 5,321; Shans, 27,505; Burmese, 4,880; Europeans and Americans, 1,920; Japanese, 295; others, 87,422.

Religion and Education.

The prevailing religion is Buddhism. In 1929-30 there were 10,958,426 Buddhists, 498,311 Mohammedans, and 49,462 Christians. On March 31, 1930, there were 16,571 Buddhist temples, and 127,057 priests.

The Minister of Public Instruction is responsible for education throughout the country, with the exception of certain Departmental Schools, such as the Military, Naval, Law Colleges, and the Police School. The Department of Ecclesiastical Affairs is now under the Ministry.

Elementary education is compulsory, except in the capital, and in the majority of schools, free.

On March 31, 1930, Government schools numbered 613, with 38,353 pupils and 1,891 teachers. There were also 29 Government Provincial Teachers' Training Schools, with 1,927 pupils and 118 teachers. Local schools, run by the local authority, but under departmental inspection, numbered in 1930, 4,923, with 570,710 pupils (of whom over 89 per cent. were girls), and 11,683 teachers. Private schools numbered 961 with 43,271 pupils, and 1,951 teachers, including schools connected with American, French, and English Missions. Over 82 per cent. of local schools and 29 per cent. of the Government Schools are situated in the monasteries.

The Chulalankarana University, inaugurated at Bangkok in 1917, is composed of three Faculties (Medicine, Arts and Science, and Engineering).

In 1928-29 the Education Department spent 133,241*l.* on education.

The principal sources of revenue were as follows:—

<sup>2</sup> Estimates.

On March 31, 1931, the National Debt amounted to 11,256,131l. (11,384,671l. on March 31, 1930), made up as follows:—

£585,440 of the £1,000,000	stg.	4½% loan 1905.

£3,000,000 „ £3,000,000	stg.	6% loan 1924.

Up to March 31, 1930, the capital expenditure on works of development was: construction of railways, £14,322,366; irrigation, £2,739,969; Bangkok waterworks, £500,837.

For the last four years capital expenditure on the above objects has been financed from ordinary revenue by means of a lump provision for the 'Avoidance of Debt.' The above is exclusive of expenditure on development debited direct to revenue; for example, in the year 1928-29 a sum of 300,000l. was spent on roads.

Defence.

Under the Military Service Act of 1917 every able-bodied man is liable to serve two years with the colours; seven years in the first reserve, with a maximum service of two months per annum; ten years in the second reserve, with a maximum service of 30 days per annum; six years in the third reserve.

The army is organized in 2 Army Commands, each of 2 divisions, 1 cavalry regiment and 1 regiment of engineers. Each division consists of 2 regiments of infantry (3 battalions each), 1 regiment of artillery (2 groups), and 1 Medical Unit.

Aviation schools were started in 1914, and a Flying Corps has been formed. It is chiefly employed in the development of civil aviation. Ten military tanks have recently been added to the military forces.

Siam maintains a small naval force, which consists of five gunboats, three destroyers, four torpedo-boats, the Royal yacht Maha Chakri, and various small craft ; the ex-British sloop Havant, renamed Chow Phryya, serves as a sea-going training ship. There are 4,800 officers and men on the active list, besides a reserve of 20,000.

At the mouth of the Mēnam River are the Paknam forts. The bar prevents ships of more than 13 feet draught from ascending to Bangkok. The naval arsenal dock has recently been reconstructed.

Expenditure on Defence for 1930-31 is estimated at 12,626,000 ticals for the army ; 4,545,000 ticals for the navy ; 4,000,000 ticals for the air services ; total, 21,171,000 ticals.

Production and Industry.

According to the 1929 census 83·05 per cent. of the occupied persons (7,519,757) were engaged in agriculture, 1·10 per cent. in fishery, 2·19 per cent. in industrial pursuits.

In the year 1916, the Government started work on that portion of the comprehensive scheme for the irrigation of the Central Plain, known as the South Prasak Canal Project. The works were completed in 1922. The following are the percentages of the areas protected, approximately 100,000 hectares which received direct irrigation in the years following the completion of the project :—1923, 45 per cent., 1924, 59 per cent., 1925, 60 per cent., 1926, 66 per cent., 1927, 67 per cent., 1928, 73 per cent., 1929, 75 per cent., 1930, 80 per cent.

A conservation and drainage scheme which is complementary to the Prasak South Canal Project, known as the Jiengrak and Bang Hia Drainage Project, was completed in 1931. This project and another which aims at bringing the Nakorn Nayok River under control, in combination with the Prasak South Canal Project, will protect practically the whole of the Central Plain from Ayuthia to the Sea, lying on the east bank of the Menam Chao Phya, an area comprising approximately 450,000 hectares.

Work on the scheme which lies to the west of the Menam Chao Phya, the Suphan River Inundation Scheme has also been started. The scheme is being completed by sections, and in the year 1927 irrigation was commenced from the 3rd or lowest regulator. In that year and the two following years, 1928 and 1929, water supply conditions were distinctly poor, and the irrigation works were the means of maturing large areas of rice crops which without their aid would have failed. The Suphan Scheme, however, will not give the desired results until the head reach of the river at its off-take from the Menam Chao Phya has been remodelled, and regulated, and works in this connection are being pushed on as speedily as possible.

Schemes are also in hand for the improvement of irrigation facilities in the Northern Province of the Kingdom, Monthon Payab.

The chief produce of the country is rice, which forms the national food and the staple article of export. The figures of the rice crop for the past three years are as follows : 1928-29, area, 7,123,828 acres, yield, 3,851,354 tons ; 1929-30, area, 6,112,084 acres, yield, 3,844,082 tons ; 1930-31, area, 7,273,796 acres, yield, 4,787,997 tons. In Bangkok and district there are some 75 rice mills, and about 700 in the Provinces.

The harvested area and yield of certain other crops in 1930-31 was as follows :—para-rubber, 98,162 acres, 103,375 piculs ; coconuts, 69,785 acres, 128,923,642 nuts ; tobacco, 21,444 acres, 79,000 piculs ; pepper, 3,798 acres, 88,925 piculs.

The live-stock on March 31, 1931, consisted of 9,582 elephants, 303,451 horses and ponies, 4,773,551 bullocks, and 4,739,019 buffaloes.

Much of Upper Siam is dense forest, and the cutting of teak is an important industry, almost entirely in British hands. Siam teak wood is mainly produced in the north of Siam, the dry logs being floated by river to Bangkok during the rainy months of the year. In 1929-30 the exports of teak amounted to 66,085 tons, valued at 885,299 $\frac{1}{2}$ . The forests are under the control of the Siamese Chief Conservator, aided by some British officers. Planting of rubber trees is proceeding in the Malay Peninsula, exports of rubber and rubber waste for the year 1930-31 being 4,410,674 kilogrammes valued at 118,899 $\frac{1}{2}$ .

The mineral resources of Siam are extensive and varied, including tin, tungsten, coal and iron, zinc, manganese, antimony, lead, copper, molybdenum, rubies, sapphires and silver. Tin mining is carried on in all the Southern or Peninsula circles of the Siamese portion of the Malay Peninsula and in the Rajaburi circle. The total output of metallic tin in 1925-26 was 132,078 piculs; in 1926-27, 123,275 piculs; in 1927-28, 131,323 piculs; in 1928-29, 143,165 piculs; in 1929-30, 184,948 piculs.

Shipping and Communications.

In 1930-31, 897 vessels of 1,036,637 tons entered, and 902 of 1,043,543 tons cleared the port of Bangkok. Of those entering 241 of 321,329 tons and of those clearing 245 of 325,004 tons were British.

On March 31, 1930, there were 2,918 kilometres (1,812 miles) of State Railways open to traffic and 155 kilometres (96 miles) were under construction. The Northern Line runs from Ban Paji to Chiangmai (414 miles), the extreme northern terminus. The Southern Line (743 miles) runs from Bangkok down the Peninsula to the frontier station of Padang Besar, where it connects with the Federated Malay States Railway from Penang, and to Singapore. Another line branching off from Haad Yai runs along the East Coast of the Peninsula to Sungei Golok, where it connects with the Federated Malay States Line. There are branches to Singora, Nakorn, Sritamaraj and Kantang. The North-Eastern Line (164 miles) is being extended from Korat to Khonkaen, the first section, from Korat to Nohn Wat (29 km.), being already open to traffic. The Korat-Ubol Line has now been completed and opened to traffic to Warindra, the station for Ubol. The line to Khon Kaen is expected to be ready before 1933. The extension from Krabinburi, the present terminus of the Eastern Line, to Aranya Pradesa on the Cambodian frontier was completed in 1927. Since January 1922, a through express service between Bangkok and Penang has been introduced, the distance being traversed in 31½ hours. A similar service between Bangkok and Chiangmai on the Northern Line was inaugurated in November, 1922, the journey being accomplished in 26 hours. The Northern and Southern Railway systems are linked together by means of a railway bridge over the Menam Chao Phya (opened January 1, 1927), and both systems terminate in the central railway station of Hua Lampong. All State Railways are under one management. Gross earnings of the State Railways in 1929-30 were 19,330,124 baht; working expenses, 8,203,928 baht; and net profit, 11,126,196 baht. The number of passengers carried was 6,303,410, and total goods carried 1,422,681 tons.

According to the report of Department of Ways for the year 1926-27, the length of state highways was 1,272 miles, of which 602 miles were under maintenance, 213 miles under improvement, and 457 miles under construction.

Private lines of an aggregate length of 66 miles include those (worked by companies) from Bangkok to Paknam at the mouth of the Menam, and from Bangkok to Tachin and Meklong on the coast to the west of the Menam, also from Thonburi to Bang Bua Thong, together with a tramway connecting the Northern Line (Northern branch) with Phrabat.

The following figures relate to civil aviation in 1929-30: length of routes opened, 512 miles; miles flown, 28,370; passengers transported, 149; merchandise transported, 16,802 metric tons.

In 1930-31 there were 798 post offices of which 352 were licensed or contract post offices, and 324 railway station offices. The volume of mail matter dealt with during the year aggregated approximately 16,000,000 pieces, which was an increase of 3,000,000 pieces over the previous year. The value of Inland Money Orders issued was more than 20,600,000 baht.

There were (1930-31) 718 telegraph offices, 308 of which were operated by the licensed post offices and 289 by the railway stations. Number of inland telegrams was 815,000. Length of line, 4,905 miles; length of wire, 8,251 miles (1929-30).

In 1930-31 there were 21 telephone exchanges, 17 of which were in the provinces. Subscribers numbered 2,191. Number of calls was 10,009,625.

Three wireless stations on the Telefunken system have been erected, one at Bangkok, one at Singora, and one at Koh-Khan. The two former are under the control of the Siamese naval authorities, the third under that of the Post and Telegraph Department.

A new high-powered station, also on the Telefunken system, has been erected at Bangkok, and was opened on Jan. 15, 1929.

Direct wireless communication on a commercial basis was established with Germany, England, France, Java, Philippine Islands and Hong Kong. The growth of the radio traffic since its transfer to the Ministry of Commerce and Communications was as follows: 798,465 words handled in 1930, and 799,853 in 1931.

Additional radio facilities for direct traffic with Europe, now being installed, consist of a beam transmitting station in Bangkok with a receiving station in Laksi.

Money, Weights and Measures.

In Bangkok there are branches of the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank, the Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China, the Banque de l'Indo-Chine, the Mercantile Bank of India, and the Bank of Canton. A number of Chinese Banks have established branches here during recent years. There is also a branch of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia and China at Bhuket. A Siamese bank, with a British manager, was established under Royal Charter in 1906, with the name of the Siam Commercial Bank, Limited. It now has branches at Chiangmai and Lampang in the northern province, and at Tungsong in the south of Siam.

On April 1, 1913, the Siamese Treasury Savings Bank was opened with 529 depositors. By March 31, 1930, the number was 13,682, with a total deposit of 245,787.

Under the Currency Act of May, 1928, the unit of currency is the baht, divided into one hundred satang. The baht is a silver coin like the tical (a word of foreign origin) which it replaces. It weighs 15 grammes 900 fine, and is equivalent to 0.66567 grammes of fine gold, corresponding to a rate of 11 bahts for 1*l.* sterling. This rate is maintained by the Government purchases and sales of foreign currency. Other silver coins are 50 satang and 25 satang pieces. The 10 and 5 satang pieces are nickel, and the 1 satang piece, bronze. Notes and baht coins are legal tender without limit as to amount; 5 and 25 satang pieces legal tender up to 5 baht, and nickel and bronze coins legal tender up to 1 baht.

The Government in 1902 began to issue currency notes (5, 10, 20, 100 and 1,000 ticals, and since October, 1918, 1 tical notes). On March 31, 1931, there were 10,038,488*l.* worth of currency notes in circulation; against these there was a reserve of 11,937,266*l.*, one third in silver coin and bullion, and the remainder in short term securities or cash, in London and New York.

On December 17, 1923, a law was passed for the introduction of the metric system as optional in 1925. The metric system has already been adopted in many of the Government departments and on State Railways. The actual weights and measures prescribed by law are: units of weight:—1 Standard Picul = 60 kilograms; 1 Standard Catty (1/100 Picul) = 600 grammes; 1 Standard Carat = 20 centigrammes. Units of length:—1 Sen = 40 metres; 1 Wah (1/20 Sen) = 2 metres; 1 Sawk (1/4 Wah) = 0.50 metre; 1 Keup (½ Sawk) = 0.25 metre. Units of square measure:—1 Rai (1 square Sen) = 1,600 sq. metres; 1 Ngan (1/4 Rai) = 400 sq. metres; 1 Sq. Wah (1/100 Ngan) = 4 sq. metres. Units of capacity:—1 Standard Kwien = 2,000 litres; 1 Standard Ban (1/2 Kwien) = 1,000 litres; 1 Standard Sat (1/50 Ban) = 20 litres; 1 Standard Tanan (1/20 Sat) = 1 litre.

SPAIN.

(ESPAÑA.)

A REPUBLIC was proclaimed in Spain on April 14, 1931.

Political unrest in Spain since the fall of the dictatorship of General Primo de Rivera in January 1930, and the subsequent government of General Berenguer, followed by the short-lived administration of Admiral Aznar at the head of a National Government formed with the object of hurriedly returning to a Constitutional Régime and thus save the Crown from immediate collapse, preceded the transformation of Spain from an ancient Monarchy to a young Republic.

For the first time for eight years elections were to be held, and the Municipal elections that took place on April 12, 1931, foreshadowed the downfall of the Monarchy. The overwhelming victory of Republicans and Socialists decided the long-restrained situation in less than twenty-four hours. On the evening of Tuesday, April 14, 1931, ex-King Alfonso XIII abandoned the Royal Palace at Madrid and made his way to France.

Upon the King's departure the Powers of State were surrendered by the last monarchical government unto the Revolutionary Committee, which on April 14, 1931, constituted a Provisional Republican Government (see STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK, 1931, page 1275).

General elections took place on June 28, 1931, to summon 'a Constituent Cortes' for the drafting of a Constitution and electing a President. The one-Chamber Parliament (Congress) sat for the first time on July 14, 1931. It is composed of 470 members, including three women, divided among the following parties:—Socialists, 117; Radical-Socialists, 59; Republicans of different branches, 184; Catalonians under Macià, 32; Agrarians and Basques (Catholics), 40; Independents, 16; Unclassified, 22.

The Constitution of the Republic was voted on December 9, 1931.

President of the Republic.—Niceto Alcalá Zamora y Torres; born July 6, 1877; elected December 10, 1931. Salary and allowance, 2,250,000 pesetas per annum.

Government and Constitution.

I. CENTRAL GOVERNMENT.

The Constitution of the second Spanish Republic contains the following fundamental principles:—That Spain shall be a democratic Republic of workers of all classes, organized in a régime of Liberty and Justice; that the Republic shall constitute an integral State consistent with the autonomy of the Municipalities and Regions; that it shall have no official religion, and that freedom of conscience shall be granted to all citizens; that all citizens are equal before the law; that Castilian (Spanish) is the official language, and that no citizen can be compelled to know or make use of a provincial language, except with the limitations set forth on the Statutes of the Regions. Spain renounces warfare as an instrument of national politics. The colours of the Republic are red, yellow and purple. The capital of the Republic is Madrid.

The legislative power rests with the people who exercise it by means of the Cortes (single chamber) or Congress of Deputies, who are elected for 4 years by universal suffrage, equal, direct and secret, on the system of proportional representation. All citizens over 23, without distinction of sex or civil status are eligible. Deputies, who are re-eligible indefinitely, are paid a salary of 1,000 pesetas per month besides travelling expenses. Electors, male or female, must be over 23.

Sixty days after the expiration of the mandate of the Cortes, or of its dissolution, new elections must take place, and the new Cortes shall sit thirty days as a maximum after the general elections are held. The Cortes will assemble without previous notification on the first law-day of February and October each year, and will sit at least during three months in the first period and two months in the latter. The Government and the Cortes have the initiative to make laws. The Cortes may authorize the Government to enact laws by decrees, on the recommendation of the Council of Ministers, on matters pertaining to the legislative power; with the limitation that such decrees can in no way refer to an increase of expenditures. The Cortes will appoint from its own body a Permanent Committee, composed of 21 representatives elected proportionately from the different parties and presided over by the Speaker, which will be entrusted with the suspension of public guarantees, the enacting of laws by decrees and the prosecution of members. The Cortes may propose a vote of censure on the Government or any of its Ministers, on the request of fifty of its members, but the Cabinet or the Minister in question is not obliged to resign in consequence unless the vote of censure is passed by an absolute majority of the Chamber. International agreements sanctioned by Spain and filed in the League of Nations, bearing on international law, are to be considered as constituting part of Spanish legislation; the government to produce before the Cortes in such cases the proper law for its adoption. The sanctioning of the laws voted by the Cortes can be submitted to a referendum, constituted by not less than 15 per cent. of the electors; but a referendum cannot affect the Constitution, the complementary laws, the ratification of International Agreements filed in the League of Nations, the Statutes of the Regions and the taxation laws. The people may also exercise their right of initiative in proposing laws to the Cortes, provided that the petition is made by 15 per cent. of the electors.

The President of the Republic is the Head of the State and personifies the Nation. He is elected conjointly by the Cortes and a number of 'compromisers' equal to that of Deputies. The 'compromisers' are elected by universal suffrage, equal, direct and secret. An additional clause in the Constitution prescribes that the Constituent Cortes shall elect the first President of the Republic by secret voting; an absolute majority of votes of all the Deputies in office being required for the proclamation.

The President of the Republic must be a Spanish citizen, over forty years, in full possession of his civil and political rights; the exceptions being military men in active service or on the retired list for not less than ten years, clergymen and ministers of the various churches and religions, members of reigning or ex-reigning families of any country whatsoever no matter how related to the head of such family. The President holds office for six years, and he cannot be re-elected until six years after the termination of his last mandate. The elections take place thirty days previous to the expiration of the presidential mandate. In case of absence or other causes his duties are to be assumed by the Speaker of the House, who in turn will be substituted in his duties by the Deputy-Speaker. Likewise, the Speaker of the House assumes office as President of the Republic in case of vacancy, and the election of the new President is to be convoked not beyond eight days, the elections to take place within the thirty succeeding days. The Cortes will maintain its powers, even if dissolved, for the exclusive purpose of the election of President.

The President appoints and dismisses the Premier and, upon the latter's recommendation, his Ministers. The President is empowered to declare War, but he can only sign the declaration under the conditions prescribed in the Covenant of the League of Nations, and after being authorised by a special law. He also issues decrees countersigned by his Ministers; ordains measures of urgency to safeguard the integrity of the Nation, upon immediate notification of his action to the Cortes, negotiates, signs and ratifies International Agreements, political and commercial treaties, as well as those bearing on the public treasury. In general, any Agreement calling for legislation unless sanctioned by the Cortes shall not bind the Nation in any way. The agreements entered with the International Labour Bureau are to be submitted to the Cortes within limited time, and after approval the President's ratification is to be communicated to the League of Nations for its proper filing. Other International Treaties and Covenants ratified by Spain shall also be filed in the League of Nations. Secret Treaties and clauses of a similar nature are not binding. In case of Spain's withdrawal from the League of Nations the President must be authorised by the Cortes before passing the notification of retirement. The President has the faculty of enacting laws by decree when the Cortes are not assembled, on the recommendation and by unanimous accord of the government and with the approval of two-thirds of the Permanent Committee, on momentous matters in defence of the Republic; such decrees to be only of a provisional character until such time as the Cortes have sanctioned them. The President may at all times convoke extraordinary Cortes. He can suspend the ordinary sessions during one month in the first period (February) and fifteen days in the second period (October). He can dissolve the Cortes not more than twice during his tenure of office, either by a justified decree or by convoking new elections within sixty days; a second dissolution must be examined by the new Cortes in its first sitting and an adverse voting by an absolute majority implies dismissal of the President.

The President can be dismissed at any time; sixty per cent. of the members constituting the Cortes are required for filing the demand, and from that moment the President ceases his functions until after the demand has been examined and voted upon.

The Constitution allows to all citizens freedom of opinions and ideas, but may hold these rights in suspense by a government decree in cases of impending danger to the Nation. If the Cortes are not assembled at the time, they are to be convoked within eight days. The suspension of constitutional rights cannot exceed thirty days; any extension of time must be previously authorized by the Cortes or the Permanent Committee.

A Tribunal of Constitutional Guaranty is created with jurisdiction over the entire Nation, whose duty it will be to decide on the unconstitutionality of the laws; the protection of individual rights; discrepancies arising in legislation between the State and the autonomous regions and among one another; the examination and approval of powers of the 'compromisers' chosen for the election of President; the responsibility incurred by the President of the Republic, the Premier and Ministers, the President and Magistrates of the Supreme Court and the Attorney-General. The Cortes will appoint the President of the Guaranty Tribunal, whether a deputy or not, and among other members there will be a representative for each region.

The Constitution may be reformed either on the recommendation of the Government, or when proposed by a quarter of the members of the Chamber; in both cases the proposal must determine the changes at issue, and to take in consideration the reform requires the vote of two-thirds of the Deputies during the first four years of constitutional régime and an absolute majority hereafter; the Cortes then automatically become dissolved and new elections must be convoked within sixty days. The new Parliament thus elected will act as Constituent Cortes to decide on the reform, and thereafter as ordinary Cortes.

Other main points incorporated in the new Constitution is the establishment of divorce; the legitimacy of the offspring of unmarried couples, and the rural problem affecting land and property.

The Government was constituted as follows on December 16, 1931:—

Prime Minister and Minister of War.—Don Manuel Azón y Díaz.

Minister of Foreign Affairs.—Don Luis Zulueta Escobedo.

Minister of Justice.—Don Alvaro de Albornoz y Liminiana.

Minister of Marine.—Don José Giral Pereira.

Minister of Finance.—Don Jaime Carner Romeu.

Minister of the Interior.—Don Santiago Casares Quiroga.

Minister of Education.—Don Fernando De Los Rios Urruti.

Minister of Public Works.—Don Indalecio Prieto y Tuelo.

Minister of Labour.—Don Francisco Largo Caballero.

Minister of Agriculture.—Don Marcelino Domingo Sanjuan.

Minister of Communications.—Don Santiago Casares Quiroga (pro tem.).

II. LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

The provinces are constituted by the association of Municipalities; Spanish dominions in Northern Africa will be organized under the autonomous principle in direct relation with the central government. All Municipalities will be autonomous in their respective spheres, and they will elect their Ayuntamiento, by universal suffrage, equal, direct and secret, which will be presided over by the Alcalde, elected from its own body, at whose side stand, in the larger towns, several Tenientes de Alcalde. Each island of the Canaries will have a corporation known as Cabildo Insular, to rule their special interests; the Balearic Islands may adopt a similar régime. Each province of Spain has its own Assembly, the Diputacion Provincial, the members of which are elected by the constituencies; the administration of the Diputaciones Provinciales is being radically reformed with the Republic.

The different regions in Spain have submitted to the Republican Government the autonomous principle, which the Constitution has embodied as follows: If one or more neighbouring provinces possessing similar historical and economical characteristics decide to form an autonomous region, consistent with the Spanish Nation, they will file their petition to the central government by means of a Statute, which must be passed for its proposal by the majority of Municipalities in the area. The approval of a Regional Statute requires the votes of at least two-thirds of the electors inscribed in the Census; in case of an adverse plebiscite five years must elapse before renewing the proposal of autonomy. The Statute can only come in force when approved by the Cortes. The federation of autonomous regions is in no way admitted. The Constitution excludes from the domain of the autonomous regions the following matters which the Central Government alone may deal with: the nationalisation of citizens and adherence to constitutional rights; Church legislation; diplomatic and consular representation; declaration of war, treaties of peace and in general international intercourse; defence of public surety; national debt; army, navy and national defence; tariff reform and commercial treaties; nationalisation of ships; extradition laws; jurisdiction of the Supreme Tribunal; finance laws regulated by the State; system of communications controlled by the State, post and telegraphs, airways, etc.

Any province forming part of an autonomous region may renounce its autonomous régime and return to the provincial régime by a similar plebiscite as that required when soliciting the autonomy.

Area and Population.

Continental Spain has an area of 190,050 square miles, but including the Balearic and Canary Islands, the total area is 196,607 square miles. The growth of the population has been as follows:—

The population of Ceuta (38,165) is included in that of Cádiz. Besides Ceuta, Spain has, on the African Coast, the Alhucema isles (pop. 322), the Chafarinas (320), Melilla (60,580), Peñon de la Gomera (398), Rio de Oro (253), and Nador (2,890). The North African possessions are no longer used as convict stations, the centuries old 'Presidios' having been suppressed by a recent Decree and the prisoners brought back to the Peninsula.

By Decree of September 21, 1927, the islands which form the Canary Archipelago were divided into two provinces, under the name of their respective capitals: Santa Cruz de Tenerife and Las Palmas. The province of Santa Cruz de Tenerife is constituted by the islands of Tenerife, Palma, Gomera and Hierro; and that of Las Palmas by Gran Canaria, Lanzarote and Fuerteventura, with the small barren islands of Alegranza, Roque del Este, Roque del Oeste, Graciosa, Montaña Clara y Lobos.

The following were the estimated populations of the principal towns on December 31, 1930, viz. :—

Town	Pop.	Town	Pop.	Town	Pop.

Religion.

The new Republican Constitution in force (Dec. 9, 1931) declares that Spain has no official religion. The great majority of the population adhere to the Roman Catholic Faith. The Constitution guarantees liberty of worship and freedom of conscience. Religious bodies are now treated as Associations, to be governed by a special law. Cemeteries are placed under exclusive civil jurisdiction. The State will no longer support the clergy and the buildings, etc. of the Church. Religious orders who take the papal vote become dissolved and their properties and estates subject to nationalisation. The remaining orders are to be inscribed in a special register in charge of the Ministry of Justice; they are prohibited from buying property other than that intended for living and the practice of religion; prohibition of exercising industry, commerce or education; submission to taxation; obligation to render an annual account of their investments.

Within the Peninsula, apart from Portugal, there are 9 metropolitan sees, and 61 suffragan sees, the chief being Toledo, where the Primate resides. In 1929 there were in Spain 66 cathedrals, 22 collegiate churches, 20,458 parish churches, and 16,436 chapels and sanctuaries.

Education.

The latest census returns (1920) show that 46·28 per cent. of the population could read and write, 0·94 could read only, and 45·46 per cent. could neither read nor write. The remaining 7·32 per cent. corresponds to the infant population under 6 years.

The Constitution of the Republic ordains that primary education is to be compulsory and free. Education is to be lay, but the churches are authorized, under State inspection, to teach their respective doctrines in their own schools.

The country is divided into eleven educational districts, with the universities as centres. The total sum spent in 1929 was 128,571,608 pesetas.

In 1929, there were 27,883 public schools, and about 6,000 private schools, the total number of pupils being about 3,800,000. Secondary education is conducted in 'institutions,' or middle-class schools, and there must be at least one of them in every province. There were in the year 1929, 69 institutions with 63,396 pupils (8,399 girls). These institutions prepare for the universities, of which there are eleven, attended by 45,463 students (4,067 women). The universities are at Barcelona, Granada, Madrid, Murcia, Oviedo, Salamanca, Santiago, Sevilla, Valencia, Valladolid, and Zaragoza. There are, besides, a medical and science faculty at Cádiz in connection with the University of Seville, and in the Canary Islands an educational establishment dependent on the University of Seville. In 1929 the total sum expended on education and the fine arts was 197,289,711 pesetas.

Justice and Crime.

Justice is administered by Tribunales and Juzgados (Tribunals and Courts), which conjointly form the Poder Judicial (Judicial Power). Judges and Magistrates cannot be removed, suspended or transferred except as set forth by law.

The Judicature is composed of:—1 Tribunal Supremo (Supreme High Court); 15 Audiencias Territoriales (Divisional High Courts); 50 Audiencias Provinciales (Provincial High Courts); 522 Juzgados de Primera Instancia (Courts of First Instance); and 9,310 Juzgados Municipales (District Court, or Court of Lowest Jurisdiction held by Justices of the Peace).

The Tribunal Supremo consists of a President, the new Constitution enacts that the appointment is to be made by the President of the Republic, three Courts of Justice and one for administrative purposes; it is empowered with disciplinary faculties; is Court of Cassation in civil and criminal trials; decides in first and second instance disputes arising between private individuals and the State.

The Audiencias Territoriales have power to try in second instance sentences passed by judges in civil matters, and in first instance all criminal trials of the province.

The Audiencias Provinciales are Courts competent to try and pass sentence in first instance on all cases filed for delinquency. The Republic has reinstated the jury system, which was suppressed during the Dictatorship.

The Juzgados Municipales are constituted of a Judge and two Deputy Judges. This Court is competent to try small civil cases not exceeding 20,000 pesetas (£800) in value, and petty offences.

On July 1, 1925, the 'Court of Minors' (Tribunal de Niños) was established for trying cases of delinquency of boys and girls from 9 to 18 years of age.

Old Age Pensions and Social Insurance.

By a law dated February 27th, 1908, the 'Instituto Nacional de Prevision' was created for the purpose of granting Old Age Pensions, and administering a system of social insurance. ### ARMY.

Military service in Spain is compulsory. The total term of service is for 18 years. The law in force (Decree of February 20, 1925) provides for active service in the army to be normally for 2 years. Exemptions are more frequent than formerly.

The army has undergone a radical change under the Republic. Thirty-seven infantry regiments have been suppressed, the rank of captain-general has been abolished and all lieutenant-generals, with one or two exceptions, have been placed on the retired list.

The new organization consists of three High Inspections, under Major-Generals, stationed at Madrid. The army in times of peace will comprise eight divisions distributed over the different provinces, a division of Cavalry in Madrid, and the forces in the Balearic and Canary Islands, besides the Military Command in Africa.

A division consists of two infantry brigades, each comprising two regiments of two battalions; a squadron of cavalry; a brigade of artillery, with two regiments; a battalion of engineers (sappers), with two technical sections; a squadron of aviation with an observation unit; artillery park; sanitary, veterinary and administrative groups.

A division of cavalry consists of three cavalry brigades, each of three regiments; a regiment of artillery, an aviation squadron for observation; cyclist and automobile groups; sanitary and veterinary sections.

The forces in Balears are composed of 2 infantry regiments, a regiment of coast artillery and a mixed group; two mixed groups of sappers and telegraphy; sanitary and administrative sections.

In the Canary Islands there are two regiments of infantry; two mixed groups of artillery; two mixed groups of sappers and telegraphy; sanitary and administrative sections.

Morocco is divided into two military districts, each formed of two infantry regiments, two sections of cyclists; the Foreign Legion; two sections of cavalry; a battalion of engineers, with radiotelegraphy and automobile groups; two groups of aviation; two marine companies; three groups of native troops with three infantry 'tabors,' and one of cavalry.

The total number of generals in active service is 84; chiefs and officers, 9,661; non-commissioned officers, 1,338; sergeants, 5,811; corporals, 12,262; musicians, 1,275; soldiers, 105,367. In Africa there are 3 generals; 2,125 chiefs and officers, and 45,186 of other ranks and soldiers, of which 9,080 are natives and 6000 belong to the Foreign Legion.

There are also the Guardia Civil and the Carabineros. The former is a constabulary, and the latter a military police used as Customs guard on the frontier. Both are recruited from the army and under military discipline. The actual strength of the Guardia Civil is 22,499; cavalry, 5,318. Carabineros: infantry, 14,530; cavalry, 333.

In 1930-31, 45,076 recruits were called to the colours.

Spain has several fortresses which guard the frontiers and the coast. On the Western Pyrenees, Oyarzun and Pamplona; on the central Pyrenees Jaca; and on the eastern Pyrenees, Gerona; on the Portuguese side, Badajoz (an old fortification); and finally on the coast, Ferrol, Cádiz, Cartagena, Mahon (Balearic Islands) and Ceuta (Africa). The military estimates for 1931 amounted to 181,301,251 pesetas.

Shipping and Navigation.

The merchant navy of the Kingdom contained on January 1, 1930, 1,246 steamers of 1,169,031 tons net, and 466 sailing vessels of 62,881 tons net. Barcelona, Bilbao and Cadiz are the chief maritime centres.

The shipping entered and cleared at Spanish ports in two years was as follows:—

Of the vessels entered in 1928, 9,322 vessels of 10,016,815 tons (entered) were Spanish and 7,774 vessels of 8,617,989 tons (cleared) were Spanish.

Internal Communications.

In 1925 the total length of highways and roads in Spain was 86,988 kilometres (53,932 miles). In 1930 2,600 kilometres of new motor roads were completed.

The total length of the railways in Spain in 1929 was 16,317 kilometres (10,138 miles), of which 11,798 kilometres (7,331 miles) are of normal gauge (1·67 metres, or 5·48 feet), and 4,519 kilometres (2,808 miles) are of varying gauges, chiefly 1 metre (3·28 feet). The official gauge of the principal Spanish railways has hitherto, for strategic reasons, been purposely kept different from that of France, and in consequence of this passengers are obliged to change trains at the frontier stations. The attempt made in 1882 to remedy this state of affairs was not successful.

In 1928 the total length of tramways in Spain was 1,211 kilometres (757 miles).

The whole of the Spanish railways belongs to private companies, but nearly all have obtained guarantees or subventions from the Government. The State tax on tickets and merchandise for the year 1929 amounted to 66,989,095 pesetas. There are 29 companies of normal gauge and 57 of narrow gauge, the most important being those in the North, with 3,762 kilometres (2,337 miles); Madrid-Saragossa-Alicante (system Antigua and Catalana), 3,675 kilometres (2,205 miles); Andaluces, 1,305 kilometres (783 miles); Madrid-Caceres-Portugal and West, 777 kilometres (487 miles); South of Spain, 397 kilometres (238 miles); La Robla to Valmaseda and Luchana (narrow gauge), 312 kilometres (187 miles); Medina-Zamora-Orense and Vigo, 299 kilometres (199 miles); and Calatayud-Teruel-Valencia (Central de Aragon), 299 kilometres (199 miles). A scheme was approved by the Government in July, 1929, for the electrification of the main lines of Spanish railways.

The Post Office carried in 1929, in the inland service, 608,277,574 correspondence of all classes; in the international service, 149,455,483 correspondence in general. There were 10,456 post-offices. Receipts, 94,809,600 pesetas; expenses, 65,617,700 pesetas.

The length of lines of telegraphs in Spain in 1929 was 52,648 kms.; the total number of interior messages sent and received (1929) was 20,377,433. International messages sent 1,945,132, received 1,849,221, transit 362,490. The number of telegraph offices was 2,896.

In October, 1924, the entire telephone system of Spain was taken over by the 'International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation' of New York, and a Spanish Company constituted 'Compañía Telefonica Nacional de España,' whose purpose will be to provide an automatic service throughout the urban system. On December 29, 1926, this service was inaugurated in Madrid, and the system is being rapidly installed all over the country. In 1929 there were in service 2,280 exchanges, with 174,059 telephones. Number of interurban and international calls, 10,125,471; number of telephone messages, 4,552,483.

The 'Compañía Nacional de Telegrafía sin Hilos' holds the Government concession for the Public Service with ships, and between the Peninsula and the Canary Islands, and the International Service with England, Italy, Austria, France, Switzerland, America and Germany, as well as various special Press Services. They have 10 wireless stations of the Marconi system.

The republican Government has cancelled the airway concession, and the State operates at present the two lines: Madrid-Barcelona and Madrid-Seville; the line to Biarritz is now suspended. Barcelona-Cadiz or Huelva-Canaries Air Mail Service is to be inaugurated in 1932. From the Canary Islands the mails will be taken by steamer to Pernambuco and thence to Rio and Buenos Aires by aeroplane. In addition to this, there is the 'Union Aerea Española,' who operate between Madrid-Lisbon-Seville, but the service is at present suspended. The formation of a new company is also announced, called Líneas Aereas Interinsulares Canarias, which will run a service between Las Palmas and Santa Cruz de Tenerife. Two services will run daily in each direction. The capacity will be 12 passengers and 2 tons of cargo. There is also the French line from Toulouse to Casa-blanca, which touches Spain at Alicante.

Banking and Credit.

On January 1, 1922, a contract between the Bank of Spain and the Government came into force, according to which the Government participates in the net profits of the Bank, up to certain limits. The note issue was prorogued for another 25 years, up to December 31, 1946. The capital of the Bank was increased from 150,000,000 pesetas to 177,000,000 pesetas. The Bank is now authorized further to increase the capital, up to the limit of 250,000,000 pesetas.

On February 6, 1932, the position of the Bank was as follows:—

	1,000 Pesetas		1,000 Pesetas

Savings bank deposits (Post Office and Ordinary) in Spain, December 31, 1929, amounted to 1,703,181,939 pesetas, distributed over 1,827,396 accounts. Post Office Savings Banks, which were created under the law of June 4, 1909, were opened on March 12, 1916. On December 31, 1929, there were 874,954 current accounts, representing 251,663,896 pesetas. Including the figures of the banks and such credit institutes as have Savings Departments, the total number of depositors on December 31, 1929, was 3,091,667, and the amount standing to their credit, 3,020,359,161 pesetas.

The nominal value of the money coined in Spain from 1868 to 1907 was : gold, 920,613,935 pesetas ; silver, 1,330,589,807 pesetas. In 1905-07 no gold was coined ; in 1906-07, no silver was coined. No coinage was struck during the years 1908 and 1909. In 1910, money coined to the value of 1,976,180 pesetas in 50 centimo pieces (silver) to replace money retired from circulation. In 1911, 286,843 pesetas of 50 centimo pieces were coined, as well as 60,286 pesetas of bronze centimo pieces. In 1913, 1,429,149 pieces of 1 centimo and 1,639,500 pieces of 2 centimos were coined. A new coin was put into circulation in 1925, consisting of a nickel piece representing 25 centimos ; 2,000,000 pesetas were struck, and 2,000,000 pesetas in 50 centimo pieces (silver) to replace money withdrawn from circulation. In 1927 the 2 pesetas coin was withdrawn from circulation.

Money, Weights, and Measures.

The Peseta of 100 Centimos is of the nominal value of a pre-war franc, 9½d., or 25·22 pesetas to the pound sterling. The exchange value of the peseta has not been restored to parity since the war.

Gold coins in use are 25, 20, 10, and 5-peseta pieces. Silver coins are 5-peseta, 2-peseta, 1-peseta, and 50-centimo pieces.

Both gold and silver coins are of the same weight and fineness as the corresponding pre-war French coins. Under a law of July 29, 1908, the Government is withdrawing from circulation the spurious 5-peseta pieces which had become common. Gold coinage is not in general circulation.

Theoretically, there is a double standard of value, gold and silver, the ratio being 15½ to 1. But of silver coins only the 5-peseta piece is legal tender, and the coinage of this is restricted.

On January 1, 1859, the metric system of weights and measures was introduced in Spain. But, besides these, the old weights and measures are still largely used. They are :—The Quintal = 220·4 lbs. avoirdupois ; the Libra = 1·014 lbs. avoirdupois ; the Arroba, for wine = 3½ imperial gallons ; for oil = 2½ imperial gallons ; the Square Vara = 1·09 vara = 1 yard ; the fanega = 1½ imperial bushel.

Colonies.

The area and population of the colonial possessions of Spain are approximately as follows:—

Colonial Possessions	Area: English square miles	Population
Possessions in Africa:
Rio de Oro and Adrar . . . . .	109,200	495
Ifni . . . . .	965	20,000

Spanish Morocco <sup>1</sup> . . . . .	7,700	600,000
Total, Africa . . . . .	128,696	784,341

For administrative purposes the Canary Islands are considered part of Spain. The area of the islands is 2,810 square miles, and their population 503,151.

Rio de Oro and Adrar stretch from the Wadi Draa 29° N. and 11° 4' W. to Cape Blanco 20° 46' N. and 17° 3' W. Politically there are three zones:—(1) Colony of Rio de Oro, 26° N. to 20° 46' N., an area of 65,500 square miles; (2) the Protectorate, between 27° 40' N. and 26° N. bordered on the east by 8° 40' W., an area of 34,700 square miles; (3) the occupied territory, between 27° 40' N. and the Wadi Draa, an area of about 9,000 square miles, settled by various treaties, 1900 to 1912. The Colonies are under the governorship of the Canary Islands, with a sub-governor resident at Rio de Oro. The capital of this colony is Villa Cisneros. There is no town called Rio de Oro, the name being applied to the arm of the sea and the colony generally. The budget for 1929 amounted to 6,947,274 pesetas. There is little or no agriculture. Fishing is the principal occupation of the inhabitants.

Ifni was ceded to Spain by Morocco in 1860. By the Franco-Spanish agreement of 1912 it extends along the West Coast of Morocco to the north of Wadi Draa, from Wad Nun on the south to Wad Bu Sedra on the north, and a distance of 15 miles inland from the coast. The occupation is purely nominal. Area, 965 square miles, population, 20,000. There are several small harbours and villages; the population is engaged in fishing, and in cultivating dates and garden produce.

The Spanish territory on the Gulf of Guinea extends from the Muni to the Campo river and the Cameroons, its eastern boundary being on the meridian of 11° 20' E. of Greenwich. The capital is Santa Isabel, in the Island of Fernando Po, with a population of 8,345. The principal mountain is known as the Pico de Santa Isabel, or Clarence Peak (9,185 feet). The island is considered one of the most fertile spots on the West Coast of Africa. The other possessions of Spain in the Gulf of Guinea comprise the Islands of Annobon ( $7\frac{1}{2}$  square miles), Little Elobey (22 acres), Great Elobey ( $\frac{1}{2}$  square mile) and Corisco ( $5\frac{1}{2}$  square miles), and the district of Rio Muni on the mainland (9,470 square miles), the principal town of which is Bata. The coast region is low and marshy and contains vast forests. The vegetation is luxuriant and at places along the coast there are Spanish, French, and English factories. But there are no harbours and the rivers are all inaccessible to vessels. The population of Fernando Poo is 20,873. There are about 250 to 300 Europeans in the island, about 30 of these being British. The population of Little Elobey is 222. Great Elobey is covered with bush; its population is 123. Corisco has a population of 1,438 and Annobon of 1,204, while the population of Rio Muni territory is estimated at 130 whites and 89,000 natives. All the colonies are under the control of a Governor-General, resident at Santa Isabel. A Sub-Governor is appointed to the district of Bata and another to the district of Elobey, which includes the Islands of Corisco and Annobon. The aborigines of Fernando Poo are called Bubis. Those of Elobey and Corisco are mostly of the Benga tribe, but like the people of Annobon they take the names of their respective islands. In Bata the Pamwes are the principal tribe. There are Catholic and American Presbyterian missions at work among the natives.

Constitution and Government.

The fundamental laws of the Kingdom of Sweden are:—1. The Constitution or Regerings-formen of June 6, 1809; 2. The amended regulations for the formation of the Diet of June 22, 1866 (modified by Acts passed in 1909–1929); 3. The law of royal succession of September 26, 1810; and 4. The law on the liberty of the Press of July 16, 1812. The King must be a member of the Lutheran Church. His Constitutional power is exercised in conjunction with the Council of State or (in legislation) in concert with the Diet, and every new law must have the assent of the crown. The right of imposing taxes is, however, vested in the Diet. This Diet, or Parliament of the realm, consists of two Chambers, both elected by the people. The First Chamber consists of 150 members. Their election takes place by the members of the 'Landstings,' or provincial representations, and electors of six towns, not represented in the 'Landstings.' The constituencies are 19, arranged in 8 groups, in one of which an election takes place in September every year. The manner of the election is proportional and regulated by a special election law. All members of the First Chamber must be above 35 years of age, and must have possessed for at least three years previous to the election either real property to the taxed value of 50,000 kronor or an annual income of 3,000 kronor. They are elected for the term of eight years. The Second Chamber consists of 230 members elected for 4 years by universal suffrage, every man and woman over 23 years of age, and not under legal disability, having the right to vote. The country is divided into 28 constituencies, in each of which one member is elected for every 230th part of the population of the Kingdom it contains. All men and women who are entitled to vote have the right to stand for election, but only in their own election areas. The method of election is proportional. The places to be given to the different groups of voting papers are decided according to the d'Hondt rule. The members of both Chambers obtain salaries, free of income tax, for their services, at the rate of 3,400 kr. (24 kr. a day) and 4,500 kr. (32 kr. a day) for members living in or outside the capital, for each ordinary session, or, in the case of an extra session, 24 or 32 kr. a day, besides travelling expenses. The salaries and travelling expenses of the deputies are paid out of the public purse.

The executive power is in the hands of the King, who acts under the advice of a Council of State, the head of which is the Prime Minister. The Ministry (Liberal Democratic), appointed on June 7, 1930, is composed as follows:—

Prime Minister.—C. G. Ekman.

Minister of Foreign Affairs.—S. G. F. Ramel.

Minister of Justice.—J. N. Gärde.

Minister of Defence.—A. W. Rundqvist (June 20, 1931).

Minister for Social Affairs.—A. S. E. Larsson.

Minister of Communications.—O. Jeppsson.

Minister of Finance.—F. T. Hamrin.

Minister of Education and Ecclesiastical Affairs.—N. S. Stadener.

Minister of Agriculture.—B. H. von Stockenström.

Minister of Commerce.—D. Hansen.

Ministers without Portfolio.—R. H. F. Gyllenswärd, A. E. V. Holmbäck.

All the members of the Council of State are responsible for the acts of the Government.

The second chamber, elected September, 1928: 73 Moderates, 27 of the Agrarian Party, 32 Liberals and members of the Liberal Democratic Party, 90 Socialists and 8 Communists. The upper chamber: 49 Moderates, 19 of the Agrarian Party, 26 Liberals and members of the Liberal Democratic Party, 56 Socialists, and 1 Communist.

The provincial administration is entrusted in Stockholm to a Governor, and in each of the 24 counties to a prefect, who is nominated by the King. As executive officers of the prefects there are 489 sub-bailiffs. The right of the people to regulate their own local affairs is based on the municipal laws of June 6, 1930. Each rural parish, and each town, forms a commune or municipality in which all men and women over 23 years of age, and not under legal disability, who have paid the local taxes for at least one of the preceding three years, are voters. In small communes and towns the parish or town assembly may itself decide on all questions of administration, police and communal economy. It may, however, elect a parish or town council to decide on the questions, and all communes with more than 1,500 inhabitants have to do so. These councils are named Kommunalfullmäktige in the country, and Stadsfullmäktige in the towns. Ecclesiastical affairs are in all communes with more than 5,000 inhabitants, dealt with by councils, named 'Kyrkofullmäktige.' Each county has a county council (Landsting) elected by men and women who enjoy municipal suffrage, and have completed their 27th year. Towns having a population of at least 50,000 are in their right to separate from the 'Landstings.' Towns which are administered separately by their municipal councils are Stockholm, Göteborg, Malmö, Norrköping, Helsingborg and Gävle. As in elections for the Diet, so in the elections of municipal representatives, of members of the 'Landstings,' &c., the method of election is proportional. Women are eligible for communal offices.

Area and Population.

I. PROGRESS AND PRESENT CONDITION.

The first census took place in 1749, and it was repeated at first every third year, and subsequently, after 1775, every fifth year. At present, a general census is taken every ten years, besides which there are annual calculations of the people.

With the exception of 30,247 Finns, 7,162 Lapps, and some thousands others, the Swedish population (1920) is entirely of the Scandinavian branch of the Aryan family.

On December 31, 1920, there were 22,811 foreigners in Sweden, including subjects of Finland 5,897, Germany 4,532, Norway 2,996, Denmark 2,730, Russia 1,885, the United States 1,072, the United Kingdom and Ireland 487, other states 3,212.

Religion and Education.

The mass of the population belong to the Lutheran Protestant Church, recognized as the State religion. There are 12 bishoprics (Uppsala being the metropolitan see) and 2,573 parishes at the beginning of 1931. At the census of 1920, the number of 'Evangelical Lutherans' was returned at 5,880,941, the Protestant Dissenters numbering, Baptists, 7,265, and Methodists, 5,452. Of other creeds, there were 3,425 Roman Catholics (under a Vicar Apostolic resident at Stockholm), 6,469 Jews, and 937 others. A few civil disabilities attach to those not of the national religion. The clergy are chiefly supported from the parishes and the proceeds of the Church lands.

The Kingdom has two universities, at Uppsala (founded in 1477) and Lund (founded in 1668), the former having 3,155 and the latter 2,313 students in the autumn of 1930. There are also a State faculty of medicine in Stockholm (founded in 1810), with 737 students, and private universities in Stockholm (founded in 1877), philosophical and law faculties, with 1,251 students, and Göteborg (founded in 1889), philosophical faculty, with 320 students. In Stockholm and Göteborg there are also academies of commerce. In 1930 there were 118 public secondary schools, with 31,680 pupils; 53 people's high schools, 4,219 pupils; 2 high and 8 elementary technical schools, about 3,400 pupils; military schools, navigation schools, agricultural schools, veterinary and other special schools; besides institutions and schools for the deaf mutes and the blind. Public elementary instruction is gratuitous and compulsory (since 1842), and children not attending schools under the supervision of the Government must furnish proofs of having been privately educated. The school age is 7 to 14 years. In 1929 there were in the elementary schools, 27,873 teachers and 672,823 pupils.

Justice and Crime.

The administration of justice is entirely independent of the Government. Two functionaries, the Justitie-Kansler, or Chancellor of Justice, and the Justitie-Ombudsman, or Attorney-General, exercise a control over the administration. The former, appointed by the King, acts also as a counsel for the Crown; while the latter, who is appointed by the Diet, has to extend a general supervision over all the courts of law. Since 1915 there is a Militia-Ombudsman, also appointed by the Diet, exercising a control over the military laws. The Kingdom, which possesses one Supreme Court of Judicature, is divided (beginning of 1931) into 3 high court districts and 207 district courts divisions, of which 88 are urban districts and 119 country districts.

In town these district courts (or courts of first instance) are held by the burgomaster and his assessors; in the country by a judge and 12 jurors—mostly peasant proprietors—the judge alone deciding, unless the jurors unanimously differ from him, when their decision prevails. In Sweden trial by jury only exists for affairs of the liberty of the Press.

Defence.

ARMY.

The military forces are recruited on the principle of universal service, but aided by a voluntarily enlisted personnel which forms the permanent cadres for training purposes. In June 1925 a new defence scheme was accepted by the Diet.

Liability to service commences at the age of 20, and lasts till the end of the 42nd year. The men belong to the first 'uppbåd' of the active army or Bevärning for 11 years; then for 4 years to the second 'uppbåd'; and finally for 8 years to the Landstorm. The initial period of training for the main part of the infantry is 90 days (150 days for 20 per cent. of the annual quota), 140 days for cavalry, artillery, and engineers. The infantry is called up for regimental training periods twice for 25 days each time (3 times for 20 per cent. of the annual quota). The cavalry, artillery and engineers have 2 training periods of 30 days.

The army is organized in 4 divisions, 1 brigade, the troops of Upper Norrland and of Gotland. In the eastern division there is 1 supplementary brigade. There are 22 infantry, 4 cavalry and 9 artillery regiments (corps). The establishment in 1931 was 1,687 officers and 23,043 other ranks. The air service numbered 991 all ranks, with 91 active and 76 instructional aeroplanes.

The total number on the rolls amounts to about 600,000.

The strength of the reserve of officers and N.C.O. of the reserve were 2,352 and 775 respectively.

The Landstorm amounts to about 195,000 of all ranks.

The infantry is armed with the Mauser rifle (calibre 6·5 mm.), heavy machine-gun, model 14 (calibre 6·5 mm.), and light machine-gun, model 21 (calibre 6·5 mm.); the cavalry is armed with short rifle (Mauser, calibre 6·5 mm.), sword, heavy machine-gun, model 14 (calibre 6·5 mm.), and light machine-gun, model 21 (calibre 6·5 mm.): the field artillery have the Krupp 7·5 cm. Q.F. gun. The field artillery has also 10·5 cm. and 15 cm. howitzers. The heavy artillery is armed with 10 cm. gun and 15 resp. 21 cm. howitzers.

The military budget for 1931-32 amounts to 76,379,428 kronor for the army, and 330,700 kronor for the ministry of defence (common to the army and navy).

AIR FORCE.

The Swedish Air Force consists of a chief, an air staff, four flying corps, and several aviation training schools, bases, depôts, and factories. The Air Force, in 1931, numbered 991 all ranks, with 91 active and 76 instructional aeroplanes.

NAVY.

The Swedish Navy is maintained principally as a coast-defence force.

The following is a list of the principal ships:—

There are 13 destroyers, 3 old torpedo-gunboats, 44 torpedo and vedette boats, one mining vessel, and 16 submarines, besides sundry depôt ships and small craft. The 1927 programme provides for the construction during 1928-32 of 2 destroyers (now completing), an aircraft carrying cruiser (the Gotland above, laid down 1930), 3 submarines (1 completed, 2 building) and 4 vedette boats (laid down 1931).

The personnel of the Royal Navy is divided into three classes, viz.: 1. The Active List; 2. The Reserve; 3. The Beväring (Conscripts). On the active list are 5 flag-officers, 8 commodores, 35 captains, 111 commanders and lt.-commanders, 100 lieutenants, 46 sub-lieutenants, 518 warrant officers, and 3,094 petty officers and men, while about 360 officers belong to the Reserve. These figures exclude non-combatant branches.

On the active list of the Royal Coast Artillery are 1 general, 2 colonels, 4 lieutenant-colonels, 7 majors, 32 captains, 34 lieutenants, 16 sub-lieutenants, 107 warrant officers, and 624 petty officers and men.

Production and Industry.

I. AGRICULTURE.

Sweden has always been an agricultural country. In 1751 only 9·5 per cent. of the population depended for a livelihood on the various industries and commerce; in 1870 the percentage had advanced to 12·5, in 1900 to 29·1, in 1910 to 37·8, and in 1920 to about 44·2 per cent., so that to-day the population of Sweden is about equally divided in the pursuit of agriculture on the one hand and commerce and industries on the other.

According to the census of agriculture taken in the autumn of 1927, the number of farms in cultivation was 427,152; of these there were of 2 hectares and under, 119,757; 2 to 20 hectares, 271,804; 20 to 100 hectares, 33,122; above 100, 2,469. Of the total land area of Sweden (41,054,000 hectares), 3,755,000 hectares were under cultivation, 1,269,000 hectares under natural meadows, and 21,747,000 hectares under forests, the products of which form a staple export. In 1930 the estimated forest area was 23,181,200 hectares.

The following table shows the area and yield of the chief crops for 2 years:—

Crop	Area (hectares)		Produce (tons)
	1930	1931	1930	1931

The value of all crops was estimated in 1929 at 1,059 million kronor; in 1930 at 949 million kronor; and in 1931 at 878 million kronor. On Sept. 15, 1927, the live-stock was estimated as follows: Horses, 620,256; head of cattle, 2,899,130; sheep and lambs, 707,849; pigs, 1,386,791.

II. MINES and MINERALS.

Mining has been from time immemorial the leading industry of Sweden, which was the biggest producer of iron in Europe until the use of coal for the manufacture of pig-iron revolutionized that industry. The lack of fossil fuel is the reason why at present mining in Lapland merely concerns itself with the raw products, though experiments made in recent years have carried the problem of electric production of iron ore a good step forward. There were raised in 1930, throughout the Kingdom, 11,236,428 tons of iron ore. The pig-iron produced amounted in 1930 to 459,780 tons, and the ingot iron to 610,824 tons. Of iron ore, in 1930, 9,476,598 tons, and of pig-iron 47,143 tons were exported. There were also raised in 1930, 10,731 tons of silver and lead ore, 3,102 tons of copper ore, 69,728 tons of zinc ore, 8,679 tons of manganese ore, 21,649 tons of auriferous arsenic ore, and 60,441 tons of sulphur pyrites. The lead produced amounted to 7,000 kilograms, the copper to 5,788,000, the zinc to 4,205,000, the tin to 4,000. There are not inconsiderable veins of coal in the southern parts of Sweden, giving 397,960 tons of coal in 1930. The most important produce of the Swedish quarries is paving stone; the amount produced for sale in 1930 had a value of 19,186,300 kronor. In 1930 there were 60,723 persons (2,710 young people under 18) engaged in the mining and metallurgical industries.

III. INDUSTRIES.

The industries of Sweden are spread fairly well over the whole country. The mining of iron ore has reached its highest development north of the Polar circle, and the most important sawmills are located along the shores of the Gulf of Bothnia. The production of iron and steel has taken place in central Sweden since the earliest times in Swedish history; pig iron is produced chiefly in Sandviken, Domnarvet, Uddeholm, and Fagersta. Cream separators, ball-bearings, lighthouse apparatus, telephone supplies, motors, and many kinds of electrical machinery are among the highly specialised products of the metallurgical industries. The porcelain factory of Gustavsberg and the glass factories of Kosta and Orrefors produce wares that have achieved a high reputation in the markets of the world. Innumerable factories for the production of finished products are scattered all over the countryside.

The timber and wood-work industries of Sweden are of great importance. The public forests have an area of 7,826,452 hectares, of which crown and ecclesiastical forests extend to 6,073,000 hectares. The latter yielded, in 1930, 6,197,269 cubic metres of timber. In 1930 there were in Sweden 1,379 sawmills and planing mills with 40,938 workers who turned out sawn or planed timber to the value of 306,234,000 kronor; 1,090 factories for joinery and furniture with 16,877 workers, the output for the year being valued at 98,774,000 kronor; 110 factories for wood-pulp with 19,795 workers, output 305,685,000 kronor; and 76 paper and pasteboard mills with 17,157 workers, output 195,558,000 kronor.

The following are some data for the most important Swedish industries :—

The total number of industrial factories (including mines and quarries) was in 1930, 14,610, and in 1929, 14,272. The total power used in industry amounted to 3,782,000 effective h.p. in 1929 and 3,973,000 effective h.p. in 1930.

In 1930, 341,896 men, 73,328 women, 29,186 boys, and 10,806 girls (under 18 years of age) were employed in factories.

IV. FISHERIES.

The total value of the Göteborg and Bohus fishing industry in 1930 was estimated at 14,300,000 kronor.

Commerce.

The total customs-duties levied in 1929 amounted to 162,391,000 kronor, in 1930 to 156,910,000 kronor, and in 1931 to 151,024,000 kronor.

A national Swedish trade-mark was introduced (1911) by Sveriges Allmänna Handelsförening (General Commercial Association of Sweden). The upper half of the mark shows the three royal Swedish crowns, on a light-blue ground, and the words 'Svensk Tillverkning' (Swedish manufacture) are shown on a light-yellow ground below.

The following table shows the value of the trade with the principal countries with which Sweden deals :—

Internal Communications.

On January 1, 1931, there were 47,139 miles of roads in Sweden.

At the end of 1930 the total length of railways in Sweden was 16,809 kilometres, of which 6,641 kilometres belonged to the State. The receipts of the State railways in 1930 were 202 million kronor, and expenses 157 million kronor. The total cost of construction for the State railways to the end of 1930 was 1,137 million kronor, and for private railways, 813 million kronor. The total number of passengers on the State railways was, in 1929, 30,514,000, and, in 1930, 31,371,000; weight of goods, 19,875,000 tons and 18,431,000 tons; (private railways, 37,700,000 passengers in 1929 and 38,734,000 in 1930; goods, 26,254,000 tons and 23,547,000 tons). The line between Luleå and Riksgransen (the Lapland iron ore line) is run by electric power, as is also, since summer, 1926, the line between Göteborg and Stockholm.

The length of the wires of the telegraph at the end of 1930 was 75,466 km., 32,101 km. of which belonged to the railways. The wires of the State telephone had a length of 981,633 km., the wires of the private telephone lines a length of only 12,920 km. The number of taxed telegraph messages sent in the year 1930 was 6,259,420, including 1,078,025 in transit. In 1930 there were 536,392 instruments (in Stockholm 163,044) employed in the telephone service, including only 6,057 private telephones.

The Swedish Post Office carried 832,117,000 letters, post-cards, journals, &c., in the year 1930. The number of post-offices at the end of the year was 3,873. The total receipts of the Post Office in 1930 amounted to 77,870,253 kronor, and the total expenditure to 62,623,762 kronor.

Banking and Credit.

The Riksbank, or National Bank of Sweden, belongs entirely to the State and is managed by directors elected for three years by the Diet, except one, the president, who is designated by the King. It is a bank of exchange to regulate financial relations with foreign countries; it accepts deposits of money, and on sufficient security it lends money for purposes in which there is no speculative element. The Bank is under the guarantee of the Diet, its capital and reserve capital are fixed by its constitution, and its note circulation is limited by the value of its metallic stock and its assets in current accounts at home and abroad ; but its actual circulation is kept far within this limit.

There are 9 conjointly responsible private banks and 21 joint-stock banks (December 1931). Since December 31, 1903, only the Riksbank has the right to issue notes.

The following table gives statistics of the National Bank, and private banks (joint-stock banks included) in Sweden for December 31, 1931 (18'16 kronor = 1l.) :—

Money, Weights, and Measures.

By a treaty signed May 27, 1873, with additional treaty of October 16, 1875, Sweden, Norway, and Denmark adopted the same monetary system. Since then the small money circulated in all the said countries. In 1924, when the money of the neighbouring countries became depreciated, it was found necessary to cease taking the Danish and Norwegian small coins as legal payment in Sweden. By a treaty still in force each of the three countries withdrew their own money from the other countries.

The Swedish Krona, of 100 öre, is of the value of 1s. 1½d., or about 18 kronor 16 öre to the pound sterling.

The gold 20-kronor piece weighs 8·960572 grammes, ·900 fine, containing 8·0645 grammes of fine gold, and the silver krona weighs 7·5 grammes, ·800 fine, containing 6 grammes of fine silver. Iron coins were issued in 1917, 1918, and 1919; nickel coins from 1920.

The standard of value is gold. Gold coins, however, practically do not exist as a currency. National Bank notes for 5, 10, 50, 100, and 1000 kronor are legal means of payment, and the Bank is bound to exchange them for gold on presentation, but the obligation to redemption is for the present suspended.

The metric system of weights and measures is obligatory.

SWITZERLAND.

(SCHWEIZ.—SUISSE.—SVIZZERA.)

Constitution and Government.

I. CENTRAL.

ON August 1, 1291, the men of Uri, Schwyz, and Lower Unterwalden entered into a defensive League. In 1353 the League included eight members, and in 1513 thirteen. Various allied and subject territories were acquired either by single cantons or by several in common, and in 1648 the League became formally independent of the Holy Roman Empire, but no addition was made to the number of cantons till 1798. In that year, under the influence of France, the unified Helvetic Republic was formed. This failed to satisfy the Swiss, and in 1803 Napoleon Bonaparte, in the Act of Mediation, gave a new constitution and out of the lands formerly allied or subject increased the number of cantons to nineteen. In 1815 the perpetual neutrality of Switzerland and the inviolability of her territory were guaranteed by Austria, Great Britain, Portugal, Prussia, and Russia, and the Federal Pact which had been drawn up at Zürich, and which included three new cantons, was accepted by the Congress of Vienna. The Pact remained in force till 1848, when a new constitution, prepared without foreign interference, was accepted by general consent. This, in turn, was, on May 29, 1874, superseded by the constitution which is now in force.

The constitution of the Swiss Confederation may be revised either in the ordinary forms of Federal legislation with compulsory referendum, or by direct popular vote (popular initiative) a majority both of the citizens voting and of the cantons being required, and the latter method may be adopted on the demand of 50,000 citizens with the right to vote. The Federal Government (i.e., the Parliament and the Federal Council) is supreme in matters of peace, war, and treaties; it regulates the army, the railway, postal and telegraph systems, the coining of money, the issue and repayment of bank notes, and the weights and measures of the Republic. The Federal Parliament legislates on matters of copyright, bankruptcy, patents, sanitary police in dangerous epidemics, and it may create and subsidise, besides the Polytechnic School at Zürich, a Federal University and other educational institutions. There has also been entrusted to it the authority to decide concerning public works for the whole or great part of Switzerland, such as those relating to rivers, forests, and the construction of railways.

The supreme legislative authority is vested in a parliament of two chambers, a 'Standerat,' or Council of States, and a 'Nationalrat,' or National Council. The first is composed of forty-four members, chosen and paid by the twenty-two cantons of the Confederation, two for each canton. Their remuneration depends on the wealth and liberality of the cantons, the average being about 20 francs per day; representatives from the canton of Geneva receive 30 francs, from Uri and from Unterwalden 15 francs per day. The mode of their election and the term of membership depend entirely on the canton. Three of the cantons are politically divided—Basel into Stadt and Land; Appenzell into Ausser Rhoden and Inner Rhoden; and Unterwald into Obwald and Nidwald. Each of these parts of cantons sends one member to the State Council, so that there are two members to the divided as well as to the undivided cantons. The 'Nationalrat' consists (according to the Census of 1920) of 198 representatives of the Swiss people, chosen in direct election, at the rate of one deputy for every 20,000 souls. The members are paid from Federal funds at the rate of 40 francs for each day on which they are present, with travelling expenses, at the rate of 20 centimes per kilometre, to and from the capital. Members employed on commissions receive additional pay at the same rate. In August, 1930, the life of the National Council was prolonged from 3 to 4 years and the number of electors per representative was fixed at 22,000, making a total of 187 members distributed amongst the various cantons as follows :—

<sup>1</sup> The name of the canton is given in German, French or Italian, according to the language most spoken in it, and the name in the other language is given in brackets.

At the elections held on October 25, 1931, the following parties were returned :—Radicals, 52 ; Catholics, 44 ; Social Democrats, 49 ; Agrarians, 30 ; Liberal Conservatives, 6 ; Communists, 3 ; other parties, 3.

A general election of representatives takes place by ballot every four years. Every citizen of the Republic who has entered on his twenty-first year is entitled to a vote ; and any voter, not a clergyman, may be elected a deputy. Both chambers united are called the 'Bundes-Versammlung,' or Federal Assembly, and as such represent the supreme government of the Republic. Laws passed by the Federal Assembly may be vetoed by the popular voice, which means in effect that 30,000 citizens or eight cantons may demand that the law in question should be submitted to the direct vote of the nation, which can only say 'Yes' or 'No.' For the decision of the question submitted a majority both of the cantons and of the voters is required. This principle, called the referendum, is frequently acted on.

The chief executive authority is deputed to a 'Bundesrat,' or Federal Council, consisting of seven members, elected for three years by the Federal Assembly. The members of this council must not hold any other office in the Confederation or cantons, nor engage in any calling or business. In the Federal Parliament legislation may be introduced either by a member, or by either House, or by the Federal Council (but not by the people). Every citizen who has a vote for the National Council is eligible for becoming a member of the executive.

The President of the Confederation and the Vice-President of the Federal Council are the first magistrates of the Confederation. Both are elected by the Federal Assembly in joint session of the National and State councils for the term of one year, January 1 to December 31, and are not re-eligible to the same offices till after the expiration of another year. The Vice-President, however, may be, and usually is, elected to succeed the outgoing President.

President of the Confederation for 1932.—Dr. Giuseppe Motta (Ticino).

Vice-President of the Federal Council for 1932.—Edmund Schulthess.

The seven members of the Federal Council—each of whom has a salary of 1,280*l.* per annum, while the President has 1,400*l.*—act as ministers, or chiefs of the seven administrative departments of the Republic. These departments are :—1. Foreign Affairs. 2. Interior. 3. Justice and Police. 4. Military. 5. Finance and Customs. 6. Agriculture and Industry (Économie publique). 7. Posts and Railways. The city of Bern is the seat of the Federal Council and the central administrative authorities.

II. LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

Each of the cantons and demi-cantons of Switzerland is sovereign, so far as its independence and legislative powers are not restricted by the federal constitution; each has its local government, different in its organisation in most instances, but all based on the principle of absolute sovereignty of the people. In a few of the smallest cantons the people exercise their powers direct, without the intervention of any parliamentary machinery, all male citizens of full age assembling together in the open air, at stated periods, making laws and appointing their administrators. Such assemblies, known as the Landsgemeinden, exist in Appenzell, Glarus and Unterwald. In all the larger cantons there is a body chosen by universal suffrage, usually called the Grosse Rat, or Kantons Rat, which exercises all the functions of the Landsgemeinden. In all the cantonal constitutions, however, except those of the cantons which have a Landsgemeinde, the referendum has a place. By this principle, where it is most fully developed, as in Zurich, all laws and concordats, or agreements with other cantons, and the chief matters of finance, as well as all revision of the constitution, must be submitted to the popular vote. In all the cantons, the popular initiative for constitutional affairs, as well as for legislation, has been introduced, except in Lucerne, where the initiative exists only for constitutional affairs. The members of the cantonal councils, as well as most of the magistrates, are either honorary servants of their fellow-citizens, or receive a merely nominal salary. In most cantons there are districts (Amtsbezirke) consisting of a number of communes grouped together, each district having a Prefect (Regierungstatthalter) representing the cantonal government. In the larger communes, for local affairs, there is an Assembly (legislative) and a Council (executive) with a president, maire or syndic, and not less than 4 other members. In the smaller communes there is a council only, with its proper officials.

In 1920, 2,750,622 spoke German, 824,320 French, 238,544 Italian, 42,940 Romansch, and 23,894 other languages.

The number of foreigners resident in Switzerland in 1920 was 402,385.

II. MOVEMENT OF POPULATION.

In 1930 the illegitimate births numbered 3,169. The number of divorces was 2,723 in 1930.

The number of emigrants in five years was: 1926, 4,947; 1927, 5,272; 1928, 4,800; 1929, 4,608; 1930, 3,636.

III. PRINCIPAL TOWNS.

On December 1, 1930, the population of the principal towns was as follows (census figures) :—Zürich, 249,820; Bâle, 148,063; Geneva, 142,812; Bern, 111,783; Lausanne, 75,915; St. Gallen, 63,947; Winterthur, 53,925; Luzern, 47,066; Biel, 37,726; La Chaux-de-Fonds, 35,252; Neuchâtel, 22,668; Fribourg, 21,557; Schaffhausen, 21,118; Montreux, 18,506; Thun, 16,524; Chur, 15,574; Lugano, 15,184; Solothurn, 13,734; Herisau, 13,599; Olten, 13,484; Vevey, 13,036; Le Locle, 12,001; Aarau, 11,666; Rorschach, 11,005; Bellinzona, 10,706.

Religion.

There is complete and absolute liberty of conscience and of creed. No one is bound to pay taxes specially appropriated to defraying the expenses of a creed to which he does not belong. No bishoprics can be created on Swiss territory without the approbation of the Confederation. The order of Jesuits and its affiliated societies cannot be received in any part of Switzerland; all functions clerical and scholastic are forbidden to its members, and the interdiction can be extended to any other religious orders whose action is dangerous to the State, or interferes with the peace of different creeds. The foundation of new convents or religious orders is forbidden.

According to the census of December 1, 1920, the number of Protestants amounted to 2,230,597 (57 per cent. of the population), of Roman Catholics to 1,585,311 (41 per cent.), and of Jews to 20,979 (0·5 per cent.). Protestants are in a majority in twelve of the cantons, and Catholics in ten. Of the more populous cantons, Zürich, Bern, Vaud, Neuchâtel, and Basel (town and land) are mainly Protestant, while Luzern, Fribourg, Ticino, Valais and the Forest Cantons are mainly Catholic. The Roman Catholic priests are much more numerous than the Protestant clergy, the former comprising more than 6,000 regular and secular priests. They are under five bishops, viz., of Basel and Lugano (resident at Solothurn), Chur, St. Gallen, Lausanne and Geneva (resident at Freiburg), and Sitten (Sion), all of them immediately subject to the Holy See.

Education.

In the educational administration of Switzerland there is no centralization. Before the year 1848 most of the cantons had organised a system of primary schools, and since that year elementary education has steadily advanced. In 1874 it was made obligatory (the school age varying in the different cantons), and placed under the civil authority. In some cantons the cost falls almost entirely on the communes, in others it is divided between the canton and communes. In all the cantons primary instruction is free. In every district there are primary schools, and secondary schools for youths of from twelve to fifteen.

The following are the statistics of the various classes of educational institutions for 1929–30 :—primary schools 4,368, with 16,484 teachers (7,987 men and 8,276 women), and 471,876 pupils (237,949 boys and 233,918 girls); the 610 secondary schools and lower middle schools had 31,925 boys and 27,449 girls, with 2,452 men and 630 women teachers. There are also cantonal schools, gymnasia, higher schools for girls, complementary schools, teachers' seminaries, commercial and administrative schools, trade schools, art schools, technical schools, schools for the instruction of girls in domestic economy and other subjects; agricultural schools, schools for horticulture, for viticulture, for arboriculture, and for dairy management.

There are also institutions for the blind, the deaf and dumb, and the feeble-minded. In 1928-29 the Federation spent on primary education 2,361,000 francs.

There are seven universities in Switzerland. These universities are organised on the model of those of Germany, governed by a rector and a senate, and divided into four 'faculties' of theology, jurisprudence, philosophy, and medicine. There is a Polytechnic School, maintained by the Federal Government, at Zürich, with 1,576 matriculated students in 1929-30. The academy of Neuchâtel was transformed into a university in May, 1909, but without the faculty of medicine. The following table shows the year of foundation of each university, the number of teaching staff and of matriculated students in the various branches of study in each of the seven universities in the winter of 1930-31 :—

These numbers are exclusive of 'visitors,' but inclusive of 967 women students.

In the winter of 1929-30 there were 2,295 foreign students, i.e. 27·5 per cent. of the matriculated students in Switzerland.

A University Institute for International Studies was opened at Geneva in October, 1927.

Justice and Crime.

The 'Bundes-Gericht,' or Federal Tribunal, which sits at Lausanne, consists of 24 members, with 9 supplementary judges, appointed by the Federal Assembly for six years and are eligible for re-election; the President and Vice-President, as such, for two years and cannot be re-elected. The President has a salary of 27,000 francs a year, and the other members 25,000 francs. The Tribunal has three sections, to each of which is assigned the trial of suits in accordance with regulations framed by the Tribunal itself. It has original and final jurisdiction in suits between the Confederation and cantons; between cantons and cantons; between the Confederation or cantons and corporations or individuals, the value in dispute being not less than 3,000 francs; between parties who refer their case to it, the value in dispute being at least 3,000 francs; and also in such suits as the constitution or legislation of cantons places within its authority. There are also many classes of railway suits which it is called on to decide. It is a Court of Appeal against decisions of other Federal authorities, and of cantonal authorities applying Federal laws. The Tribunal also tries persons accused of treason or other offences against the Confederation. For this purpose it is divided into four chambers: the Chamber of Accusation, the Criminal Chamber (Cour d'Assises), the Federal Penal Court, and the Court of Cassation. The jurors who serve in the Assize Courts are elected by the people, and are paid ten francs a day when serving.

Each canton has its own judicial system for ordinary civil and criminal trials.

On December 31, 1928, the prison population of Switzerland consisted of 3,734.

Capital punishment exists in Appenzell-I.-Rh., Obwalden, Uri, Schwyz, Zug, St. Gallen, Luzern, Valais, Schaffhausen, and Fribourg.

Social Insurance.

The Swiss Federal Insurance Law (insurance against illness and accident), as passed by both Chambers on June 13, 1911, was accepted by the electors of the Republic with a small majority. The total number of votes cast was 529,001, of which 287,583 were for and 241,418 against the measure.

All Swiss citizens are entitled to insurance against illness, and foreigners also may be admitted to the benefits of the law. Compulsory insurance against illness does not exist as yet, but cantons and communities are entitled under the act to declare obligatory insurance for certain classes or, in general, to establish public benefit (sick fund) associations, and to make employers responsible for the payment of the premiums of their employees.

Insurance against accident is compulsory for all officials, employees, and workmen of all the factories, trades, &c., which are under the Federal liability law. Every person above the age of 14 can insure voluntarily at the Federal insurance administration (or at any insurance corporation). The Swiss Accident Insurance Institution commenced operations on April 1, 1918. In 1929 the 1,140 societies insuring against illness had 1,561,162 members.

A proposal for a scheme of old-age and dependents' insurance came before the assembly in Sept., 1929. The system will be compulsory and applicable to all between the ages of 19 and 65.

Finance.

The entire proceeds of the Federal alcohol monopoly (amounting to 7,338,778 francs in 1931) are divided among the cantons, and they have to expend one-tenth of the amount received in combating alcoholism in its causes and effects. Of the proceeds of the tax for exemption from military service, levied through the cantons, one-half goes to the Confederation and the other to the cantons.

The public debt of the Confederation (exclusive of the railway debt) amounted, on January 1, 1931, to 1,883,271,500 francs. The floating debt (January 1, 1931) was 209,967,000 francs. The total debt was thus 2,093,239,000 francs, or including the railway debt, 4,919,138,000 francs.

Defence.

There are fortifications on the south frontier for the defence of the St. Gothard pass; others have been constructed at St. Maurice and Martigny in the Rhone Valley.

Switzerland depends for defence upon a national militia. Service in this force is compulsory and universal, with few exemptions except for physical disability. Those excused or rejected pay certain taxes in lieu. Liability extends from the 20th to the end of the 48th year. The first 12 years are spent in the first line, called the 'Auszug,' or 'Élite'; the next 8 in the Landwehr; and the remaining 8 in the Landsturm. For cavalry, however, service is 11 years in the Auszug, and 12 in the Landwehr. The Landsturm only includes men who have undergone some training. The unarmed Landsturm comprises all other males between 20 and 50 whose services can be made available for non-combatant duties of any description.

The initial training of the Swiss militia soldier is carried out in recruits' schools, and the periods are 65 days for infantry, engineers, and foot artillery, 75 days for field artillery, and 90 days for cavalry. The subsequent trainings, called 'repetition courses,' are 11 days annually; but after going through seven courses (8 in the case of the cavalry) further attendance is excused for all under the rank of sergeant. The Landwehr men are only called out once for training, also for 11 days.

The country is divided into 6 divisional districts. There is a staff organisation for three army corps. There are the usual departmental troops, pontoon and railway corps, telegraph troops, and an air force of 10 squadrons. The peace establishment normally under training is 46,200.

The fortress troops, mostly Landwehr, man the fortifications which close the St. Gothard Pass and the Rhone Valley to a possible invader from the south. They amount to about 21,000 men. The Landwehr is organised in 56 battalions and 36 squadrons. Altogether Switzerland can mobilise nearly 200,000 men (combatants), irrespective of the organised Landsturm, who may amount to another 60,000.

The administration of the Swiss army is partly in the hands of the Cantonal authorities, who promote officers up to the rank of captain. But the Federal Government is concerned with all general questions, and makes all the higher appointments.

The Swiss infantry are armed with the Swiss repeating rifle. The field artillery is armed with a Q. F. shielded Krupp 7.5 cm. calibre. The 'position' artillery has batteries of 8.4 and 12 cm. guns. The Swiss Government inaugurated an aviation service in 1919. It is organised in 5 flights and 2 balloon companies and has 60 fighting and 120 scouting aeroplanes.

Production and Industry.

The soil of the country is very equally divided among the population, it being estimated that there were (1920) 212,290 peasant proprietors.

Of the total area 926,897 hectares, or 2,317,242 acres, being 22.4 per cent., is unproductive; of the productive area 926,193 hectares, or 2,315,482 acres, being 28.9 per cent., is forest; and of the rest about 1,210,000 hectares, or 3,025,000 acres (53·2 per cent.) is under grass, and about 800,000 hectares, or 2,000,000 acres (35·7 per cent.) is pasturage. In 1929, there were 129,215 acres under wheat and 46,945 acres under rye.

The chief agricultural industries are the manufacture of cheese and condensed milk. The total production of cow's and goat's milk in 1930 was 2,611,000 metric tons, of hard cheese 56,400 tons, of butter 16,000 tons, and of condensed milk and milk powder 43,500 tons, of which 32,958 were exported. Wine is produced in eighteen of the cantons. In 1930 Swiss vineyards yielded 12,575,024 gallons of wine, valued at 45,192,000 francs, as compared with 16,410,196 gallons valued at 55,024,000 francs in 1929. Tobacco is produced in three cantons. On April 21, 1931 (last census), there were in Switzerland, 140,023 horses, 3,689 mules, 795 donkeys, 1,609,073 cattle, 866,922 cows, 183,838 sheep, 924,271 pigs, 235,827 goats.

The Swiss Confederation has the right of supervision over the police of the forests, and of framing regulations for their maintenance. The entire forest area of Switzerland on January 1, 1931, was 2,427,844 acres in extent (comprising 112,705 acres of cantonal forest, 1,632,271 acres belonging to municipalities and other corporations, and 682,868 acres of private forests). The district over which the Federal supervision extends lies to the south and east of a tolerably straight line from the eastern end of the Lake of Geneva to the northern end of the Lake of Constance. It comprises about 1,828,382 acres, and the Federal forest laws apply to all cantonal, communal, and municipal forests within this area, those belonging to private persons being exempt, except when from their position they are necessary for protection against climatic influences. In 1876 it was enacted that this forest area should never be reduced; servitudes over it, such as rights of way, of gathering firewood, &c., should be bought up; public forests should be surveyed, and new wood planted where required, subventions for the purpose being sanctioned. In the year 1929, 14,846,000 trees (chiefly coniferous) were planted.

There were, in 1929-30, 236 establishments for pisciculture with 189,761,000 fry of various species, produced from the incubation of 238,049,000 eggs.

Many industries flourish in Switzerland. There are 2 salt-mining districts; that at Bex (Vaud) belongs to the Canton, but is worked by a private company, and those at Schweizerhalle, Rheinfelden and Ryburg are worked by a joint-stock company formed by the Cantons interested. The output of salt of all kinds in 1930 reached 808,302 quintals (864,762 in 1929). In the province of St Gall (Gonzen mine) iron ore and manganese ore are mined. In 1926, the output was 45,000 tons of hematite and 15,000 tons of manganese ore. In 1929 there were 8,514 factories in Switzerland. Watch and clock making is an important branch of manufacture; number of clocks exported in 1929, 23,182,544; in 1928, 22,864,456; in 1930, 18,266,579. The number of persons employed in factories (1929) was 409,083; the motive machinery had 1,754,844 horse-power. In 1930, 59 breweries produced 28,708,581 gallons (27,951,726 gallons in 1929).

In 1928 the Swiss embroidery establishments numbered 531 and employed 7,916 workers.

In 1929 there were 7,772 hotels, employing 63,258 persons (41,610 women and 21,648 men). In 1930, 2,569,646 visitors came to Switzerland (2,736,541 in 1929).

Commerce.

The special commerce, not including precious metals, was as follows in five years (25 francs = 1*l.*) :—

Internal Communications.

On January 1, 1929, the railways of Switzerland (excluding tramways and funiculars) had a length of 3,367 miles. The net operating receipts from traffic of the Swiss Federal railways amounted (1931) to 387,231,544 francs, compared with 405,398,268 francs in 1930. Operating expenses amounted to 268,262,355 francs (273,314,524 francs in 1930). The State railways are gradually being electrified; by the beginning of 1931, 1,059 miles of electrified normal gauge lines were being operated by the Federal Railways. The traffic on the Swiss waters (not including Lago Maggiore) in 1930 was carried on by 124 boats or barges belonging to 13 companies.

State aerial service is being gradually developed. In 1930 there were 10,199 flights, and 23,816 passengers were carried.

In 1930 there were in Switzerland 4,012 post-offices. By the internal service there were forwarded 228,900,000 letters, 76,900,000 post-cards, 186,100,000 packets of printed matter and samples, 363,745,000 newspapers. In the international service there were forwarded 40,300,000 letters, 18,300,000 post-cards, 19,200,000 packets of printed matter and samples, 3,270,000 newspapers. The telegraph and telephone receipts in 1930 amounted to 94,298,000 francs; the expenditure to 93,078,000 francs.

Money, Weights, and Measures.

The international metric system is the sole legal standard of weights and measures in Switzerland. It was made compulsory in the country by the Federal law of July 3, 1875, and since January 1, 1887, no other units than the metric units have been legal. By the Federal law of June 24, 1909, the international electric units were also adopted. By that law, copies of the French standards, deposited at the International Office for Weights and Measures at Sèvres (France), were adopted as the legal standards for Switzerland.

The Franc of 100 Rappen or Centimes, is the monetary unit and is equal to 0.2903225 gramme of fine gold. The par rate of exchange is 25.2215 francs = £1 sterling. Gold coins are the 20 and 10 franc pieces. Silver coins in circulation are 5, 2, 1 and  $\frac{1}{2}$  franc; nickel coins, 20, 10 and 5 centimes; bronze, 2 and 1 centime.

As a result of the dissolution of the Latin Monetary Union in 1926, the gold currencies of other countries of the Union are, after April 1, 1927, no longer legal tender in Switzerland, where they have circulated since 1860.

Before the war 50-franc National Bank notes were the smallest paper currency, but in consequence of the war, notes of lesser denominations have been issued, viz., 20-franc notes (by law of July 30, 1914), 5-franc notes (August 3, 1914), and 25-franc notes (September 9, 1914).

The Centner, of 50 Kilogrammes and 100 Pfund = 110 lbs. avoirdupois. The Quintal = 100 Kilogrammes = 220 lbs. avoirdupois. The Arpent (Land) = 8.9ths of an acre.

The Pfund, or pound, chief unit of weight, is legally divided into decimal Grammes, but the people generally prefer the use of the old halves and quarters, named Halbpfund, and Viertelpfund.

TURKEY

(TÜRKİYE CÜMHURİYETİ)

In November, 1922, a change of capital importance took place in the internal economy of Turkey. Up to that time Constantinople (now called Istanbul) continued to be the residence of the Sultan, and a Government deriving its authority from him still existed there. This Government, however, exerted no effective power outside Constantinople, together with a small adjacent area and another small area adjoining Çanakkale on the Dardanelles. Except for the small areas mentioned above, the whole of Asia Minor was under the authority of the de facto Government set up at Angora (now called Ankara) in April, 1920, under the name of the 'Government of the Grand National Assembly of Turkey.' On November 1, 1922, the Grand National Assembly voted a resolution declaring that the office of Sultan had ceased to exist and providing that the office of Caliph, which had hitherto been vested in the person of the Sultan, should be filled by election from among the Princes of the House of Osman. Previous to this the Angora Government had made preparations not only to take delivery of Eastern Thrace from the Greek occupying authorities in accordance with the military Convention concluded at Mudanya on October 11, 1922, but also to take over the administration of Constantinople whenever an opportunity offered. On November 4, 1922, the administration of Constantinople passed into the hands of the Angora Government. The same day the Grand Vizier, Tewfik Pasha, presented the resignation of the Constantinople Cabinet to the Sultan. The Sultan himself, on November 17, left Constantinople in secret. Nearly a whole year was, however, to elapse before the decisive step of proclaiming a Republic was taken. On October 29, 1923, the national leader, Gazi Mustafa Kemal Pasha, who had been born at Salonica in 1881, was elected first President of the Turkish Republic, and the revolution was complete when, on March 2, 1924, the Grand National Assembly decided upon the abolition of the Turkish Caliphate, a decision which was immediately followed by the expulsion from Turkey of all the members of the House of Osman, at the same time depriving them of their Turkish citizenship. On November 1, 1927, Mustafa Kemal Pasha was re-elected President of the Republic by the unanimous vote of the new Assembly which met on that day.

President of the Republic.—Gazi Mustafa Kemal Pasha, re-elected May 4, 1931.

By a decision of the Grand National Assembly on October 13, 1923, Angora was declared to be the capital of Turkey. All central departments of state are now established there.

Constitution and Government.

For a list of the former sovereigns of Turkey and an account of the older constitutions of the country, see THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK for 1923, page 1380.

The Grand National Assembly of Angora voted, on January 20, 1921, a Fundamental Law which introduced constitutional changes of the most radical kind. It declared that all sovereignty belonged to the people, and that all power, both executive and legislative, was vested in the Grand National Assembly as being the sole representative of the people. The old name 'Ottoman Empire' was discarded in favour of the designation 'Turkey.' No provision was made for a Senate. It was laid down that the members of the Grand National Assembly should be elected for a period of two years, and that the Assembly should delegate its executive powers to a certain number of Vekils or Commissioners. The mode of effecting this delegation of power varied somewhat, and ultimately at the beginning of 1924 circumstances necessitated a further revision of the Constitution. This was effected by the law of April 20, 1924, in the first articles of which the Turkish State was declared to be a Republic, the religion of which was Islam, the official language Turkish and the capital Angora. The new law provided for the election of the Assembly every four years, while according to article 7 'the Assembly exercises the executive power through the President of the Republic elected by itself and through the Council of Ministers chosen by him,' with the proviso that the Assembly may at any time control the actions of the Government and at any time dismiss it.

The new law also provided that the President of the Republic should be chosen from among the deputies constituting the National Assembly, and that his term of office should be identical with the life of each Assembly.

The present Cabinet, which was formed on September 28, 1930, and re-constructed on December 26, 1930, is constituted as follows :—

President of the Council.—General Ismet Pasha.

Minister of Interior.—Shukri (Şukrî) Kaya Bey.

Minister of Finance.—Mustafa Abdulhalik Bey.

Minister of Public Works.—Hilmi Bey.

Minister of Foreign Affairs.—Dr. Tefvik Rushdi (Ruştu) Bey.

Minister of Justice.—Yusuf Kemal Bey.

Minister of Education.—Essad (Esat) Bey.

Minister of Public Health.—Dr. Refik Bey.

Minister of National Economy.—Mustafa Sherif (Şerif) Bey.

Minister of National Defence.—Zekâi Bey.

Minister of Agriculture.—Muhlis Bey.

Minister of Customs and Monopolies.—Ali Rana Bey.

The third Grand National Assembly which was elected in September, 1927, and consisted of 315 deputies, met on November 1, 1927, and is the third assembly to meet at Angora. The fourth Grand National Assembly was elected on a slightly different franchise (men had to be 21 before being allowed to vote) in April 1931.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

The Fundamental Law, voted at Angora in January, 1921 (see above), altered the system in force up to 1920 by providing that the country should be divided into Vilâyet (now sixty-three in number) divided into Kazas, subdivided in their turn into Nahiyes. At the head of each Vilâyet is a Vali representing the Government. The system aimed at is one of centralisation. Each Vilâyet has an elective council of its own. The Kaza is regarded as a mere grouping of Nahiyes for certain purposes of general administration. The Nahiye or commune is an autonomous entity and possesses an elective council charged with the administration of such matters as are not reserved to the State.

According to the municipal law passed in 1930 Turkish women have the right to be electors and to be elected at municipal elections. This right is to be extended to elections for the Grand National Assembly as from 1931. A direct system of voting is to take the place of the present indirect system of holding elections for that body.

Area and Population.

The Treaty of Peace between the Allied Powers and Turkey which was signed at Lausanne on July 24, 1923, defined the European frontier of the new Turkey and to some extent her Asiatic frontiers. This Treaty was ratified by the Grand National Assembly on August 23, 1923, and entered into force August 6, 1924, on its ratification by three of the four Allied Powers.

For the delimitation of the present territories of Turkey, see THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK for 1930, pp. 1323-4.

The Treaty of Lausanne and the Conventions attached to it provided for the demilitarisation of zones adjoining the European frontier, the Dardanelles and the Bosphorus, subject to the right to maintain a garrison at Constantinople, for the demilitarisation of the Islands named above as well as the islands in the Sea of Marmara with one exception, and for a special administrative régime in Imbros and Tenedos. Otherwise Turkey holds unrestricted sovereignty.

The area of the Republic of Turkey is estimated at 762,736 square kilometres or 294,416 square miles excluding marshes (1,170 square km.) and lakes (8,434 square km.). About 9,257 square miles are in Europe.

For the first time in its history a general census was taken in Turkey on October 28, 1927, and showed the total population of the Republic to be 13,648,270, of whom 6,563,879 were men (48·1 per cent.) and 7,084,391 women (51·9 per cent.). Of the total population, 12,607,601 or 92·4 per cent. lived in Asiatic Turkey and 1,004,669 or 7·6 per cent. in European Turkey.

The population of the vilayets according to revised figures was given as follows:—

According to the census of 1927, the foreign population was as follows:—German, 2,306; Albanian, 1,652; British, 3,413; Austrian, 1,435; Belgian, 258; Bulgarian, 7,448; French, 3,427; Greek, 26,481; Hungarian, 1,830; Italian, 11,573; Polish, 613; Rumanian, 1,530; Russian, 6,206; Serbian, 3,883.

The events of recent years have caused an enormous reduction in the Christian population of the territory still remaining to Turkey. A very large proportion of the Armenian population of Asia Minor disappeared after the war, owing to the fact that large numbers migrated to the Republic of Erivan. The Greek population has practically ceased to exist in Asia Minor and in European Turkey outside the vilayet of Constantinople, which includes both shores of the Bosphorus and Princes Islands in the Marmara. A Turco-Greek agreement signed at Lausanne on January 30, 1923, provided for the compulsory exchange of the Greeks of Turkey, not including the vilayet of Constantinople, against the Turks of Greece, not including Western Thrace, as from May, 1923. The Moslem population of Turkey has also suffered greatly from the effects of the war. It comprises besides the Turks of Asia Minor a considerable number of Kurds in the Eastern provinces, Lazes in the Eastern section of the Pontic coast, and a few Circassians. There is a fairly considerable but diminishing Jewish element in the towns.

Religion.

Moslems now form the vast majority of the population of the Turkey, and Turkish is now being substituted for Arabic as the liturgical language in all mosques. Under the old imperial system the non-Moslem communities were recognised as organised communities or millets, the heads of which exercised not only spiritual but civil functions. The scope of these civil functions varied. They were in some cases, and more especially in that of the Œcumenical Patriarch, of considerable importance. The whole position is now fairly well defined. The Treaty of Lausanne has deprived the spiritual heads of the communities of their administrative prerogatives, and their authority is now purely ecclesiastical.

Constantinople is the seat of the Œcumenical Patriarchate. The Holy Synod at the Phanar which assists the Patriarch, His All-Holiness Mgr. Photios II Maniatis (elected October 7, 1929), to administer the affairs of the Patriarchate consists of 12 Metropolitans with a thirteenth as chief secretary. Of the Sees subject to the spiritual jurisdiction of the Œcumenical Patriarch 47 have been attached for administrative convenience to the jurisdiction of the Holy Synod of the Church of Greece, as they are in territories now forming part of the Hellenic Republic: 41 other Sees have become titular as, in consequence of the exchange of populations, there are now no Orthodox residents in the territory formerly covered by them in the Turkish Republic: the three Sees subject to the Œcumenical jurisdiction in Albania are vacant. Thus there are five residential Sees subject to the Patriarch in Turkey—Chalcedon, Derkos, Princes' Islands, Imbros and Tenedos, Thyateira and Amasia; four in the Italian Dodecanese, Rhodes, Cos, Karpathos (Scarpanto) and Leros; one in Finland and Carelia, one in Tallinn for Estonia, one in Prague for Czechoslovakia, one in Sydney for Australia, and one in New York for North and South America. This Archbishop Mgr. Athenagoras has suffragans in Boston, Chicago and San Francisco. There are also 11 Titular Bishops subject to the Œcumenical Patriarch, and recently the Russian Metropolitan Evlogii in Paris, at one time Supreme Bishop of the Russian Church outside Russia, accepted the Patriarch's appointment as Exarch of the Russian Church in West, although neither he nor his adherents had previously been subject to the Œcumenical jurisdiction, but to that of the Patriarchate of Moscow.

The Armenian Church (Gregorian) in Turkey is ruled by the Katholikos of Sis, Mgr. Sahag Kabayian, with two Bishops and three Vartabets, and the Patriarch of Constantinople, Mgr. Mesrop Maroyian, with three Bishops and four Vartabets. The Throne of the Katholikos of Agthamar is vacant. Before the War the Katholikos of Sis had 15 eparchies (dioceses ruled either by a Bishop or a Vartabet), that of Agthamar two and the Patriarchate of Constantinople 51.

The Uniat Armenian Church in Turkey is ruled by the Patriarch of Cilicia, Mgr. Boulos Boutros XIII Terzian, with an Archbishop at Mardin and a Bishop at Adana. Before the War there was another Uniat Archbishop at Sivas and 10 other Bishops.

The Chaldaeans (Nestorian Uniats) have one Bishop at Mardin, who administers the Archiepiscopal See of Amida. The Syrian Uniats have a See of Mardin and Amida, but it is united with their Patriarchate of Antioch, whose incumbent resides in Damascus. The Greek Uniats (Byzantine Rite) have as their Ordinary in Constantinople the Titular Bishop of Theodoropolis. The Latins have an Archbishop in Smyrna, but their Patriarch of Constantinople is titular and non-resident. The Nestorians have a Katholikos and Patriarch Mâr Shim'ûn XXI, temporarily resident in Mosul, whose See is normally at Qudshanes (near Çolemerk) in the Hakiârî. There is a Grand Rabbi (Hahambaşı) in Constantinople for the Jews, who are nearly all Sephardim.

According to the census of October 28, 1927, there were in Turkey 13,269,606 Moslems, 39,511 Roman Catholics, 6,658 Protestants, 109,905 Orthodox, 77,433 Armenian, 24,307 Christians, 81,872 Jews, 17,494 other religions, and 2,702 undeclared.

On April 10, 1928, the Grand National Assembly passed a law amending the Organic Statute in such a way that Islam ceased to be the State religion of the Republic. An oath of allegiance to the Republic, taken by the President and Deputies, took the place of the former religious formula.

Education.

According to the census of October 28, 1927, only 1,111,496 of the population were literate in Arabic characters.

In Turkey, elementary education is nominally obligatory for all children of both sexes. According to the Provisional Law of October 6, 1913, all children from 7 to 18 are to receive primary instruction, which may, however, be given in State schools, schools maintained by communities, or private schools, or, subject to certain tests, at home. The State schools are under the direct control of the Ministry of Public Instruction. They include not only primary schools, but also secondary schools, 'preparatory' schools (for students intending to enter higher schools), and a certain number of lycées or secondary schools of a superior kind. There are also training schools for male and female teachers, and a certain number of higher technical schools, besides the University of Istanbul, founded in 1900. Number of students, 1930; men, 1514; women, 469. Towards the end of 1925 a School of Law was founded at Ankara. The important non-Moslem communities in Istanbul maintain their own schools, which, like all 'private' schools, are subject to the supervision of the Ministry of Public Instruction.

The following table gives statistics of Education for 1929-30:—

—	Number	Teachers		Students
		Male	Female	Male	Female
Primary Schools . . . .	6,672	11,880	4,897	815,845	163,597

Total expenditure on education in 1929-30, was £T22,532,526.

A general tendency has been manifested since 1926 to introduce the use of the Latin alphabet in Turkey. A Commission was formed to study the question, and on November 1, 1928, the Grand National Assembly voted a law for the adoption of Latin characters in Turkey. This law decreed the use of Latin characters obligatory in the case of all correspondence in Public Departments as well as all companies, societies and private offices, newspapers, cinemas and advertisements as from December 1, 1928. The publication of books in Arabic characters was forbidden after January 1, 1929, and the employment of the new alphabet became general throughout Turkey in 1930.

Previous to this important reform the Grand National Assembly had also adopted the bill introducing the numeral system as used in European countries.

Justice.

Since the beginning of the work of secularisation two years ago, nothing now remains of the old Ottoman laws based on the religious principles. The Turkish Government began by suppressing the religious Courts (Sheri) in 1924, in order to obtain this result. The system which was thus unified consists of (1) juges de paix (single judges with limited but summary penal and civil jurisdiction); (2) tribunaux de base (a president and two assistant judges with wider powers); (3) assize courts (a president and four assistant judges who hear serious penal cases). Appeal has been abolished. The Court of Cassation sits at Eskişehir.

The laws applied by these Courts have been recently drawn up and adopted. The Turkish Civil Code is, with the exception of a few modifications, a reproduction of the Swiss Civil Code, as also the Code of Obligations, and both entered into force towards the end of 1926. The new Penal Code is based in great measure upon the Italian Penal Code, and the Code of Civil Procedure, without being identical, nevertheless closely resembles that of the Canton of Neuchâtel. The new Commercial Code is based on the German.

On January 1, 1931, the prison population consisted of 42,463 men and 1,414 women awaiting trial, and 40,039 men and 3,806 women under sentence, a total of 87,722.

Finance.

The revenue is derived from land, property, income and profits taxes, Customs, consumption taxes, sheep and cattle tax, monopolies, and other sources. The principal monopolies in 1930 were, tobacco, alcohol, matches, explosives, cartridges and salt.

Estimates of revenue and expenditure for five financial years were as follows:—

By the Treaty of Lausanne the foreign debt of Turkey was to be distributed among the succession States, of which the new Turkey is one. The Turkish debt has been apportioned as follows (the first figure refers to the loans prior to October 17, 1912, the second to those between October 17, 1912 and November 1, 1924): Turkey, 62·25 per cent. and 76·54 per cent.; Greece, 10·57 per cent. and 0·55 per cent.; Yugoslavia, 5·25 per cent.; Bulgaria, 1·63 per cent. and 0·16 per cent.; Albania, 1·57 per cent.; Syria, 8·15 per cent. and 10·02 per cent.; Iraq, 3·96 per cent. and 4·87 per cent.; Palestine, 2·49 per cent. and 3·06 per cent.; and the Arab States, 4·13 per cent. and 4·80 per cent. (Palestine has paid off the whole of her share.) The total debt of Turkey is £T87,316,000.

The agreement reached between the bondholders and the Turkish Government for the resumption of the services of the Ottoman Public debt was ratified by the Grand National Assembly on November 30, 1928.

Defence.

Under the law of January 24, 1924, military service is for 18 months in the infantry and for two years in the cavalry, artillery and air service. Men are called up at the age of 21, and liability for service lasts 25 years. The number of men liable to service in any given year is approximately 170,000, but the annual contingent does not at present exceed 60,000. The strength of the active army in 1929 was approximately 20,000 officers and 120,000 men, organised in 3 armies of 9 army corps, each army corps comprises 2 divisions, and there are 5 cavalry divisions, 3 active and 2 reserve.

The infantry is equipped with Mauser rifles. The artillery with 75 mm. Krupp field guns and 10·5 and 12 c.m. Schneider howitzers. The army estimates for 1929-30 amounted to 56,372,300 pounds Turkish.

The Turkish Navy is at present undergoing reorganisation, all vessels of any fighting value being taken in hand for refit as soon as money for this purpose can be spared. The effective fleet at present includes the battle cruiser Yavuz Sultan Selim, formerly the German Goeben, launched in 1911, displacing 22,500 tons, and armed with ten 11-inch guns; the old battleship Tourgout Reis, 9,900 tons, and six 11-inch guns, now used as a training ship for naval cadets; the light cruisers Hamidieh, 3,830 tons, and Medjidieh, 3,300 tons, both dating from 1903; 4 gunboats of from 500 to 400 tons; 4 new destroyers; 3 old destroyers, 1 obsolete torpedo boat and two new submarines and two older ones.

The Yavuz has undergone an extensive refit at Izmit under a contract made with a group of French shipbuilding yards. The repairs were completed in 1930.

A new naval base at Izmit has replaced the former dockyard in the Golden Horn.

The future strength of the personnel does not appear to have been fixed, but no difficulty is anticipated in manning the ships at present ready for sea.

There is an Air Regiment, stationed at Eski Sehir, and trained under French advisers.

Production and Industry.

Agriculture.—Agriculture is most primitive, but modern methods are now being adopted. In 1929 the sum of £T100,000,000 was voted for irrigation work. Number of people engaged in agriculture (census of 1927) was 4,368,061, being 81·6 per cent. of total of those engaged in economic activities. The soil for the most part is very fertile; the principal products are tobacco, mohair, cereals, figs, silk, olives and olive oil, dried fruits, nuts and almonds, skins and hides, furs, licorice root, wool, gums, canary seed, linseed, sesame and cotton. Opium is an important crop in Konya and Afyon Karahisar. Tobacco is grown both in European and Asiatic Turkey. The principal tobacco districts are Samsun (the most important), Bafra, Izmit, Charshamba and Izmir (Smyrna). In 1929, tobacco was grown by 79,965 cultivators on 19,520 acres. The principal centres for silk production are Bursa and Istanbul. The production of olive oil, mainly confined to the Vilayet of Aydin, is very important. The following table gives the estimated yields of the principal products for two years:—

Product	1930	1931

The forest laws of the empire are modelled on those of France, but restrictive regulations are not enforced, and the country is being rapidly deprived of its timber. About 8,406,900 hectares (20,765,000 acres) are under forest. The most-wooded vilâyets are Kastamonu, Aydin, Bursa, Bolu, Trabzon, Konya and Karesi. Of the forest land, about 88 per cent. belongs to the State, 6 per cent. to private persons, and the rest to communes and wakfs (pious foundations).

In 1929 there were in Turkey 12,124,031 sheep, 11,683,091 goats, 4,718,803 cattle, 849,485 asses, and 496,954 horses, 74,803 camels, 36,522 mules, 496 060 buffaloes.

The wool clip in 1930 was 9,920,000 lbs., and the mohair clip, 4,480 metric tons.

Mining.—The Turkish provinces, especially those in Asia, are reported rich in minerals, which are little worked. Production of principal minerals in 1929 and 1930 was as follows:—

Fisheries.—The fisheries of Turkey are important; the total value of marine produce for Istanbul and dependencies was in 1921–22, £T2,400,778.15 as against £T2,922,332.21 in 1920–21. The total weight of marine produce in 1922–23 attained 22,000 tons. No later statistics are available.

Industry.—Industries are relatively unimportant, but under cover of the new protective tariffs, which came into force on October 1, 1929, it is probable that an impetus will be given to industrial development. The vilayet of Aydin was before the war one of Turkey's industrial centres. An attempt is being made by the Government to revive industry in Smyrna, and a fair amount of machinery has been imported. Carpet weaving represents approximately 60 per cent. of pre-war capacity. Textile factories have not suffered any material damage. The number of fig-packing establishments has been reduced. Cotton ginneries are being rebuilt, and in June, 1926, an oilcake factory was established at Adana. A further recent development has been the opening in December, 1926, of sugar factories at Uşak, near Izmir (Smyrna), and at Alpullu in Thrace; their total production in 1929 was 8,833 tons. The total production of the sugar factory in Thrace, in 1930, was 8,250 tons approximately. Many small factories have been established in recent years, including saw-mills constructed near Bozilyük, and cement works at Ankara and Kartal. The latter was erected in 1929 by a Belgian group on the Anatolian railway, a few miles from Istanbul, and will produce 70,000 tons annually. A German group has constructed a factory at Bakir Keruz, which will have a similar capacity. The number of electricity undertakings is said to be 97. In 1929, the Ford Company established important assembly works at Tophané in Istanbul. The plant can assemble 80 cars per 8-hour day. In 1927 there were 65,245 manufacturing establishments with 256,855 employees, but the number has now increased.

Shipping and Navigation.

At the beginning of 1931, 101 vessels under the Turkish flag had a tonnage of 150,776 tons. The coasting privileges in Turkish waters which certain foreign companies enjoyed by virtue of the Treaty of Lausanne came to an end in July, 1926. The most important Turkish company engaged in the coastal service is the "Seyrisefin." This company increased its tonnage to 63,256 in 1930. Other craft flying the Turkish flag included 29 tugs, 12 power barges, 300 ordinary barges and 42 motor launches. Three thousand seamen were employed in the Turkish merchant service.

In 1930 a total of 2,161 vessels of an aggregate tonnage of 1,893,598 tons called at the port of Izmir (Smyrna); 9,412 vessels of 19,339,067 tons called at the port of Istanbul, inclusive of those in transit.

Internal Communications.

In 1926, there were 30,319 miles of road in Turkey, of which 8,500 miles were national roads and 21,819 miles provincial roads. In 1929 4,209 kilometres (2,630 miles) of road were constructed or repaired.

The length of railway line in Turkey in May, 1931, was 3,619 miles broad gauge and 359½ kilometres (225 miles) narrow gauge.

Lines owned by private companies;—The Oriental Railway (337 kilometres, or 208 miles) connects Istanbul via Edirne (Adrianople) with Sofia, Belgrade, and the chief centres of Europe. The Smyrna-Aydin Railway, Izmir-Aydin-Eghirdir (British Company) (615 kilometres, or 384 miles), the Smyrna Kassaba Railway, Izmir-Cassaba-Afyom Karahisar (French Company) (701 kilometres, or 438 miles), the Bozanti-Aleppo Nissibire Co. (632 kilometres or 391 miles, of which a section, 167 kilometres or 102 miles, are in Syria). Lines owned by the state:—The Anatolian Railway (1,867 kilometres, or 854 miles) runs from Istanbul to Ankara and Konya, with a prolongation from Ankara to Sivas (580 kilometres, or 362½ miles). The Bagdad Railway (French Company) (624 kilometres, or 390 miles), starting from Konya, was completed during the war as far as Nisibin; in 1928 the Turkish Government bought the Mersina-Tarsus-Adana line from this company. Izmir-Balikessir-Bandırma (French Company), and Mudanya-Bursa (Belgian Company) (42 kilometres, or 26 miles). There is also a line from Sarikamis to the Russian Frontier (63 miles, broad gauge, and a narrow gauge line from Sarikamis to Erzurum, 241 miles), but both lines are in a bad state of repair. The Samsun-Sivas line (380 kilometres or 235 miles), completed in 1931, connects the Central Anatolian plains with the Black Seaport of Samsun, via Zile, Anasya and Havza. The Katalhza-Balikesir line, also completed in 1931, is 220 kilometres or 136 miles long. The Kayseri-Ulukishla line was completed up to a point 107 kilometers from Kayseri; when completed this line will put the Black Sea and Mediterranean ports in direct rail communication by connecting the Anatolian-Baghdad system with the Samsun-Sivas and Ankara Sivas lines. The Filios-Irmak line (400 kilometres) was open on April 23, 1931 as far as Cankiri from Irmak. From Filios to Balikisik, 70 kilometres have been completed.

In 1929 58,493,622 letters, 1,367,756 postcards, 10,908,704 printed papers were handled internally, 2,211,673 letters were received from and 631,786 letters sent abroad. In 1929 there were 31,551 kilometres of telegraph lines with 61,886 kilometres of wire; 641 offices, 7,407,491 internal telegrams and 1,024,033 foreign telegrams sent.

Banking and Credit.

In January, 1917, the Turkish Government issued a Charter for a new National Bank, to be styled the Central Bank of the Turkish Republic. Its capital is 15 million Turkish pounds, which may be increased to 30 million Turkish pounds. The future status of this bank was fixed in 1926 by a law passed by the Grand National Assembly on June 11, 1930. It began its activities on October 3, 1931, following the approval of the Statutes by the Government, and the payment of 40 per cent. of its capital. Amongst the more important Turkish banks may be mentioned the Banque Agricole (Ziraat Bankasi), the oldest of the Turkish institutions, with a capital of 30,000,000 Turkish pounds. The other banks are the Banque d'Affaires (İş Bankasi), the business of which is increasing rapidly, Banque Industrielle et Minière (Sanayi ve Maden Bankasi), Banque de Commerce et d'Industrie, Emlâc ve Eytam Bankasi (Crédit Foncier) and Esnaf Bankasi (Craftsmen's Bank). The principal Bank in Turkey is the Ottoman Bank, founded in 1863. It has a Branch in every important town of Turkey. The concession of the Ottoman Bank was extended in August 1925, by the Turkish Government, for a further period of 10 years.

The total amount of paper currency in circulation at the present time is £T158,748,563.

Money, Weights, and Measures.

On April 17, 1916, an order was issued reforming the currency. A gold standard, with the piastre as the unit, was thenceforth to be general all over Turkey, and the piastre to equal 40 para. The piastre, as well as the half piastre (20 para), quarter piastre (10 para) and eighth piastre (5 para) pieces were to be of nickel. Silver coins were 2, 5, 10, and 20 piastres; and gold coins 25, 50, 100, 250, and 500 piastres. Silver was legal tender up to 300 piastres, and nickel up to 50 piastres.

The only money in general circulation, apart from nickel coins for 10 and 20 paras and for 1 piastre and coins for 2½, 5, 10 and 25 piastres, is paper money issued during the war. This forced currency is very depreciated, the Turkish paper lira being worth about one-tenth of the gold coin of the same denomination. At the beginning of 1929 the Government stabilized the exchange at about 1,030 piastres to the £1.

Weights and measures are as follows:—

1 Oke	= 400 drams	. . .	= 2·8264 lbs.
1 Batman	= 6 Okes	. . .	= 16·958 lbs.
39·6263 Okes	. . .	. . .	= 1 cwt.
1 Cantar	= 44 Okes	. . .	= 124·3616 lbs.
1 Chcki	= 195 Okes	. . .	= 551·148 lbs.
1 Kileh	. . .	. . .	= 0·9120 bushel.
1 Muscal (Ess. of rose)	1½ drams	. . .	= 74·171 grains.
1 Arshin (cloth)	. . .	. . .	= 26·96 inches.
1 Endaze	. . .	. . .	= 25·555 inches.
1 Arshin (land)	. . .	. . .	= 29·830 inches.
1 Deunum	. . .	. . .	= 1098·765 sq. yards or 0·2270 acres.
1 Djerib (hectare)	. . .	. . .	= 2·47 acres.

As from January 1, 1933, the metric system of weights and measures will become general. On May 24, 1928, the Grand National Assembly passed a law making the employment of European numerals obligatory as from June 1, 1929.

On March 1, 1917, the Gregorian calendar was introduced into Turkey, to be used side by side with the Hegira calendar, while as from January 1, 1926, it was decided finally to adopt the Gregorian calendar alone, the Turkish civil year 1342 becoming 1926.

URUGUAY.

(REPÚBLICA ORIENTAL DEL URUGUAY.)

Constitution and Government.

THE Republic of Uruguay, formerly a part of the Spanish Viceroyalty of Rio de la Plata, and subsequently a province of Brazil, declared its independence August 25, 1825, which was recognised by the Treaty of Montevideo, signed August 27, 1828. The first Constitution was adopted July 18, 1830.

Uruguay is unique among South American Republics in its elaborate precautions to prevent the conversion of the presidency into a dictatorship. Borrowing the idea from the Venetian Council of Ten, the executive power is divided between the President of the Republic and a National Administrative Council, consisting of nine members (with nine alternates), elected for six years; six are of the majority party, and three of the largest minority; three retire every two years. The President is elected for four years, and may be re-elected after an interval of 8 years. Both the President and the Council are chosen by direct popular vote. The President appoints the Ministers of Foreign Affairs, of War and Marine, and of the Interior, and has supreme control of these departments. The other ministers—of Finance, Public Works, Industry and Education—are appointed by the Council, which is the controlling power of these departments. It proposes the annual budget and recommends to the President such fiscal measures as it deems expedient.

The new Constitution of the Republic, adopted in 1919, separated Church and State, and introduced universal male suffrage for all, over 18 years of age, who are able to read and write. In 1921 the Constitution was amended, granting votes to women. Voting is secret, and the principle of proportional representation operates. Voters participating in the National Election of 1931 numbered 317,294.

Parliament consists of two Houses, the Senate and the Chamber of Representatives, which meet in annual session, extending from March 15 to December 15. In the interval of the session, a permanent committee of two senators and five members of the Lower House divides with the President control of that part of the executive power which is vested in him, thus diluting still further his authority. The representatives are chosen for three years, in the proportion of 1 to every 12,000 qualified voters, who must be able to read and write, and over 18 years of age. The senators are chosen by an Electoral College, whose members are directly elected by the people; there is one senator for each department, chosen for six years, one-third retiring every two years. There are 124 representatives and 19 senators.

President of the Republic.—Señor Dr. Gabriel Terra (March 1, 1931, to February 28, 1935). Salary, 24,000 pesos per annum.

Religion and Education.

State and church are separated; and there is complete religious liberty. The religion professed by the majority of the inhabitants is Roman Catholic. The archbishopric of Montevideo has 2 suffragan bishops in Salto and Melo. The 1908 census showed 430,095 Catholics, 12,232 Protestants, 45,470 unspecified and 126,425 Liberals.

Primary education is obligatory; both primary and superior education are free. In 1930 there were 1,541 public and private schools with 180,016 enrolled pupils and 4,810 teachers; of these 1,380 schools with 4,042 teachers and 159,126 pupils were public. There were also 63 evening courses for adults with 7,065 pupils and 235 teachers. State expenditures on education in 1930 amounted to 6,015,793 pesos.

The University of the Republic at Montevideo, inaugurated in 1849, had 11,848 students in 1930. There are four normal schools for males and females, and a school of arts and trades supported by the State where 1,100 pupils receive instruction gratuitously. There are also many religious seminaries throughout the Republic with a considerable number of pupils, a school for the blind, two for the deaf and dumb, and a school of domestic science.

Justice.

The High Court of Justice consists of 5 judges elected by the two Chambers sitting as a National Assembly. The President is chosen annually by the members of the Court from amongst themselves. This court has original jurisdiction in constitutional, international, and admiralty cases, and will hear appeals in cases in which the decision has been modified or altered in other appeal courts, of which there are 3 each with 3 judges. In Montevideo there are also 3 courts for ordinary civil cases, 2 for commercial cases, 1 for Government (Juzgado de Hacienda), as well as criminal and correctional courts. Each departmental capital has a departmental court, and each of the 220 judicial sections into which the Republic is divided has a justice of peace court; further, each section is divided into districts, in which deputy judges (alcaldes) try cases involving small amounts.

In September, 1907, the death penalty was abolished, penal servitude for a period of 30 to 40 years being put in its place.

Finance.

The receipts and expenditure for recent fiscal years (ending June 30) are stated as follows (at par 4·7 gold pesos = £1; 1 gold peso = 1·03 dollars U.S.):—

—	Receipts	Expenditure	—	Receipts	Expenditure
	Gold pesos	Gold pesos		Gold pesos	Gold pesos
1926-27	54,883,856	51,706,064	1929-30	58,916,879	59,702,624
1927-28	55,301,547	58,556,386	1930-31	57,311,712	62,021,407

The public debt of Uruguay on December 31, 1931, stood at 238,765,350 pesos, of which 141,773,366 was external, and the remainder internal, including 5,102,000 pesos for the debt contracted jointly with Brazil for the construction of an international bridge over the Yaguaron River (completed in 1930). Service of the foreign debt, including interest and sinking fund, required 16,570,952 pesos in the fiscal year 1930. About 74½ per cent. of the customs revenue is pledged to the service of certain debts. British investments in Uruguay, 1930, were 41,337,870£., including 20,611,753£. in government bonds; American investments, 1930, were about 81,000,000 dollars, including 53,171,000 dollars in government and municipal bonds.

Defence.

The army of Uruguay consists of a small standing army, and the National Guard. Service in the standing army is voluntary, lasting from 2 to 5 years, with re-engagement up to the age of 44. It consists of 19 line battalions, 4 rifle companies, 9 cavalry regiments, 3 field artillery regiments of 3 batteries each, a fortress artillery company and machine gun company, 1 engineers' battalion, and 1 bearer company with a peace strength in 1927 of 818 officers and 7,314 men, and a nominal war strength of 50,000.

The National Guard is a militia, service in which is compulsory in the event of war. It is divided into three classes, or 'bans.' The first 'ban,' or 'mobile' national guard contains all the young men fit for military duty between the ages of 17 and 30, who would take the field with the standing army. The second ban, consisting of men fit for service between 30 and 45, is the 'departmental,' or provincial, national guard. Its units do not move out of their own departments, but the men can be drafted to make good the losses of the mobile units in time of war. The third ban, containing all the men between 19 and 45, is the 'territorial' force, and is only liable to garrison duty in its own districts. The total strength of the National Guard (all three bans) is, nominally, about 100,000 men and 120 guns.

There is also a police force, with an establishment of 5,000, and a force of mounted police ('Guardia Republicana') of 400. The Fire Brigade, which also undertakes police duties, numbers 360.

The infantry of the active army is armed with the Mauser rifle, the field batteries have either Schneider or Krupp 7.5 cm. guns. The National Guard is mainly armed with the Remington rifle and old de Bange guns.

The Military Aviation School possessed, at the end of 1930, some 47 machines. The School has its own workshops and staff of mechanics, and an establishment of 8 instructors and 320 officers and men. A naval aeronautical service is also in process of being organized; 3 flying boats were bought in Italy in 1930.

The fleet consists of the torpedo gunboat Uruguay, 1,400 tons, speed 23 knots, launched at Kiel in 1910, and a few smaller craft.

Production and Industry.

Uruguay is primarily a pastoral country, 60 per cent. (27,573,919 acres) of the total area being devoted to the stock-raising industry, 20 per cent. (10,002,126 acres) to mixed farms and ranches, and only 7 per cent. (3,120,000 acres) to agriculture. The remaining 13 per cent. of the country's area is unproductive. Animals and animal products constitute 95 per cent. of the country's exports. Four leading frigorificos have a daily capacity of 4,000 cattle and 7,000 sheep carcasses. Total 'kill' in 1930, 1,285,246 cattle and 2,725,989 sheep. Total meat exports (1930), 174,304 tons. Wool shipments for recent seasons have been: 1928-29, 128,558 bales; 1929-30, 148,977 bales; 1930-31, 150,490 bales. Nutria skins are exported at the rate of 50,000 a year. A livestock census, 1930, showed 7,127,912 cattle, 20,558,124 sheep, 600,000 horses, and 307,924 pigs.

Agricultural products are raised chiefly in the Departments of Canelones, Colonia, San José, Minas, and Florida. The average farm is about 250 acres. The principal crops and their yield for two years were as follows:— 1929–30: wheat, 358,079 tons; maize, 52,895 tons; linseed, 81,699 tons; oats, 56,280 tons. 1930–31: wheat, 217,648 tons; linseed, 143,885 tons; oats, 55,797 tons. Total value of cereals, 1929–30 was 25,647,321 pesos.

Wine is produced chiefly in the departments of Montevideo, Canelones, Salto, Colonia, and Paysandú. In 1930 there were 4,964 properties of 30,857 acres, producing 78,411,600 kilos. of grapes, and 10,903,522 gallons of wine. Annual fruit crop, exclusive of grapes, about 153,000 tons, principally peaches, oranges and pears. Tobacco (208,987 kilos in 1930) and olives are also cultivated.

In the northern departments several gold mines are worked, and silver, copper, lead, manganese, and lignite coal are found. The supply of electricity for light, power, and traction has been a State monopoly since 1912; as 20 per cent. of total imports, in value, consists of coal and other fuels, exploitation of hydro-electric resources is considered important.

Commerce.

The foreign trade (imports in 'official values' and exports in 'real values') was as follows (at par 1 gold peso = 1·03 dollars, U.S.; 4·7 gold pesos = £1):—

—	1927	1928	1929	1930	1931
	Gold pesos	Gold pesos	Gold pesos	Gold pesos	Gold pesos
Imports <sup>1</sup> . . . . .	81,829,873	93,954,951	93,284,012	89,565,964	82,059,042
Exports . . . . .	96,418,695	100,802,800	92,952,246	100,864,202	76,559,858

<sup>1</sup> Comparison of import figures for different years is difficult, because the system of calculating "official values" of imports has been several times modified since 1923. Furthermore, as "official values" are stated to be, in many cases, below real values, the balance of trade is not as favourable as the figures suggest.

The principal exports in 1930 were as follows:—Live animals, 278,150; meat and extracts, 186,272,056 kilos; wool, 75,952,023 kilos; sheepskins, 7,135,334 kilos; hides, 27,792,045 kilos; flax, 79,149 metric tons; wheat, 42,422 tons. The cattle industry furnished, in value, 91·36 per cent. of total exports.

The imports (official values) and exports (real values) for 1929 and 1930 were distributed as follows in gold pesos):—

Countries	Imports from		Exports to
	1929	1930 <sup>1</sup>	1929	1930 <sup>1</sup>

United States . . . . .	28,182,156	22,412,234	11,061,094	7,751,007

<sup>1</sup> Preliminary.

In 1930 the principal articles imported into the United Kingdom from Uruguay (according to Board of Trade Returns) were: chilled beef,

Shipping and Communications.

In 1930, 13,574 vessels of 16,095,136 tons entered the ports of Uruguay.

The National roads of Uruguay have a total length of 2,760 miles, and there are about 5,903 miles of departmental roads, of which about 323 miles are macadamised. River transport is also very extensive.

The four principal railway systems are the Central (Combined System, 980 miles), the Midland (320 miles), North Western (113 miles), Northern (73 miles), all British owned. The East Coast Railway (78 miles) and 3 minor lines are controlled by the State. On June 30, 1929, the railway system of Uruguay open for traffic had a total length of 1,729 miles of standard gauge, of which 205 miles were State lines.

The telegraph lines in operation have a total length of 7,508 miles; in 1930, 249 offices through which 1,906,290 telegrams passed. Two telephone companies of Montevideo had 36,570 miles of wire, and in the Republic, 26 companies in 1930 had 48,375 miles of wire. Number of subscribers, 28,341 on December 31, 1930. Wireless telephone communications with Spain and Argentine were established in 1929, followed by connections with United States, France and Great Britain in 1930. Four cable companies connect Montevideo with the United States and Europe.

In 1929 there were 995 post offices. The movement of mail in 1930 (internal) comprised 125,620,423 letters, packets, &c., and external, 10,433,278. Air mail and passenger service connects Montevideo with Buenos Aires, Venezuela and the United States.

Banking and Credit.

The Bank of the Republic, whose president and directors are appointed by the Government, had a paid-up capital on June 30, 1931, of 27,124,274 gold pesos. Its gross profits for year ending December 31, 1930, were 7,095,406 pesos; net profits, 1,303,525 pesos, of which half goes to the State. This bank has the exclusive right to issue notes, but the privilege is unprofitable owing to the heavy gold reserves required. On October 31, 1931, notes to the value of 76,124,336 pesos, including 65,083,600 of large denominations (convertible into gold whenever the gold standard is resumed) and 11,040,736 pesos (convertible to silver) were in circulation, and its stock of gold amounted to 50,007,084 pesos. This was well in excess of the statutory cover for the note issue, which was 37,000,000 pesos.

In 1912 the Government created a National Insurance Bank (Banco de Seguros del Estado) with a monopoly of new insurance business of all kinds. No new insurance companies may now be established. In 1930 the premiums collected amounted to 6,776,585 pesos. This bank's capital and reserves on June 30, 1931, amounted to 18,605,969 pesos. The Post Office Savings Bank reported December 31, 1930, deposits of 7,949,192 gold pesos.

Of the 21 banks in Uruguay two are British: Bank of London and South America, and Royal Bank of Canada. All the banks reported June 30, 1931, paid-up capital and reserves of 90,888,149 pesos; deposits of 189,147,499 pesos and loans of 245,721,530 pesos.

Money, Weights, and Measures.

Save for a small issue of gold coins, weighing 8 grammes, .485 fine, issued in 1930 in commemoration of the centenary of the Uruguayan constitution, there is no Uruguayan gold coin in circulation, but the monetary standard is gold, the theoretical gold coin being the peso oro, weighing 1.697 grammes, .917 fine. It is equal to 100 centesimos. The actual circulating medium consists of paper notes issued by the Bank of the Republic in denominations of 500, 100, 50, 10, 5, and 1 pesos. Silver coins of 50 and 20 centesimos; and nickel coins of 5, 2, and 1 centesimos are also in circulation.

At par, 1 gold peso = 1.03 dollars U.S. = 51*d.* sterling; £1 = 4.7 gold pesos. The exchange value of the peso in London in 1931 ranged between 38½*d.* and 19*d.*; in New York, between 75.75 cents and 34.75 cents.

The metric system of weights and measures was adopted in 1862.

VENEZUELA.

(ESTADOS UNIDOS DE VENEZUELA.)

Constitution and Government.

THE Republic of Venezuela was formed in 1830 after amicable secession from the other members of the Republic of Colombia. The vigorous efforts of General Juan Vicente Gómez have given Venezuela considerable freedom from factional strife. He was President from 1909 to 1915 and again from 1922 to 1929, when he retired, but, as Commander-in-Chief of the Army, retained a firm control. A military uprising in April, 1931, led General Gómez to resume the reins; Congress demanded the resignation of President Pérez on June 14, 1931, and unanimously elected General Gómez President and Commander-in-Chief of the Army. The Constitution in force is that of May 29, 1929, modified July 7, 1931.

Congress consists of two chambers, the Senate of 40 members, and the Chamber of Deputies of 77 members. Senators, who are elected for 3 years, 2 for each State, must be Venezuelans by birth and over 30 years of age. Deputies must be native Venezuelans over 21 years of age. They are elected for three years; there is one for every 35,000 inhabitants, and one more for an excess of 15,000. A State with fewer than 35,000 of population has one deputy. The Territories, on reaching the population fixed by law, also elect deputies.

The President is elected by Congress for 7 years, must be a Venezuelan by birth and over 30 years of age. He exercises executive power in conjunction with the Cabinet Ministers through whom he acts.

President of the Republic.—General Juan Vicente Gómez, elected June 19, 1931.

The seat of Government is at the City of Caracas, but, when any unforeseen circumstance requires, the Executive Power may fix its residence at any other point of the Federal District.

The States are autonomous and politically equal. Each has a Legislative Assembly, whose members are chosen in accordance with their respective Constitutions, and a President. The States are divided into districts and municipalities. Each district has a municipal council, and each municipio a communal junta. The Federal District and the Territories are administered by the President of the Republic through Governors.

Area and Population.

Venezuela has an area of 393,874 square miles, according to English geographers, though local estimates put it at 393,976 square miles. It has more than 1,000 rivers, with total navigable length of more than 6,000 miles. According to the census of January, 1926, the population was 3,026,878, not including 10,520 Venezuelans known to be residing abroad. Estimated population on December 31, 1930, was 3,216,000. The language of the country is Spanish.

The country is now divided into a Federal District, 20 States and two Territories, as follows:—

Religion and Education.

The Roman Catholic is the State religion, but there is toleration of all others. There are two archbishops, one at Caracas, who is Primate of Venezuela and one at Merida. There are seven suffragan bishops.

Elementary instruction is free, and from the age of 7 to the completion of the primary grade, compulsory. In 1928 Venezuela had 1,860 public primary schools with 2,369 teachers and, including a few private schools, with a total enrolment of 111,939 pupils; there are 18 public secondary schools with 150 teachers and 1,107 pupils. Superior instruction is divided into schools, viz. : Philosophy and Letters; Physical, Mathematical, and Natural Sciences; Medical Science; Political Science; and Ecclesiastical Science. These schools can be established separately or can unite to form Universities. There are at present in activity, the University of Los Andes at Merida, eight schools of Political Science and of Ecclesiastical Science, and in Caracas the Central University with 500 students in 1927-28, besides private schools of Political Science. The Government supports also various Institutes for special instruction.

Justice.

The supreme tribunal is the 'Federal and Cassation Court,' whose 7 members are elected by Congress for 7 years, one for each of seven groups of States into which the Republic is divided for this purpose. They select their own President, Vice-President, and Chancellor. The Federal Procurator-General is appointed for 3 years. There are lower Federal courts.

The States have each a Supreme Court with 3 members called respectively President, Relator, and Chancellor. Each State has also a superior court, composed of first instance, district courts, and municipal courts. The States' judicial officers hold their posts for 3 years. In the Territories there are civil and criminal judges of first instance, and also judges in the municipalities.

Finance.

On June 30, 1930, as a token of homage to Simon Bolívar, the Liberator, the external debt of 23,757,634 bolivars was completely paid off in gold. The internal debt stood on December 31, 1930, at 26,487,741 bolivars, and the Treasury surplus at 44,910,092 bolivars.

Under the Constitution 12½ per cent. of the Federal Revenue is assigned to the States and Territories from the appropriation of the Ministry of the Interior ; 1929-30, 24,521,515 bolivars. British investments (1930) totalled 25,651,788*l.*, of which miscellaneous investments (principally petroleum) amounted to 21,210,459*l.* American investments (1930) are estimated at 247,238,000 dollars, of which 97 per cent. (228,000,000 dollars) was in petroleum.

Defence.

In 1920 a law was promulgated according to which all Venezuelans have to serve two years with the active forces of the army, and to remain in the reserve until the age of 45. The active army consists of infantry, 20 battalions, each of 400 men ; artillery, 8 batteries, each of 200 men ; and 1 naval battalion. The naval force contains one battalion distributed among the vessels of the navy, which consists of 3 gunboats and a training ship acquired in 1912.

Production and Industry.

The surface of Venezuela is divided into 3 distinct zones—the agricultural, the pastoral, and the forest zone. In the first are grown coffee, cocoa, sugar-cane, maize, cotton, beans, &c.; the second affords runs for cattle; and in the third, which covers nearly half the country, tropical products, such as caoutchouc, balatá (a gum resembling rubber), tonka beans, copaiba, vanilla, growing wild, are worked by the inhabitants. Forest resources have been barely tapped: 600 species of wood have been identified. The coffee plantations number about 30,000, covering 543,400 acres with 135,000,000 bushes. Output, 1929-30, 650,000 bags; 1930-31, 1,000,000 bags. Exports of coffee, chiefly to Europe, 1929, were 43,767 metric tons; of cocoa, 17,903 metric tons. There are about 5,000 cocoa plantations and 600 sugar plantations. The annual production of sugar may be estimated at 60,000 tons (of which 6,000 tons are exported), and of cotton at 7,500,000 kilos, all locally consumed. Silkworm cultivation has begun.

One-fifth of the population is engaged in agriculture. The live-stock in Venezuela is estimated as follows:—2,077,684 oxen, 113,439 sheep, 2,154,716 goats, 167,708 horses, 54,565 mules, 200,439 asses, 512,086 pigs. Shipments of hides amount to about 3,000 metric tons.

Venezuela is rich in metals and other minerals and is to-day the second petroleum producing country in the world; the production in 1930 amounted to 136,890,784 barrels (1931, 118,770,000 barrels). Exports in 1929 were 127,506,932 barrels. The only difficulty lies in transport; oil tankers able to cross the sand bar into Lake Maracaibo have to be specially built. Asphalt from Lake Bermudez is exported to the United States. There are important gold mines in the region to the south-east of Ciudad Bolívar. Output, 1930, amounted to 1,826,731 grams. Copper ore is also produced (output, 1930, 3,294 metric tons). An American company is exploiting the magnesite deposits on Margarita Island. Coal is worked at Coro, in Falcon State, and at Naricual. Salt mines in various States are now worked by the Government. Round the island of Margarita and neighbouring islets off the north coast of Venezuela, pearl fishing is carried on by the government. Margarita pearls are distinguished by their delicate rose tints.

Venezuela has few industries, most manufactured materials required being imported. There are cotton mills at Valencia, Caracas, Maracay, and Cumana, producing textiles which compete with imported Manchester goods in the cheaper qualities. There is also a cement and a glass factory at Caracas. Electric power is available in most of the larger towns.

Commerce.

The value of the imports into and exports from Venezuela for 4 years was (1 bolivar = 19 cents, U.S.; 25·25 bolivars = £1):—

—	1926	1927	1928	1929
	Bolivars	Bolivars	Bolivars	Bolivars
Imports . . . .	418,683,683	368,421,052	415,612,000	457,424,982
Exports . . . .	396,652,631	443,021,052	609,554,000	735,214,163

Petroleum (crude) furnished 74 per cent. of total exports in 1929; coffee, 17 per cent.

Total trade between Venezuela and the United Kingdom (according to the Board of Trade returns) for 5 years:—

Shipping and Communications.

Foreign vessels are not permitted to engage in the coasting trade, except by special concessions or by contract with the Government. La Guaira is the chief port, but facilities for ocean-going vessels are inadequate.

There are good motor roads from Caracas to La Guaira and Macuto. The most impressive road is the trans-Andine road from Caracas to Valencia, Puerto Cabello, San Cristobal (683 miles) and thence to the frontier at San Antonio, a distance of 800 miles and climbing to 14,000 feet. Another runs from Caracas eastward to Guatire and Ciudad Bolivar; from Maracay two new roads have been opened to Ocumare de la Costa, and to Villa de Cura and the Llanos of Apure; in remoter parts, away from the rivers, traffic is carried on by means of pack animals and small mule-carts. A new road has also been constructed in the western part of the country from Uraca, the present terminus of the Tachira Railroad, southward of the mountains of San Cristobal. Two great new roads are under construction, the Gran Carretera Oriental (626 miles), and the Gran Carretera Occidental (540 miles). Altogether there are about 4,064 miles of road fit for motor traffic. Motor vehicles, 1929, totalled 15,000, of which 98 per cent. were of American manufacture.

In Venezuela there are 12 lines of railway (7 national and 5 foreign—the latter, by far the most important, including 4 British and 1 German) with a total length of (January 1st, 1929) 644 miles. The Great Railway of Venezuela, 113 miles in extent, is one of the longest lines in the Republic, running between Caracas and Valencia. The Bolivar Railway, 143 miles, the oldest line in operation in the country, runs from the port of Tucucas to Barquisimeto. In Caracas electric tramways are worked by a British Company.

There are about 11,160 miles of navigable water in Venezuela. The Compañia Venezolana de Navegacion has a virtual monopoly of the navigation of the river and its tributaries and the Lake of Maracaibo.

The telegraph system, though still inadequate, has a network of 8,000 miles with 239 telegraph offices. The principal towns have telephone systems, but not all are interconnected. There were 359 post-offices in 1929; mail handled—internal: 26,989,678 letters, 2,132,891 post-cards, 14,669,418 printed packets; sent abroad, 7,267,237 letters, 1,337,712 post-cards. Weekly air mail services, domestic and international, were established in 1930.

There are wireless stations at Aragua, Caracas, Maracay, Maiquetia, San Cristobal, Porlamar, La Guaira, and Barquisimeto; the one at Maracay reaches New York and Berlin.

Banking and Currency.

The official monetary unit is the Bolivar (equivalent to 0.290323 grammes fine gold). It is divided into 100 céntimos. The bolivar equals at par 9½d. or 19.3 cents (U.S.) at par. £1 = 25.25 bolivars. The following are the coins in current circulation: Gold, 100 (morocotas) and 20 bolivars; silver, 5, 2·50, 2, 1, 0·50 (real) bolivars, and 0·25 (medio) bolivars; nickel, 0·125 (locha), 0·05 (centavo) bolivars.

The bank notes in circulation are as follows (the figures in brackets showing their values at par): 1,000 bolivars (£39 11s. 8d.); 800 bolivars (£31 13s. 4d.); 500 bolivars (£19 15s. 10d.); 400 bolivars (£15 16s. 8d.); 100 bolivars (£3 19s. 2d.); 50 bolivars (£1 19s. 7d.); 20 bolivars (15s. 10d.); and 10 bolivars (7s. 11d.). The circulation of foreign banknotes is forbidden.

The Bank of Venezuela (paid-up capital 18,000,000 bolivars) had on June 30, 1929, surplus and undivided profits of 12,048,657 bolivars; it is the sole depository of government funds. Power to control the circulation of the currency was granted in 1930. The Bank of Caracas has a paid-up capital of 4,500,000 bolivars and (June 30, 1929) surplus and undivided profits of 2,919,549 bolivars. There are four other national banks, including the Bank of Maracaibo with a capital of 1,250,000 bolivars, and the Commercial Bank of Maracaibo with a capital of 400,000 bolivars, as well as local branches of 4 British, American and Dutch banks. Issuance of notes is restricted to the six national banks. Two small mortgage banks under quasi-governmental auspices were started in 1929.

The new Venezuelan banking law (July 18, 1927) authorises the free establishment of banks in Venezuela, which, provided they are incorporated as native companies, shall have power to issue notes to bearer convertible on presentation. They must publish monthly balance sheets, keep 10 per cent. of their reserves in gold and 60 per cent. in Venezuelan securities.

A decree of May 18, 1912, provided that the official system of weights and measures shall be the metric system.

YUGOSLAVIA.

(KRALJEVINA YUGOSLAVIJA.)

Reigning King.

Alexander I, born December 17, 1888, son of King Peter I and Princess Zorka, daughter of the late Nicholas I, King of Montenegro; married on June 8, 1922, to Princess Marie, born January 9, 1899, daughter of King Ferdinand I of Rumania; Prince Regent from June 24, 1914 to August 16, 1921, when his father died.

Sons of the King.—Prince Peter, born September 6, 1923; Prince Tomislav, born January 19, 1928; Prince Andrey, born June 28, 1929.

Brother of the King.—Prince George, born September 8, 1887; on March 27, 1909, he renounced his right of succession to the Throne.

Sister of the King.—Princess Hélène, born November 4, 1884; married, September 9, 1911 to Prince Ivan Constantinovitch (died July 18, 1918), son of the Grand Duke Constantine Constantinovitch of Russia.

The founder of the dynasty was Kara-George (i.e. Black George) Petrovitch, who, in 1804, raised the first Serbian revolt against Turkish rule. He was murdered in 1817, leaving two sons—Alexis, born 1801, and Alexander, born 1806. In 1842 Alexander was chosen reigning Prince by the Slavs of Serbia.

or National Assembly, and the title was confirmed by the Porte, but the dignity was not hereditary. In 1858 Alexander had to abdicate and was banished, and in 1885 he died in exile. King Peter Karageorgevitch was the third of his house who have ruled in Serbia. He succeeded to the throne on the murder of King Alexander of the Obrenovitch dynasty; was elected King by the Skupshtina June 15, and assumed royal rights and duties June 25, 1903.

The independence of Serbia from Turkey was established by Article 34 of the Treaty of Berlin, signed July 13, 1878, and was proclaimed by Prince Milan Obrenovitch in Belgrade. On March 6, 1882, the same Prince proclaimed himself King.

After the Revolution in Austria-Hungary, Slovenia, Croatia, Dalmatia, and Bosnia declared their independence, and their union with Serbia, together with that of Montenegro, which had been voted on November 13, 1918, was proclaimed on December 1, 1918, when the official name of the State was announced as being the Triune kingdom of the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes.

By the Treaty of Rapallo the boundaries of the new State on the side of Italy were definitely determined, except as regards Fiume, an agreement on which was not reached till January 1924, when Fiume was awarded to Italy and Barosh to Yugoslavia. On December 5, 1923, Yugoslavia obtained from Greece a free zone in the harbour of Salonika, which by the end of 1928 covered an area of 351,000 square metres (193,000 square metres land and 158,000 square metres water). During 1928, the total traffic handled consisted of 640,000 tons of imports and 80,000 tons of exports.

By the law of October 3, 1929, the name of the State was changed to Kingdom of Yugoslavia. It consists of nine banovinas (counties) as follows (see map in THE STATESMAN'S YEAR-BOOK for 1931):—

Banovinas	Capital	Area in sq kilometres	Population (Census March 31, 1931)
Drava . . . . .	Lyublyana	15,936	1,120,549
Sava . . . . .	Zagreb	37,110	2,608,633

Morava . . . . .	Nish	26,218	1,452,967
Vardar . . . . .	Skoplye	38,879	1,656,348

Belgrade forms a special administrative unit, with an area of 242 sq. kilometres and a population (Census March 31, 1931) of 291,738.

The King's civil list amounts to 18,000,000 dinars, plus 6,000,000 French francs.

Constitution and Government.

Yugoslavia is a constitutional parliamentary and hereditary monarchy according to the provisions of the Constitution of September 3, 1931, when the non-parliamentary régime introduced as an emergency in January 1929 was ended. The legislative power is vested in the King, the Senate, and the Chamber of Deputies. The royal succession is in the direct male line in the order of primogeniture. In default of male heirs the King may nominate his successor. If he does not the Senate and the Chamber meet together to elect the king from among the members of the ruling house. If the successor be under eighteen years of age the King will make nominations in his testament or in a special document. Failing this provision both Houses meet together for the purpose of nominating a regent during the minority.

The Senate consists of members elected for six years, half of whom is re-elected every three years. The King may nominate as many senators as the number elected. The minimum age of electors is fixed at twenty-one years. The right of election to the Senate is reserved to the members of the Chamber of Deputies and to Provincial Chambers and burgomasters. The right of presentation for election is reserved to citizens of over 40 years of age. One senator is elected to every 300,000 inhabitants. Senators receive from the State an indemnity of 200 dinars per day while the session lasts.

The members of the Chamber of Deputies (Skupština) are elected directly by the electoral body which votes publicly and verbally. All the male inhabitants over 21 years of age have the right to vote. All the electors over 30 years of age have the right of presenting themselves for election. The number of deputies is fixed at present at 305, corresponding to one member to every 50,000 inhabitants. Deputies are elected for a period of four years. Each deputy receives an indemnity of 200 dinars per day and a free pass over the State rail and waterways.

The Senate and the Chamber meet annually on October 20 and are obliged to sit till the new budget is passed. The King has the power of convoking, proroguing and dissolving the Parliament.

The electoral law provides that all candidates for election to Parliament must attach themselves to a national list with representatives in each single electoral division. At the elections held on November 8, 1931, only one list was in the field, and consequently there are no party groups in the present parliament. All the elected deputies decided however to organise themselves into a political party on the basis of the electoral manifesto of the existing Government.

The Cabinet, appointed on April 4, 1932, is composed as follows:—

Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs.—Dr. Voyislav Marinkovitch.

Minister of the Interior.—Dr. Milan Srshkitch.

Minister of Transport and Communications.—Lazar Radivoyevitch.

Minister of Defence.—General Dragomir Stoyanovitch.

Minister of Finance.—Milorad Georgevitch.

Minister of Commerce and Industry.—Albert Kramer.

Religion.

All religions recognised by law enjoy the same rights. According to the census of 1921 there were of the total population :—Serbian-Orthodox, 5,561,203 (47 per cent.); Roman Catholics, 4,700,134 (39 per cent.); Greek Uniats, 41,597; Protestants, 235,169 (2 per cent.); Moslem, 1,563,210 (11 per cent.); Jews, 72,946.

The Serbian Orthodox, or Serb Pravoslav, Church is ruled by a Patriarch and a Holy Synod. On September 12, 1920, the Patriarchate of the Serbs, originally established by King Stephen VII Dushan on April 9, 1346, and suppressed by Sultan Mustafa III on September 13, 1766, was reconstituted. The Serbian Orthodox Church is organised in 6 Metropolitan Sees, Petch, Belgrade, and Karlovce (held by the Patriarch), and Skoplye, Oetinye and Dalmatia-Bosnia (Shibenik), and 20 other dioceses. There are 2,866 Parishes and 166 Monasteries. According to the provisions of the Constitution of the Serbian Church, which was published in November 1931, the Church is to be governed in the future on an autonomous basis and have the right to organise its own life according to its needs. The Government will transfer to the Church the sums in the Budget which they have allotted to ecclesiastical affairs.

The Latin Church in Yugoslavia is governed in its relations with the State by the Concordats of 1855 in the territories which used to form part of Austria-Hungary; of 1866 for Montenegro; of 1881 for Bosnia and the Herzegovina; and of 1914 for Serbia. It is divided into two complete Provinces, of Sarayevo with 4 Suffragan Sees, and Zagreb with 4 Suffragan Sees and jurisdiction over the Byzantine Uniat Bishop of Krizevce. In addition to these there are 2 Archbishoprics, Belgrade and Antivari, and 2 Bishoprics which depend immediately upon the Holy See in Rome, and 7 other Bishoprics under the metropolitan jurisdiction of Archbishops outside the kingdom. There is an Apostolic Administrator for those parts of the diocese of Zara which are in Yugoslavia. The Church is organised in 1,971 Parishes, and there are 349 Monasteries and Convents.

The Protestants are chiefly in the territories which used to form part of Hungary. Their principal communities are the Evangelical Church (Helvetican and Augsburg Confessions), and the Evangelical Brotherhood. The Mennonites, and the Baptist and Methodist Churches are less numerous represented.

The Moslems who were under two autonomous jurisdictions, that of the Grand Mufti of Belgrade, and that of the Reis-ul-Ulema of Sarayevo for Bosnia and the Herzegovina, are now joined together.

The Jews, who are divided between the Sephardim and the Ashkenazim, have a Grand Rabbi in Belgrade for Serbia, and Rabbinate for Croatia and Slavonia, for Bosnia and the Herzegovina, for Dalmatia, and for the Vojvodina.

Education.

Elementary education is compulsory, and, in all the primary schools under the Ministry of Education, it is free. It lasts 8 years and the schools are divided into elementary and continuation. Children intending to continue their education in secondary or technical schools are exempted from attendance in continuation schools. In the year 1928-29 there were 10,060 elementary schools with 21,308 teachers and 983,972 pupils. There were 1,827 teachers and 21,296 pupils in the continuation schools. There were 630 primary professional and industrial schools with 4,096 teachers and 63,369 pupils, and 40 secondary professional schools with 898 teachers and 6,894 pupils; 34 agricultural schools with 225 teachers and 1,439 pupils; 3 higher art schools and 14 theological colleges. ### Defence.

ARMY.

The organisation of the army of the Kingdom of Yugoslavia is based on the law of 1923. Compulsory service is in force for men between the ages of 21 and 45, and, as a last defence, men can be taken as fit to carry arms from the ages of 18 to 21 years and from 45 to 50 years. Service in the active army is for 10 years, of which 18 months are with the colours, the remainder of the service being spent on leave subject to recall for training. From 31 to 38, service is with the 2nd base of the reserve, from 38 to 45 with the 3rd base.

The kingdom is divided into five army commands subdivided into divisional and regimental districts.

In 1931-32, the peace strength of the active army was 6,741 officers and 184,448 men. The Gendarmerie consists of 19,848 officers and men. The military air force numbers 10,810 all ranks with 568 aeroplanes.

The strength on mobilisation is approximately 1,000,000. Military education is provided by the Military Academy at Belgrade for the training of cadets for officers of all arms and by the superior course of the Academy for the training of staff officers and commanders.

The infantry is armed with quick-firing rifles of French pattern and those taken as booty from Austria-Hungary; the artillery with French quick-firing guns (Schneider-Canet system) and those taken as booty from Austria-Hungary, which are of various models.

NAVY.

The Royal Yugoslav Navy is under the command of a Vice-Admiral, a special Naval Department being maintained at the War Office for technical and administrative purposes. The organisation comprises the seagoing squadron; the river flotilla; the air service. The seagoing squadron, composed of 12 torpedo-boats, 6 mine-layers, 4 submarines, an aircraft tender, and a number of smaller vessels, is used mainly for training purposes. A small ex-German Cruiser, Dalmaciya, has been refitted and re-armed to serve as flagship. The Dubrovnik, a 1,880 ton flotilla leader, is being built in Great Britain. The main base is at Kotor (Cattaro), where there are facilities for repairs and docking, and a naval engineering college. There are training establishments at Gruz (Gravosa) (for officers) and Shibenik (Sebenico) (for warrant and petty officers). The river flotilla includes 4 monitors, armed with 4·7 inch guns, besides patrol vessels, motor boats, mining launches, and other small craft. The air service consists of sea-plane detachments attached to the seagoing squadron and to the river flotilla. The total active service personnel of the navy comprises 487 officers and 5,500 men, with a further 700 in reserve.

Production and Industry.

Yugoslavia, with a total area of 24,848,829 hectares, has a cultivated area of 13,198,000 hectares (1930).

The area and production of the principal crops for 2 years were :—

Vines . . .	435,463	447,781	—	—

On January, 1, 1931, there were in Yugoslavia 1,161,235 horses, 15,843 mules; 106,944 asses; 3,812,172 head of cattle; 7,953,136 sheep; 2,923,862 pigs; and 1,731,430 goats.

The forest area of Yugoslavia is 18,745,340 acres (1930). The largest forest area is in Bosnia and the Herzegovina (6,665,000 acres). The forests consist largely of beech, oak, and fir, but are less profitable than, with proper management, they might be. The normal timber cut is about 530 million cubic feet per annum. Hemp is an important crop. The area under cultivation in 1929, was 79,697 acres (76,930 in 1928), and the yield 26,244 metric tons (18,060 metric tons in 1928).

Yugoslavia has considerable mineral resources, including coal (chiefly lignite), iron, copper ore, gold, lead, chrome, antimony and cement. The total output of coal was 3,906,143 metric tons in 1931; 5,635,000 metric tons in 1930; and 5,891,731 metric tons in 1929. The most important iron mines are at Vares and Lyubiya in Bosnia and there are also considerable siderite and limonite iron ores between Prizhedor and Sanski Most. In 1930 the output of iron ore was 430,660 metric tons; 133,111 metric tons in 1931. Copper ore is exploited chiefly at Bor (Serbia); output in 1930, 493,400 metric tons; in 1931, 456,909 metric tons. The principal lead mines are at Mezhitsa (Slovenia); production of lead ore in 1930, 176,300 metric tons; in 1931, 371,172 metric tons. Chrome mines are found in the southern part of Serbia and more especially in the neighbourhood of Skoplye (Uskub); output of chrome ore in 1930, 53,500 metric tons; in 1931, 57,172 metric tons. There are 2 antimony mines in western Serbia (Podrinje) which produced 1,302 metric tons in 1929, and 1,075 metric tons in 1928. Production of salt, 1931, 52,682 metric tons; 1930, 54,600 metric tons; 44,600 metric tons in 1929. Bauxite in 1929, 103,400 metric tons; in 1930, 93,700 metric tons; in 1931, 62,018 metric tons; manganese, 4,495 metric tons in 1929; pyrites, 61,660 metric tons.

Of the industries, flour milling is one of the most important, especially in Batchka; there are 50 large flour mills in the country; brewing and distilling are extensively carried on, as are also cotton spinning and weaving, tanning, boot-making, pottery, and iron-working. Carpet weaving is one of the oldest industries in Serbia. The product is manufactured principally at Pirot, in south-eastern Serbia, and the carpets are named after that place. The chief characteristics of these carpets are that they are made of pure wool, dyed with natural colours by local dyers, who pride themselves that the process of dyeing and colour mixing is a secret transmitted by father to son, and is known only to the inhabitants of Pirot. Meat-packing is also becoming important, and there is also an important cardboard and paper-making industry.

Yugoslavia in 1928 possessed 166 steamers of 324,606 (gross) tons, besides (1927) 14 motor ships of 366 (net) tons, 709 sailing vessels of 7,313 (net) tons and 5,449 fishing vessels of 10,219 (net) tons.

In 1931, 100,962 vessels of 17,330,000 net tons entered the ports of the kingdom, of these, 93,927 vessels of 14,101,000 tons were Yugoslav.

Yugoslavia has (1930) 6,276 miles of railway, of which 4,225 miles are of normal gauge, and 2,051 miles of narrow gauge. Of the whole length of railway 5,562 miles are under the State's administration.

The first Yugoslav air-line for passengers between Belgrade and Zagreb was opened in February, 1928. There is now a service between Belgrade and Skoplye. Regular international services connect Belgrade with Paris, Sofia, Bucharest, and Constantinople.

Of highways there are (1931) 24,695 miles. A five-year programme of road construction was formulated in 1931. It is intended to build a further 450 miles of roads at a cost of 600,000,000 dinars. Total length of waterways, principally the Danube, the Save, the Drave, the Tisa, the Kupa, the Tamish and 3 canals is 1,314 miles. On these waterways there were in 1929, 304 steamships and motorships engaged in river navigation, of which 66 per cent. are State owned, the remainder belonging to private companies. Passenger traffic amounted to 3,303,000 and freights to 2,289,400 tons.

There were (1929) 13,293 miles of telegraph line and 2,704 miles of telephone line.

In 1929 there were 4,004 post-offices, 1,475 telegraph offices, 1,088 central telephone stations, 4 central automatic telephone stations with a total number of telephone subscribers of 32,777. There were also 1,149 public telephone call-offices.

Banking and Credit.

The principal bank is the National Bank of Yugoslavia, in Belgrade, with the nominal capital of dinars 50,000,000 in coined gold, of which 28,229,100 dinars are paid up. To cover the issue of new bank notes the State has pledged with the Bank its domains estimated at 2,000,000,000 dinars. Notes in circulation on January 1, 1932, 5,172,270,970 dinars; note cover in gold and foreign exchange, 2,096,814,272 dinars; foreign credits, 86,458,012 dinars. The Export Bank, with agencies abroad, assists in the exportation of Yugoslav produce. The Državna Hipotekarna Banka or State Mortgage Bank, the only large State institution of the kind in Yugoslavia, makes advances to a large amount for agricultural operations. The Privileged Agrarian Bank was founded in 1929 with a capital of 700 million dinars for the benefit of farmers. Savings deposits at the banks totalled 13,880,000,000 dinars at the end of 1930, as compared with 11,790,000,000 dinars at the end of 1929 and 10,306,000,000 dinars at the end of 1928. Postal savings accounts numbered 127,198 with 209,613,000 dinars balance at the end of 1930, as against 59,362 with 106,625,000 dinars balance at the end of 1929.

Money, Weights and Measures.

Yugoslavia has the decimal system for its weights, and measures. The dinar, the unit of currency, contains 0.2903225 grammes of gold. On May 8, 1931, a stabilisation loan was concluded in Paris to the amount of 1,025,000,000 francs for the purposes of the legal stabilisation of the dinar. On May 12 a law for the stabilisation of the dinar was promulgated to take effect on June 28. The dinar was stabilised at a value corresponding to 26.5 milligrams of pure gold, i.e., 11 dinars equals one gold dinar, or 100 dinars equal 9.13 Swiss francs. The National Bank as the bank of issue is bound by law to maintain a cover of gold or foreign currencies of equivalent value, amounting to not less than 35 per cent. of the total amount of the Bank's outstanding obligations, or 25 per cent. of its obligations at sight. In circulation are bank-notes of 5, 10, 100, and 1000 dinars; 100 paras = 1 dinar; metallic coins of 0.50 dinar, 1 dinar, and 2 dinars. According to a royal decree published on November 30, 1931, there is to be an issue of new silver coins of 10 and 20 dinars with a 50 per cent. silver content and weighing 7 and 14 grammes respectively. The value of the issue is to be 450,000,000 dinars. In the course of 1932 all pre-war nickel coins—5, 10, and 20 paras are to be withdrawn.

The metric weights and measures have been in practical use since the commencement of 1883. The wagon of 10 metric tons is frequently used as a unit of measure for coal, roots and corn.

ENGLAND TO-DAY: A SURVEY OF HER • ECONOMIC SITUATION.

By F. CYRIL JAMES, Ph.D.

6s.

This book describes in simple form the present economic organisation of England. Surveying the situation in regard to finance, industry and trade, it becomes clear that these are closely related to one another and that the individual worker or employer is indirectly affected by economic aims or political policies influencing any one of these fields. An examination of England's position in regard to foreign trade and international finance demonstrates the extent to which her prosperity is dependent upon the economic well-being of other nations.

WHAT WOULD BE THE CHARACTER OF A NEW WAR?

16s.

Glasgow Herald: "The work is one which deserves the most earnest consideration, and it cannot be too strongly repeated that what is written here is not the figment of a romancer's imagination, but the scientific conclusions of the most sober and best-qualified experts."

THE FRENCH COLONIAL VENTURE.

By CONSTANT SOUTHWORTH, Ph.D. Many Illustrations and Statistical Tables.

12s. 6d.

This book analyses in concrete money terms the costs and profits to France from establishing and operating her colonial empire. The various factors concerned, such as trade and investment returns and expenditures by the French Government, are reviewed over a considerable period of years. A definite conclusion is reached as to whether colonisation as a whole has been economically profitable to France.
